Parents Visit Juniata

by Sue Zarenski

Parents Weekend 1985 has come and gone, as everyone who has not been hibernating or away lately well knows. Those of us whose parents did not come to visit were able to witness hundreds of moms and dads traveling across campus at the heels of their children. Perhaps, some of Juniata's "orphans" were able to latch onto a friend's parents and become adopted children for the weekend.

What a weekend it was! Parents of over half the student population came to visit, even from as far as St. Louis, Missouri. These parents created a charge in the air of Juniata. Their vast number added twice the customary noise and confusion at mealtimes and also provided quite a large crowd of spectators for the various home athletic events.

Parents Weekend was beneficial to both students and parents in many ways. Parents were able to either renew old ties or make new ones with their fellow Juniata parents. Many attended some of the numerous events held, which were "well organized and very enjoyable," according to Larry Sherwin, father of sophomore Renee Sherwin. When asked which event was the most enjoyable, Mr. Sherwin answered, "Aside from spending time with my daughter, I most enjoyed the All Campus Worship because it brought everyone all together."

After speaking with Mr. Sherwin and other Juniata parents, the general concensus is that Juniata's friendly atmosphere sets it apart from other colleges and Parents Weekend was a great success.

It's a Circus In the Gym

Next time you're in the vicinity of the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center, check out the circus at the East Entrance. The Juniatian has received reports of 10-15 crazed beings surrounding a harried ringmaster and demanding an odd, little card - usually rectangular and plastic coated.

This scenario occurs almost every evening after intramural events. The crazed beings, commonly known as students, must stand in line in order to retrieve their lamenated I.D. card from the harried ringmaster, commonly known as a student security assistant.

On the surface this new policy is merely an inconvenience. The security assistant must file every card not attached to a key ring, and those attached to a key ring must be laid out on the desk in order to be easily accessible. (As time-consuming as this task is, The Juniatian wonders what else the assistant does. Obviously, before this policy was instated, he/she was hired to do something.) Students are inconvenienced also. No one, especially an I.M. volleyball player who is high on victory, wants to wait in line after a game. It instantly dampens the fun.

If inconvenience is only a small problem, the ineffectiveness of the policy is a major one. When an I.M. team enters the Sports and Recreation Center, the players drop their cards on the desk and take off up the stairs. In the scurry who would know if every player submitted a card and if every card really belonged to the player who submitted it. What student assistant could possibly keep track?

The Juniatian believes simply showing your I.D. card should be enough. This would only take a minute upon entering the gym and would allow students to leave without a hassle. It would also eliminate students entering the gym with someone else's I.D. It seems the Athletic Department's goal would be met and everyone's inconvenience would be eliminated.

Dear Editor:

The Juniata campus community is certainly deserving of an explanation for the deletion of the one hour morning swim which was previously offered in the Binder Natatorium. Our pool usage records indicate an average of only five swimmers per day in the morning swim during the 1984-85 school year. We feel this minimal usage does not warrent continued staffing for the pool's early morning swim.

Sincerely,
Brad Small
Assistant Athletic Director

Many parents think the keg is the most dangerous threat to their child's education. They're wrong.

The greatest threat to a college student today is the video cassette recorder: The VCR.

It's bad enough that most of us have direct access to cable television; now we can be tempted by movie classics every day of the week. Study time can be movie time, any time.

Most of us try to study on Sunday to make up for all the other duties of the weekend that cut into our book work. Well, with taped movies available why not relax and rest another hour, or two?

Also, isn't it fun to see a movie 15 or 20 days in a row? It might be a record.

Of course, there are so many movies on tape now that we can watch movies constantly for an entire year and not be finished with them all. Then we can start the video concert tapes.

If you are a sports fan, pick up one of the hundreds of NFL Films productions or any of the numberless replays of the World Series, All Star Games and Olympics.

Enough garbage! Right now, because of a damn VCR, I'm stuck writing this thing at one in the morning. It's bad enough that "First Blood" and "Tootsie" were on network TV at nine,but then "The World According To Garp" had to be placed in the tape machine at 11:30. This is one long movie.

Oh no, "The Natural" is next!

What is your opinion of V-103 this year?

Sue Arron (junior) — "I like it. The radio stations in Britain are different. The stations here are informal and fun. The disc jockeys and music are good."

Michelle Stover (freshman) — "It's pretty good but I wish they would play more new wave and punk music. Usually I listen to 106, for its variety."

Brian Bowes (junior) — "It's not in stereo, so I don't listen to it."

Dave Trinkley (senior) — "Good change. I wish they'd stay on the air past midnight."

Diane Hontz (sophomore) — "I don't like it. They don't play enough Top 40. I usually listen to 106."

Rich Campbell (sophomore) — "It sounds as good as last year but better, because it has more of a rock format."

Patty Schofield (sophomore) — "Last year V-103 was a Top 40 station and a lot of times, I would make requests which were not honored due to the material in the songs. I feel a college station should be more liberal and play more radical stuff. V-103 has good potential with their DJs this year. They're new and seem open to new music. Hopefully, the station managers will cooperate."

Tamburitzans Begin Artist Series

by Carol Connell

The 1985-86 Artist Series began Sunday September 29th with the presentation of the Duquesne University Tamburitzans. Sponsored by the Center Board Fine Arts Committee. This ensemble featured the folk music and dance of Eastern Europe.

Performing in a dozen languages, the Tamburitzans opened the program displaying graceful and precision dancing. Further enhancing the characteristically modal music was the group's impressive technical skill in vocal and instrumental arrangements. Especially interesting was the presence of the dulcimer, button box and the tambura, lute-like instrument for which the ensemble is named.

Wearing over five hundred authentic costumes in the performance, the Tamburitzans also provided an accurate presentation of the culture they represent.

The Artist Series continues on Wednesday, October 23rd, with the presentation of The National Shakespeare Company.

Exchange Students at J.C.

Eric and Uwe

by Terri Smith

There are thirty exchange students at Juniata this year. Last week two Chemistry majors were featured. This week we turn our attention to two biology students, Eric Desbonnets and Uwe Redlin. Eric is from Lille-ISA college in France. His hometown is Halluin, which is located near Belguim. At Lille, Eric was a "Delegue" or Class President. He did not participate much in sports because "you have to join a private club" and "you can't practice all the time you would like to." At Juniata, Eric is in the International Club, the Computer Club, and is on an intramural tennis team. He also plays raquetball, volleyball, swims, and would like to join the ski team.

Eric finds that the major difference between Juniata and Lille is that Lille is more formal. "You don't see people coming to class with shorts."

After graduating, Eric wants to become an Agrcultural Engineer and work in the commercial aspects of an agricultural firm. In France, the men are required to perform one year of military service or join a private firm that works for the French government for sixteen months.

Eric recommends a visitor to Halliun travel to the French seaside, which takes an hour to get to "with French speed limits." This seaside the visitor would be seeing is the English Channel.

Uwe(pronounced oo'-vay) is from Marburg-UNI in Germany. His home is in Neustadt, meaning "New Town," which is about a half an hour's drive from Marburg. At Juniata, Uwe plays volleyball, is in the International Club, and likes to swim. In Marburg, they "don't have so many activities. Here you are asked if you want to take part in different clubs and sports." He said sports are not as important at Marburg.

Uwe recommends that a tourist visiting Neustadt take notice of the "many old framework houses and the Junker-Hansen-Turm,"which is the largest framework tower (in diameter) in the world.

The major difference Uwe finds between his school in Germany and Juniata is that Marburg is "more anonymous." He felt it was more factory-like. Juniata, however, is "more familiar" and it is "more than just learning." Also, in Marburg, the students are more interested in politics and demonstrations against the governments and the strikes.

Film Preview: Police Academy

by Natasha Lamberson

Anyone can become a police officer regardless of age, sex, weight, or height in the movie "Police Academy", to be shown this Friday in Oller Hall. "Police Academy" focuses on about a dozen characters all with very different personalities.

They all have one common goal - to graduate. Carry Mahoney (Steve Guttenburg) does want to graduate but he is at the Academy only as an alternative to serving a jail sentence. Karen Thompson (Kim Cattrall) decides that becoming a police woman is the best way to rebel against her parents and the rich, boring life they lead. The character of Larvel Jones entertains us throughout the film with his unusual vocal sounds. Other characters include: Andrew Rubio,who is out to seduce every woman he meets; Lieutenant Harrison, who takes great joy in making everyone miserable; and, finally, Commandant Lessard who is simply a clueless wonder throughout the movie.

International Club

by Avril Opinante

Though the Amish and Mennonites are rarely seen in the town of Belleville during the week, on Wednesdays, they are very visible with their horse and buggies and wearing their unusual garb. Many Amish and Mennonites live on the farmland surrounding Belleville. On Wednesdays, they go into the town to auction off cattle and vegetables. In addition to the auction, a big flea market is held in town. Together these events attract many people to Belleville.

On Wednesday, September 25, 30 students of the International Club left for Belleville at 10 a.m., returning at 4:30 p.m. Belleville is only about a half hour's drive from Huntingdon. Most of the students who went were foreign exchange students. The students were lucky to have good weather, since most of their time was spent outdoors.

The students saw the auction and flea market in town. They also went outside of the town to see an Amish greenhouse. This enabled them to see the outside of an Amish house and the style of the Amish architecture.

The foreign students were curious about the Amish and the Mennonites' way of life. Why did they meet at each others' houses for prayer and worship instead of at a church? Why did their education not extend past the eighth grade? What was their reason for having such a closed society, seldom going out of their own area or having outsiders come in? The trip was a unique cultural experience for the foreign students and all the students who went seemed to enjoy the trip.

The Juniatian Acquires New Computer System

by Mary McDougall

Newspaper production reached the "state of art" at The Juniatian with the purchase of a new computer system at the college newspaper.

Last week's issue was the first produced on the new Tandy Model 100 computer. The system consists of two portable computers and a printer. It also includes a telecommunications hookup to transfer copy through the phone lines to be typeset by The Collegian, Penn State's daily newpaper. Previously, typed copy had to be hand delivered to The Collegian weekly. With the savings in typesetting fees the system should pay for itself within a year.

"Besides the monetary savings, the new system will allow reporters the experience of working on state of the art equipment," said Editor-in-Chief Cinny Cooper.

Student Government

by Mary McDougall

At Tuesday's meeting, Student Government identified its three most important goals for this year as the representation of student interests in the pending conversion to semesters, the development of new, stricter accounting controls for campus organizations and the establishment of a new academic "J-Board."

According to president Jack Thomas, Student Government plans to cooperate with Center Board on a Special Events Evaluation Committee. The committee will examine the feasibility of such special events as Madrigal Dinner and Raft Regatta within the confines of a semester schedule. In addition, the Student Concerns committee will address issues related to a smooth conversion to semesters which will become effective in the fall of 1986.

The accounting controls suggested by the Budget and Management committee will restrict when clubs can withdraw money and may make use of signature cards for those making withdrawls, according to committee chairperson Tom Trent.

The proposed academic J-Board will address the problem of cheating at Juniata.

"A student government survey last year revealed that 50 per cent of Juniata students have wittnessed cheating at Juniata," said Thomas. "The present policy as stated in the Pathfinder is very ambiguous. We feel that the current policy needs more teeth to it with more specific, stated consequences for those found guilty of cheating. The J-Board, when formed, will act as an advisory board to the dean on this matter."

Other committees such as Residential Life, College Governance and Student Leadership presented their goals for 1985-86 at the meeting. In addition, advisor Arnold Tilden addressed hall senators and committee members.

Fall Intramural Update

I.M. Volleyball League "A" & "B" Action Begins

by Andy Hiscock

The Intramural Co-Rec Volleyball leagues have begun their extensive fall seasons. There are two leagues (A & B), with the "A" League supposedly being more competitive than the "B" league with spiking and overhand serving allowed, but the play that I saw in the "B" league isn't just for fun either.

The "A" league began play on Thursday, September 26th with four matches being held. "Thankews" defeated "Longshots" in straight games (15-7), (15-11). Lisa Smoker and Mike Wojcik teamed up at the net for the winning "Thankews". "The Mad Spikers" beat "The Jaggers" in straight games (15-3) and (15-10). Larry Hillman had a solid server and Jessie Fox played well at the net for the victors.

Also on Thursday, "371-09M" fought off "Darrylects" in two games (15-12) and (15-9). Laura Clark and Melissa Roderick set up the front line well during the match. "The Rag-Tags" defeated "Wipeouts" (15-10) and (15-8). Wes harpold and Sonny Varner teamed up for a couple of good spikes for "The Rag-Tags".

On Saturday, September 29th "The Rag-Tags" won their second match of the season by defeating "371-09M" (15-9), (15-7). Sue Grubb played a solid game for the "Tags".

In Division "B" action last Saturday, "The Wonder Buns" fought off "Phase Nine" (15-1), (10-15), (15-5) to pick up their first victory of the young season. Ginny Krall and Kevin Krause played solidly on defense for the victors. "The Missionaries" defeated "The Misfits" (15-1) and (15-10) with the help of good net play by Jim Younkin and Paul Barton. "Tomer's Awesome Team" proved just that as they handily defeated "Fresh" by forfeit. "Comedy of Errors" beat "Havin Fun" in a knock down drag out match (13-15),(15-8), and (12-10). Heather Shift and Brian Scheffer played a solid defensive game for the winners. "Mix-n-Match" defeated "Merlin's Minstrels" (15-1) and (15-13). John Petrovic had a good serving stretch and Amy Lane displayed good bumping technique to help "Mix" to the victory. Also winers were "Druts" as the defeated "The Bosses" (15-11) and (15-5). Darin Everhart and Mary Jo Rizzo provided some good offensive plays for "The Druts".

Lady Stickers 1-0-1 For Parents Weekend Action

By Kim Chatfield

The Women's varsity Field Hockey team ended their losing streak this past weekend with a hard fought 1-1 tie vs. John Hopkins on Saturday and a victory over St. Bonaventure 3-2 on Sunday.

Senior Gill Loomis playing left inner put in the team's only goal in the John Hopkins game. Both teams tried valiantly to break the tie with two ten-minute overtime but, without any luck. Goalkeeper Iggie Gillette did a fine job with 11 saves .o John Hopkins 17 penalty corners.

Sunday's game against St. Bonaventure proved to be rewarding for the Indian stickers as it was their first victory of the season. At the end of the first half, the Indians found themselves trailing St. Bonaventure 1-0. The Indians came out flying in the second half with three successive goals.

Freshman right link Amy Oiler scored the Indians first two goals and Jill Loomis put in a third to propell the Indians to a 3-2 victory.

The field hockey record now stands at 1-4-1. The ladies are gearing up for another tough game vs. Susquehanna this Saturday, October 5th (1:00p.m.).

I.M. Soccer Ladies Display Fast Paced Action

by Andy Hiscock

The Women's Intramural Soccer league has kicked off their fall season. The action is a little slower now that the field area is larger in the Intramural Gym than in Memorial Gym, but the larger area allows for a more controlled offensive and defensive strategy to accomodate the area.

Soccer action was scheduled to begin last Wednesday, but only "Kickback" decided that they were ready to start the season as they defeated "Panique" by forfeit. "Panique" should be happy that they didn't show for their first game, because in their second game of the seasog they were trumped by "Pink Palace" (9-1). Don't take it to hard ladies, I think that "Pink Palace" will keep "Kickback" busy this season also. Carolyn Fonder had a solid game for "Pink Palace".

I feel that intramural indoor soccer is next to Gym Hockey is the most exciting intramural sport here at JC and urge people to attend the games for some good action.

I.M. Softball "Weather Holds Out"

by Andy Hiscock

The fall Intramural Men's softball program is in full swing. This fall the league consists of six teams.

At the time of printing, the league has had two full days of action.

On Wednesday, September 25th, "Softballs" defeated "Mincues". "Softballs" tacked on 8 runs in top of the 7th while the "Mincues" picked up only 3 in the bottom of the inning to fall short. Also on Wednesday, "B.B.A." squeezed by "The Biffs" (17-15) in a time shortened game. "B.B.A." spread out their scoring with 4 runs in the first, 4 runs in the 2nd, 5 runs in the 3rd, 3 runs in the 5th and a few more scattered around. Everyone on the team contributed to the barrage. "Biffs" never gave up, and added 5 runs of their own in the bottom of the last inning but fell 2 runs short.

On Thursday, September 26th, "Softballs" picked up their second victory of the young season when they defeated "B.B.A." (21-12). "The Biffs" got two runs in the bottom of the seventh, but "Softballs" pulled together their defense to win. Also on Thursday, "Fresh and Honest" defeated "Biffs" (17-8). "Fresh" exploded for eight runs in the first inning and never looked back. "Return of the Trout" didn't throw any back in their (23-8) victory over "Mincues". The entire team added to the catch which included 5 runs in the 2nd, 2 runs in the 3rd, a whopping 10 runs in the 5th and 6 more runs in the 6th.

Lets hope that the good weather (Indian Summer) holds out!

Indians Upset Widener 17-15

by Joe Scialabba

Juniata had the kick of a thoroughbred and the strength of a mule last Saturday in a 17-15 upset win over nationally—ranked Widener at College Field in a key Middle Atlantic Conference game.

"It was my top win as a head coach," said Juniata's Rob Ash. "So few people have beaten them." Widener lost for only the seventeenth time since 1973.

The tribe got most of its kick from senior Mike Schaffner, who booted a school—record three field goals. Schaffner connected on 36, 35, and 33—yard efforts to give Juniata a9—8 halftime lead. The kicks also made Schaffner the Indian record—holder with 20 career field goals.

The Juniata offense gained only 32 yards after a 200—yard first half, but the ability to take advantage of a major Widener miscue was enough. Quarterback Mike Culver sneaked one yard on fourth down to score late in the third quarter after a high snap on a Widener punt attempt put the Tribe on the Pioneer four. Holder Rich Howey tossed to Rick Bouch for a crucial two—point conversion. It was 17—8, and up to the JC defense with 16:24 to go in the game.

"We wanted to hold onto the ball, and try to keep the field position in our favor," said Ash. "We had a good kicking game and no turnovers. The rest was up to the defense; they played a super game."

Widener's high powered offense controlled the final period, but the Tribe survived with gutsy play. The Pioneers got within two points with 9:48 left when quarterback Glenn Bennett connected from 11 yards out with Kevin Quinn for their second touchdown play of the game. The two hit from seven yards in the first half before a bobbled PAT—kick snap turned into a two—point conversion, and a 8-3 Widener lead.

Cornerback Mark Dorner intercepted a Bennett pass with 5:46 left in the game but the sixth Juniata punt of the afternoon set the Pioneers on their own 26. Three first downs later, Widener was on the Indian 22. After keeping for two yards on first down, Bennett was sacked for a ten—yard loss by Tom Kalinyak, knocking the visitors out of field goal range. Two incomplete passes ended the threat.

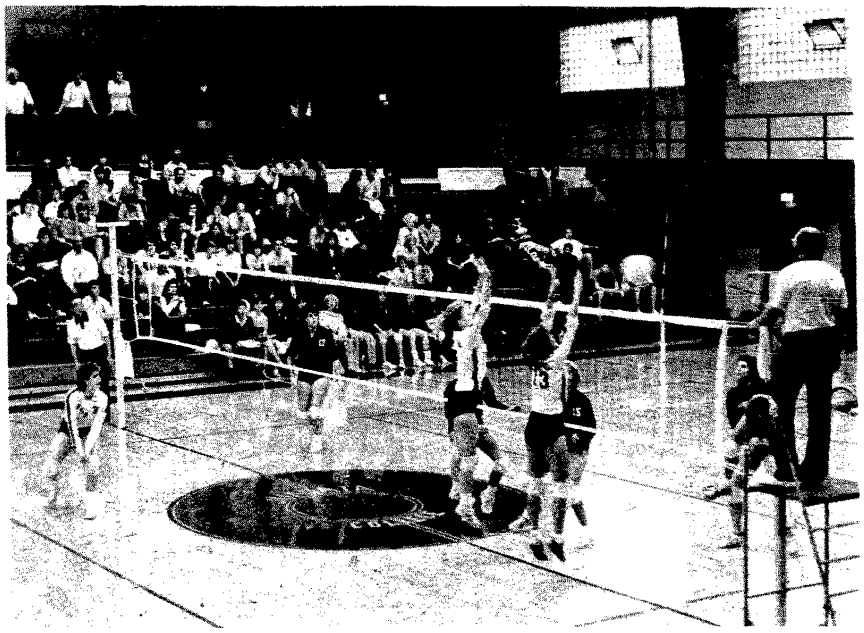
Paul Kutches punted one last time for Juniata giving Widener one play from 57 yards away with :05 left! Free safety Rich Howey started the celebration with a game ending—interception at the JC fifteen.

"Rich played a super game," said Ash. "He held for the field goals, threw for two points and played a real heads up game. He also came up with a great hit at a great time." Howey helped take the wind out of the fired—up Pioneers on the play of the second half when he pounded SB Johne who was running his pattern across the middle. The ball and the receiver dropped after the crushing collision.

While the Juniata defense had great efforts all around, so did the offense. Culver scrambled for first downs, and got key first down grabs from his receivers throughout the game. The Indians had the ball for almost 35 minutes.

Freshman back Greg Townsend rushed 13 times for 106 yards, before leaving the game with a rib injury in the second quarter. His 47—yard run on his second carry of the game led to Juniata's 3—0 lead after an 8—play, 55—yard drive. "We got an early lead, came from behind and then held on to win a close game against a good team," praised Ash. "We won both halves of the game. Last year (at Widener) we led at halftime and then let it get away. This time we played tough and beat them. It was a classic game- a great win."

Juniata takes a 2-2 overall record to Reading this Saturday night for a 7:30 kickoff with Albright. The Indians are 2-1 in the MAC. Widener fell to 3-1, and 2-1 in the conference. The Pioneers meet unbeaten Lycoming on Saturday.



Hidden Indian player delivers a crushing spike (dark uniforms) versus Penn State "B" team during Parents Weekend Match. The Indians coasted to a straight game match win and are now gearing up for the JC Classic to be held this Friday and Saturday in Memorial Gym (season record 8-1). Everyone is invited to see excellent play and to support our strong Indian team.

Labba Lines

by Joe Scialabba

When Juniat beat Widener on Saturday it was much more than just a Middle Atlantic Conference football victory. It was a win that will go down as one of the greatest in Juniata history.

Juniata has had many great wins throughout its proud football history. It is a history that has many highlights.

The first winning season was in1929 when Reynold Siersema coached the Tribe to a 5-4 record. The first undefeated team came in 1953 when the Indians were 7-0 under Bill Smaltz.

Juniata's "Glory Years" were 1953-59 when Indian teams went 50-2-2. The Tribe won 23 straight games during 1953-55, and did not lose in 27 consecutive games from 1956-59.

The 1955 team went 8-0-1 for coach Bob Hicks. The highlight was a tie with Missouri Valley State in the Tangerine Bowl. End Barry Drexler, QB Pat Tarquinio and guard Bill Baushalter all received Little All-American honors.

From 1972-79 Juniata had no losing seasons. In 1973, the Indians went 10-2 for Walt Nadzak, including a Division III playoff win over Bridgeport and a trip to the first Amos Alonzo Stagg Bowl. Twelve Tribe players made the Middle Atlantic Conference All-Star team. Running back Lou Eckerl became Juniata's fourth MAC MVP, as the Indians won their first team title.

The Tribe was MAC co-champs in 1981 when Rob Ash, in his second season, went 6-2-1. Receiver Eric Biddle won league MVP honors.

Since 1981, Tom Devine (1982) and Dave Murphy (1984), who remeains on injured reserve with the Pittsburgh Steelers, have won MVP honors, and Indian teams have advanced through some rebuilding years. Now, with last year's Delaware Valley win and Saturday's victory over Widener pushing the Tribe foward again, Juniata may be ready to seriously contend for the league crown.

Juniata controls its own destiny, with six league games remaining. I'm not predicting a title, but I am predicting a title fight.

It won't get easier as the season rolls along, but it can't get much tougher than Widener. Juniata has made a move to be in the upper division of the MAC. Let's hope we can find a way to move into the top spot.

The first steps of the long climb have been taken.

ATTN:

ATTENTION, the sports department desperately needs sports-writers and photographers. Juniata has strong teams in every field of athletics and it is not fair to let outstanding performances go unnoticed. The players deserve more for their effort. World News Update

By Virginia Krall

COLORADO-A 7-year-old girl saw her own picture on a milk carton and told a friend, leading police to recover the child, missing for the past two years. "The little girl's friend told her mother about the pictue," said the police. "It was a stroke of luck!" The small girl was reportly taken from her father's custody in Tampa, FLA., in 1983. Her mother has been charged in the disappearance.

WASHINGTON-Both sides of the pay equity issue dug in for a major battle this week as the House considered a bill funding a $1.5 million study comparing salaries of men, women and minorities on the federal payroll. Conservatives say the wish for pay equity, the concept that men and women should be paid equal salaries for jobs of equal worth, will be gotten. The bill passed the House last year before conservatives rallied to block Senate action.

OKLAHOMA-The wrath of ministers, politicians and parents was heard when Dr. Ruth Westheimer announced an appearance at Oklahoma State University. Ministers took to the pulpit and parents to the telephones to condemn the university for authorizing her appearance. In the heart of the Bible Belt, OSU's town Stillwater, has 60 churches. OSU enrolls 23,000 students and has recently avoided unrest, coed residence halls, and major drug problems.

WASHINGTON-The House voted last week to double funds for the research and prevention of AIDS. The Senate must act quickly to follow that lead so the search for a treatment can go forward. The $189.7 million up for approval would fund: Research that could curb the disease and lead to breakthroughs to control certain cancers, education for high risk groups that willl help all understand how the disease is spread, and testing of promising new drugs.

Dr. Michele Johns, international concert organist, will perform in Oller Hall on Oct. 15 at 8:15 pm. Johns teaches organ performance and church music at the University of Michigan. She has become a specialist in historic keyboard instruments and their literature.

Concert Organist Sets Performance

International concert organist Michele Johns will appear in recital Tuesday, Oct. 15, at 8:15pm in Juniata's Oller Auditorium.

Sponsered by Juniata's Visiting Artists/Scholars Committee, the concert will feature music by German and American composers including a performance of the towering F Major Toccata and Fugue to commemorate the Bach tercentenary year.

Dr. Johns teaches organ performance and church music at the University of Michigan and is organist of the First Baptist Church, Dearborn, Michigan. In more than 10 concert and study tours of Europe, she has become a specialist in historic keyboard instruments and their specific literature. In further contribution to keyboard art, Dr. Johns has premired numerous new compositions as well, including music by Samuel Adler, William Albright and William Bolcom.

A recent recording was made with Marilyn Mason of the complete "Concertos for Two Organs" by Antonio Soler to commemorate the 200th anniversary of the composer's death. The recording was made on the two historic organs of the Cathedral at Segovia, Spain.

Prior to the concert at Juniata, Dr. Johns will play at one of the dedication ceremonies for the new Fisher organ at the University of Michigan on Oct. 13. The evening following her Juniata appearance, she will perform at Penn State with university trumpet professor Robert Howard.

Dr. Johns received her Doctor of Musical Arts degree from the University of Michigan and was cofounder and first Dean of the Ann Arbor chapter of the American Guild of Organists. She is scheduled to be the featured recitalist at the Guild's national convention in July, 1986.

Mt. Day Tradition Dates Back to 1898

"Mountain Day" is one of the oldest and most popular annual traditions at Juniata College.

In January, 1878, there was a smallpox outbreak in Huntingdon and Juniata College closed down, sending its students home. For three students, however, the journey home was too far, so they took refuge in a cabin in the Trough Creek area of southern Huntingdon County where they remained for six weeks. One of the frequent visitors to the cabin during this time was a 15-year-old boy from Marklesburg, Martin Grove Brumbaugh, who would go on to become Juniata's president and World War I Governor of Pennsylvania. The first "all-college" outing was held in May, 1896 when students returned to the Trough Creek refuge of the smallpox exiles of 1878. In 1900, the annual outing was changed from spring to fall, providing an opportunity to enjoy the autumn colors.

The term "Mountain Day" was coined in 1903 by Henry B. Brumbaugh, the former president of Juniata and at that time a member of the college's faculty.

"Mountain Day" is never announced in advance. A student committee plans the event but the actual day depends on the weather. Early that morning, the bell in Founders Hall tower rings to signal "Mountain Day" and notices are quickly posted in the residence halls. All classes are canceled for the day and students, faculty and staff are transported to one of the nearby state parks for a day of food, organized games and recreation.

Matching Fund Proposal Examined by Committee

by Mary McDougall

A "matching funds" scheme to benefit small student organizations was proposed by Wayne Justham, director of programming, at last Tuesday's Student Government meeting.

Justham recommended such a scheme, "Since Student Government has not offically approved any funding for student organizations other than 'Big Five' (The Juniatian, The Alfarata, Kvasir, Laughing Bush and V103), and since the original budget allocations recommended. . .should leave some monies for future allocation. . ."

If approved, the "matching funds grants" would be available to small organizations not already funded by Student Government. The "matching funds" would be allocated for innovative fund raising other than parties, dues and raffles.

The proposal is being examined by the Budget and Management Committee, chaired by Tom Trent.

Also announced at the meeting were the results of last week's elections. Mike Wojcik was approved as Senior Class Vice-President and senator, as were freshman senators Meg Kistler, Amy Coursen and Jim McManagle.

Where are the Fans

Our Lady Indians Volleyball team made a valiant effort this past weekend during the J.C. Classic. Unfortunately the Ladies lost in the finals to a tough Grove City team.

Where were the fans this weekend? In previous years students used to pack the gym for volleyball games - especially tournaments. The bleachers were especially barren during the final matches Saturday night. Of the crowd that was there, probably less than 50% were students. For a school that takes pride in its volleyball team, student support was definately lacking.

Faculty have taken the place of students when it comes to cheering on our team. More and more professors are coming out to support our girls. The Juniatian is gald to see our instructors supporting their students in more than an academic way.

Not all Juniata students were apathetic this weekend. A small group of six or eight students tried to incite some spirit into the audience. Their chants went unanswered by the remainder of the crowd.

Juniata has always bragged about our Lady Indians. The girls put out their all and play an excellent game of volleyball. Shouldn't the fans remember this and stick by them when the game doesn't go as planned.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

As a 3-plus-year reader of the Juniatian, I have always relied on it to bring me accurate information on happenings in the college community. It was with shock, therefore, that I read Andy Hiscock's article titled "IM Soccer Ladies Display Fast Paced Action" in last week's paper. Mr. Hiscock not only insults one of the teams, but also confuses his facts.

First, fall IM soccer has always been played outside across the varsity soccer field. Mr. Hiscock has us playing in the intramural gym. Further, as captain of the team "Panique", I witnessed "Kickback's" forfeit to us. With 14 women, the maximum allowed, "Panique" will definitely show at every game this season. Herein lies Mr. Hiscock's second error; we did not forfeit to "Kickback" on September 25th. My other objection to the article stems from its implications. I quote Mr. Hiscock: " 'Panique' should be happy that they didn't show for their first game, because in their second game of the season, they were trumped by 'Pink Palace'." Here, the Juniatian is accurate as we did lose 9-1. However, our loss is no reason for us to be ashamed to play other games. The purpose behind IM competition, as "Panique" interprets it, is to have fun. Winning or losing is of secondary concern.

Sincerely,
Alane Dorothy Penney
captain of "Panique"

Counselor's Corner

by Dr. Jay Buchanan

Caveat emptor, let the buyer beware, are words familiar to all of us. The phrase suggests that, as consumers, we need to be a bit cautious when dealing with some, but not all, businesspeople and salespersons.

Dr. Robert Cialdini, a social psychologist at Arizona State University wrote an interesting book titled Influence: How and why people agree to things. In the book he cautions us about being unduly influenced by people who would have us say "yes" when we really mean "no". We have all fallen victim to the salesperson, and Cialdini refers to them as compliance practitioners or compliance professionals, who talked us into a purchase that we really had not planned on.

Cialdini says there are six basic psychological principles used by pursuaders to exploit or manipulate the consumer. The more we know about compliant behavior, the better able we will be to say no when we mean no. We will examine three of the principles presented by Cialdini.

The first is a standard principle used by many shoppers, that is, the "expensive = good" stereotype. A great many consumers feel that a higher price typically reflects a higher quality. The saying, "you get what you pay for", is generally applicable, but some compliance practitioners use this principle to exploit an unknowing customer.

Another principle or weapon of influence is the contrast principle. This has to do with the way we see the difference between two things that are presented one after another.

An example of the contrast principle might be buying a $30.00 tie after having purchased a $275.00 suit. The former does not seem excessive in contrast to the latter. Cialdini's research suggests that a consumer might pay more for accessories if they are bought after the purchase of the suit.

A third principle used by compliance professionals is referred to as the principle of scarcity. Anything that is becoming less available seems more attractive. Put another way, opportunities appear more valuable when availability is limited.

The "limited-number" tactic and the "deadline" tactic are examples of the scarcity principle. Compliance professionals use these techniques to convince customers of an item's scarcity with the intent of increasing its immediate value to the customer.

Indeed, not all salespeople and businesspeople are out to manipulate and exploit the customer. There are many reputable merchants who are still interested in the customer after the sale. The more we are aware of the weapons of influence and how they can be used against us, the better position we will be in to say NO!!

East House residents may have noticed the construction work currently underway outside of Ellis Hall on their way to classes. This has been going on under the disguise of pipe repair, but this reporter has found the true nature of this work. This is Phase Two of Juniata's new "Project Total Security." Phase One consisted of the new policy of collecting ID cards in the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center.

Phase Two involves the digging of and anti-personal trench, followed immediately by the construction of guard towers. This addition to the Juniata College campus is to prevent the expected terrorist attacks from the general direction of East Houses. According to Gus Gusstopherson, Chief of the Anti-Terrrorist Security, students who attempt to pass the checkpoint without the proper identification will be "shot in the face". Completion of Phase Two is expected by late November.

When asked about the need for increased security Gusstopherson said," Ah, security is not just to provide a chauffer service to the train station. We believe that security should play a more active role at Juniata."

Phase Three is expected to begin sometime during Winter Term. This next step will include armed security patrols, guard dogs, and the use of electric fences around the "important" buildings. Spot strip searches are also being considered.

Letters

Dear Miss Penney,

Don't "Panique," your complaint did not fall upon deaf ears here (as is the case with many other campus student complaints - but that's a different letter to the editor altogether.)

The Juniatian prides itself on up-to-date, accurate reporting of campus activities and this letter disturbs me. I get my sports information directly from the Intramural Department records for those games that I do not attend. I therefore went back to the Intramural Department and found that according to official standings, you do have a forfeit. I suggest that you clear up your team record with the IM Department.

Since this was the first Intramural Soccer article of the year, I tried to use my season preview articles from past years to encourage fan support. The last Intramural Soccer League was held indoors so I changed my introduction to accommodate the larger outdoor field, but failed to take "Memorial and Intramural Gym" out of the article. As for the offense that you took to my reporting, if you follow it throughout the year, I uphold Juniata's fine tradition of having a very active Intramural program (for fun) and try to be fair to all teams participating.

Sincerely,
Andy Hiscock,
Sports Editor

Indians Outdistance Albright Lions Football Record at 3-2

by Joe Scialabba

Juniata played ball control on Saturday night as the Indians won their second straight, 26-7 over Albright in Reading.

The Tribe took home the "Pretzel Bowl" trophy with the Middle Atlantic Conference victory. Juniata is now 3-2, and 3-1 in the MAC. Albright is 1-2 overall and in the conference.

Indian game MVP quarterback Mike Culver ran for touchdowns from 3 and 60 yards and threw a 17-yard TD pass to Mike Cottle, giving the Tribe a 16-7 halftime lead. The junior quarterback had an impressive night with 117 yards rushing, and a 13 of 21 passing effort for 160 yards.

"Mike played like an experienced quarterback," said Juniata's Rob Ash. "All three touchdown plays were audibles. He checked-off at the line very well."

The Indians jumped out to a 9-0 lead after Mike Schaffner nailed a 29-yard field goal with 10:13 left in the first half. When Albright answered on an 11-yard scoring play from QB Stan Bergman to Dan Poruban the Tribe took control for good.

Juniata traveled to the Albright 24 before a fumble stopped the threat. But, the defense responded by holding the Lions on three plays and forcing a punt. The Indians started their last first-half possession at their 38 with about two minutes left.

The Tribe negotiated the distance in seven plays, with the Culver to Cottle pass capping the drive with :15 before halftime.

"We ran the two minute offense very well," said Ash. "We ran the ball,threw the ball and used our timeouts.

"The defense gave our offense a chance to work. They are keeping assignment breakdowns to a minimum. The only Albright score came due to a play that happened to be perfect against our stunt. We've been real solid."

The Juniata defense held the Lions to only 206 total yards while the Indians worked for 452 yards in 36 minutes of possession. The Tribe rushed for 292 yards, including 110 yards by freshman Greg Townsend, his second straight 100-plus effort. Ian Malee added 48 yards on 11 carries.

"Our offensive line played extremely well," said Ash. "They've worked very hard and have been doing a great job.

"Our passing game was the best of the year. We mixed it into the scheme very well, and used it to sustain drives. It worked when we needed it.

Cottle grabbed nine passes for 107 yards while tight end Jim Metz caught four for 53. Using only two receivers did cause Ash some concern.

"We still need to spread our passes around," said Ash. "Plus, we missed on a couple scoring chances."

Juniata lost two fumbles and settled for two Schaffner field goals. Both kicks followed sustained drives, the second from 32 yards gave Juniata some breathing room, 19-7.

"Mike has done well for us," said Ash. "He gets us points when we need them, and lets us play our game.

"We controlled the football and played tough the whole way," added Ash. "It was a good, decisive win. We are still a young team, but we're starting to blend things together. We should continue to improve."

Bob Crossey and Gino Perri had ten tackles each while Mark Dorner and Jeff Danyus had interceptions. Steve Haley recorded two QB sacks, with Tom Kalinyak getting a key sack for the second straight week.

Juniata meets Western Maryland in a non-conference game in Westminster, Maryland, this Saturday at 1:30 p.m. The Indians host Wilkes on October 19.

Indian player Sean Ruth (#8) goes up with a Dickinson player during a game last Wednesday. Despite aggressive play by the Indians, they lost 5-2 to drop their season record to 2-5 overall. They are looking forward to their next match at Lebanon Valley next Monday.

Indian Volleyball Shines On J.C. Classic

by Andy Hiscock

This past weekend, Juniata College played host to the annual J.C. Classic women's volleyball tournament. The tournament is one of the largest in the east and included 18 teams from the Middle Atlantic Conference including local colleges and colleges from as far away as Minnesota, New York and North Carolina. The caliber of play was exceptional, treating the good sized crowd to two full days of top-notch volleyball.

Once again the Juniata Indians were right st the top of the heap. Despite a heartbreaking loss in the final championship match, the lady Indians under direction of Head Coach Larry Bock and Assistant Coach Susan Benusa were outstanding, and made the long road to the finals look easy.

The Indians started strong on Friday with a straight two game victory over St. Catherines of Minnesota (15-6),(15-9). The Lady Indians jumped out to quick leads in both games. Junior Diana Hauger displayed a great top-spin serve that "froze" teams throughout the tournament. The comfortable lead allowed Coach Bock to give underclassmen Breda Heiland, Heather Pruim, and Dana Worthington valuable game play experience.

The Indians closed out the first day of the tournament as strongly as they had started, with another impressive victory over SUNTY Brockport in straight games (15-2), (15-6). Senior Carolyn Stambaugh opened the first game with a strong serve (2-aces) and gave the Indians a quick 6-0 lead. The Ladies went on to win the game with Freshmen Jacki Rebert and Heather Pruim, and Sophomore Cathy Miller displaying some spectacular spikes to put the game away. The second game went as smoothly as the first, with Sophomore Beth Hoppel working the ball well for the Indians to give them the most opportune shot. Sophomore Jodi Cox had a few solid serves at the end of the game for the Indians who cruised to a (15-6) victory.

Saturday morning brought about much of the same play from the Lady Indians. They worked well together and committed few mistakes as they defeated Liberty (15-4), (16-6) and later Bucknell University (15-8), (15-9). The Indians advanced to the play-offs with the best record of all the teams (had not lost a game) and received a first round bye.

The quarterfinals pitted Juniata versus Shippensburg. The Indians again played solidly and seemed to be able to place the ball whereever they wanted to, allowing them to advance to the semi-finals where they faced Milikin (Illinois). The competition was getting tougher, but our ladies fought off a late stage rally in the first game to wim (15-12). Sophomore Cathy Miller played a solid game as she did throughout the tournament with a number of "rejections" at the net. The second game was more of a dog-fight, with Milikin creeping out to a 8-4 lead where it hovered for 10 minutes as both teams fought hard to break each oithers serve. The Indians were just a fraction off in their timing at the net and were never able to catch Milikin and lost their first game of the tournament (15-10). The third game also was drawn out with both teams swapping serves with the score 1-1. The Indians rallied around inspired play by Junior Mariella Gacka who put a few key spikes down the lines to get the team rolling to a (15-5) victory and a spot in the Finals.

Here J.C. met up with a strong Grove City squad. Grove City jumped out to a quick 3-0 lead but Juniata refused to give up, and clawed their way back to a 3-3 tie. The strong serving and precise timing that Juniata had used to reach the Finals started to fade. We continued to work the ball on the floor and set up for open shots, but the final pieces never seemed to fall. Spikes into the net or just out of bounds, or serves that sailed long hurt the team. Our ladies never gave up, as they fought time and time again to regain the precious serve. The ladies lost the first game (15-3), and the second game (15-4).

Of course everyone was disappointed that we didn't win the tournament, but I can only see this team getting stronger as the year progresses. The Indians season record now stands at (18-2) with one of the strongest MAC teams in the nation. The team has a great attitude, and integrates the newer players with the more experienced players well. As the season goes on the team should "gel" into a power that will challenge for the MAC not only this year, but in the years to come with virtually all of the team returning next year.

The entire team gave their all this past weekend, with team Captain Lori Bason (Junior) providing solid "diggging" to start many of the point scoring plays alternating with Jr. Carolyn Stambaugh who was strong at the net as she has been for the past three years. Cathy Miller was also strong at the net both offensively and defensively for the Indians and was nominated to the J.C. Classic All-star team, as was Mariella Gacka who seemed to get stronger as the tournament went on and provided spikes that were as well placed as they were hard, and Beth Hoppel who had the tough job of setting up allmost every offensive play for the Indians throughout the entire tournament. As was evident to the crowd on hand for the J.C. Classic tournament, the 1985 Indian squad has the talent to go all the way, and I wish the team the best of of the luck for the rest of the season.

Publication Woes At the Alfarata

Legal action may be taken

by Jennifer Nicholson

The 1984-85 Alfarata publication has been delayed due to a problem in attaining the yearbook layout sheets. Kristine Van Horn, editor of the 1984-85 yearbook, took the layouts home with her for the summer. It seems that the layout sheets were not completed and Kristine planned to finish them. She was to send the sheets to the publisher. Kristine has not yet sent the sheets to the publisher or returned them to the school although she claimed weeks ago that the sheets would be sent. Kristine has not indicated the reason for her hesitation.

According to Dr. Arnold Tilden, Vice-President and Dean of Student Services,and Noreen Nightengale, Editor of the 1985-86 Alfarata, the college and the publishing company are considering legal action in order to obtain the layout sheets and get the yearbook production underway. "We want our students to have a yearbook," stated Dr. Tilden. However, Tilden stresses that there is no need to assume the worst as the yearbook can be completed earlier than it was last year with Kristine Van Horn's cooperation

Additionally, Doris Goehring, Faculty Advisor for the Alfarata, has resigned her position, citing problems with the former and current editor. "Kristine always led me to believe that everything was going well with the yearbook," Mrs. Goehring said. She added that Kristine assured her deadlines were being met and production was on schedule.

"I'm very concerned about the 1985 book, and of course, the students are the ones being hurt," Mrs. Goehring said. She added that Noreen has made no attempt to contact her about the problem. "I've tried to contact her several times and she doesn't even return my phone calls."

Once the Alfarata's publication is secure, the Student Affairs Committee, of which Mrs. Goehring is a member, and the present yearbook staff will seek a replacement for Mrs. Goehring.

The Student Affairs Committee will be examining all the campus communication media, particularly the selection process for new editors, noted Dr. Tilden. The committee hopes to eliminate the recent problems that have occurred with the various campus media.

Juniata Visits New York In Homecoming 1985

By Mary McDougall

A bit of the "Big Apple" will come to Juniata College Oct. 18-19 when alumni return to College Hill for the 1985 Homecoming celebration. This year's theme, "The Big Apple" (New York, New York,) promises to bring some big-city excitement to the Juniata campus.

Highlighting the two day event will be the traditional Homecoming parade through Huntingdon which will begin at 10:30 a.m. Saturday. Dr. Robert P. Zimmerer, Charles A. Dana Supported Professor and 1985 recipient of the Beachley Distinguished Professor Award, will serve as this year's Grand Marshall. The parade will include class floats, the Juniata College Band and apparatus from the Huntingdon Fire Department. Parade judges will include Miss Peggy Evans, 1984 Homecoming Queen; Dr. Joseph V. Stewart, vice president and dean of academic affairs; and Miss Janet Lewis, assistant professor of philosophy.

The parade will begin at 11 a.m. at the Sears store and move south on Washington Street to Sixth Street. It will follow Sixth to Mifflin, proceed north on Mifflin to 18th Street and enter the Juniata campus.

The five team Indian Volleyball Invitational tournament will begin at 6 p.m. Friday in the Kennedy Sports & Recreation Center and continue Sat. morning. Juniata will play Grove City College at 7 p.m. Saturday. All proceeds from the Indian Volleyball Invitational games will be donated to the American Cancer Society.

Kickoff for the Homecoming football game against Wilkes will be at 1:30 p.m. Saturday. There also are cross country and soccer matches Saturday against Susquehanna beginning at 1:30 and 2 p.m., respectively. Following the athletic events, there will be a special reception in the Gibbel Lobby of the Sports+Recreation Center honoring President and Mrs. Frederick M. Binder. A special feature, back by popular request, will be the student vocalists performing musical selections including Broadway hits.

An alumni soccer game is set for Saturday at 10:30 a.m. on the soccer field. At 10 a.m. that morning, the faculty of Juniata will host departmental reunions. There also will be an exhibit at Shoemaker Galleries both Friday and Saturday from 1-7 p.m. featuring illustrative art from Germany.

Other highlights of the weekend will include a "steet fair" on the pathway between Ellis College Center and East Houses with booths sponsored by student organizations. The traditional Homecoming Dance will begin at 10 p.m. Saturday in the Kennedy Sports+Recreation Center.

World News Update

by Mary McDougall

SICILY, ITALY — The U.S. strongly protested Italy's release of the accused mastermind of the Achille Lauro hijacking charging it was incomprehensible that the "notorious Palestinian terrorist" was allowed passage to Yugoslavia. U.S. fighter jets seized four hijackers last Thurs., scoring what many called an important victory in the war against terrorism and triggering a weekend push to bring the pirates to justice. The four hijackers who held the cruise ship for 44 hours were turned over to Italian authorities after an Egyptian 737 - turned away from Algeria and Tunisia - was forced to land in Sicily. White House spokesman Larry Speakes said the U.S. would also see "prompt extradition" so they can be tried here as well. The hijackers killed one American aboard the cruise ship.

Concerning the Change to Semesters . . .

The change to semesters is just around the corner for most underclassmen. Faculty and administrators are making decisions that may affect us all, academically and socially. The Juniatian feels it is extremely important that everyone connected with Juniata, especially the students, be aware of the issues at hand.

In the past week an ad hoc committee formed to discuss ways to inform the student body about the semester switch. Committee members include representatives from Student Government, Centerboard, V103, and The Juniatian. This group will be asking questions and funnelling information to the campus community on a regular basis.

In order for this special student committee and the Academic Affairs Council to confront potential problems head on, students must voice their concerns, questions, and ideas. Student opinion may affect decisions, such as the continuation of Madrigal Dinner and Raft Regatta, the conversion to credit hours, and graduation requirements. Every question and idea is needed if Juniata College is to make a smooth transition.

When information about semesters reaches you, read it or listen carefully, jot down your questions, and be sure to ask them.

Advisors, faculty, administrators, and this newly formed ad hoc committee need to know what is on your mind and what you want your college to be under the new semester system.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

Last Sunday October 6, our co-rec volleyball team had a game scheduled at 8:30 pm. Most of our team thought the game was at 9:15 pm. Luckily one of our players was present and told our "helpful" referee, Mike Nelson, that she would get the team assembled in time to play. As a result of quick phone calls, and a lot of running, our whole team was at the courts and eager to play at 8:45 pm. But our "friendly" ref, Mike Nelson, decided that he had better things to do, and was getting paid anyway, and refused to listen to both teams' pleas to play.

With our entire team in front of him, Mike Nelson, scribbled "forfeited" over our team's name, dropped off the schedule, and was on his way home by 8:49 pm.

We would like to request to all other teams to be prompt. Our good buddy, Mike Nelson, is a very busy man.

Sincerely,
Joe D'Amico
Karen Bennett

Dear Editor:

The Intramural Handbook clearly states the following regarding responsibility involved with being an intramural captain.

Before accepting the opportunity and responsibility to be a captain, the captain should understand what his (her) team members are depending on him (her) to do for them . . . Inform them of when and where they play so they will not forfeit games . . . Before complaining, make sure he (she) knows and understands completely the playing rules for the sport and intramural rules and regulations as outlined in this handbook.

As an IM official, it has become evident that many people confuse our responsibilities as an official. We are required to be on time, to organize the participants, to maintain control of the event, and to operate the scheduled events efficiently. In doing this, it is sometimes necessary to apply the forfeiture rule which allows teams to be up to ten minutes late. I regret the misleading facts in the previous letter, for if I had been informed prior to 8:45 pm, which I was not, that the team was attempting to organize, I would have done all I could to reconcile the situation.

I have never been condemned for following my job requirements; moreover, I refuse to take responsibility for a situation obviously caused by the team captain. In the future, I recommend such problems be taken directly to the IM department, and personal vendettas taken directly to me.

Sincerely,
Michael Nelson

READ & RECYCLE

Along Muddy Run

by Joe Scialabba

Many Juniata students have been annoyed lately by the lack of ice in Baker Refectory. It has been several days now that one of the ice machines has not been working properly. But, don't let that upset you, since reports from inside the food service say that the missing ice is really there. That's right; it's there.

Apparently, the Baker backroom kitchen has experimented with, and now put to use, a brand new scientific food stuff: "Invisible Ice." This ice - although we don't see it, feel it, or taste it - is every bit as good as real live ice. Food service personnel say that all we have to do is place our glass under the ice machine on the omelet-line side and fill it with invisible ice. Then, the glass should be filled with visible soda or juice, and the invisible ice will go to work. Our drink will chill and remain cold, almost like magic. So don't worry about the apparent lack of ice - it is really there.

Also, the food service is experimenting with invisible soda. For example, last week when only the Diet Coke jets were working we were really just fooled. In reality, all the sodas were available in the new, invisible form. They reportedly look and taste like air, but have all the qualities - calories and caffeine included - of "normal" sodas.

The question is: will invisible food be next? Let's hope not. There is also rumor that the microwaves are being changed so their zap is sapped. Will there be no more micro-melted ham and cheese pitas? Please say no.

Artist Series Presents Shakespearen Play

The National Shakespeare Company will perform "The Merchants of Venice" as the second event of Juniata College's Artist Series Wednesday, October 23 at 8:15 in Oller Auditorium.

Winner of the 1985 National Association of Campus Activities' Major Performance Award, the theatre company is the first of its kind to survive for over 20 seasons rendering a unique service to colleges, universities, civic associations and arts councils across the country.

Touring with a repertoire of new productions each year, the professional acting ensemble combines with outstanding directors and theatre craftsmen to provide exciting and provocative theatre. The National Shakespeare Company has played in over 800 cities in 48 states and parts of Canada. The group covers more than 35,00 miles and performs for more than 75,00 people each year.

Traveling in the tradition of William Shakespeare, the company is completely self-contained. Long experience has given the company the unique ability to present performances which are both technically efficient and artistically successful in a wide variety of environments: theatres, gymnasiums, and chapels.

Thousands of talented professionals from across the country are interviewed and auditioned for the company. Those who are hired must possess a special combination of talents. Because the company is self-contained, the actors perform the technical duties, drive the bus, and handle many of the logistical aspects of the tour. Those hired, therefore, must not only have experience and ability in performing the classics, but also technical abilities, dedication and maturity.

"The National Shakespeare Company is one of the most exciting developments in the history of the American stage," said the Springfield (Mass.) Daily News. "An aggregation of devoted artistic and technical theatre people, the company creates an impression of quality and excellence wherever it visits."

"The Merchants of Venice" has endured as one of Shakespeare's most popular and controversial plays. It has been praised for it exhaltation of mercy and comdemned for its seeming anti-Semitism.

Antonio, a rich merchant, borrows money from Shylock, a Jewish moneylender, to get funds to allow Antonio's friend Bassanio to woo the lovely Portia. Antonio, without thinking, agrees to secure the loan with a pound of his own flesh and, while Bassanio is successful in his quest for Portia's love, Antonio's fortunes are otherwise and he is unable to repay Shyloch on time. Shylock, who for years has been mistreated by Antonio, at last sees his chance for revenge and ge sues in the strict Venetian court for his pound of flesh. Shylock almost succeeds in taking his revenge and only Portia's cleverness and wisdom avert disaster.

Tickets for the October 23 performance may be purchased in advance at the information desk in Ellis College Center or at the door the night of the performance. Please note that October 23 is the correct date for this event, not October 26 as originally advertised.

Sail Through A SEAmester On A Schooner

For nine weeks each fall and spring, — "A SEAmester" — 16 students enter a college campus which stretches far beyond the horizon to include the Caribbean Sea and the western North Atlantic. The campus classroom lies on a tall ship into which is stuffed, jammed, and squeezed students, faculty, and crew competing for provisions equipment, books, water, fuel, and the most essential item, good humor. This campus is unlike any other because it continually changes in space and time. One day the campus may be a tropical lagoon, the next day the ruins of a sugar mill, later a Carolina mud flat or a wall 100 feet below the surface of the Gulf Stream. You are teleported centuries back in time in the setting of rural Haiti or walking past the 16th century buildings lining the streets of Santo Domingo or at the seaport in Mystic.

Concepts and topics which seem remote, boring, and unclear at the home campus take on a new perspective when studied live in the field. A coral reef becomes an intense experience when after a lecture you dive from the ship to do a field laboratory on the reef front. Fish anatomy can become an unforgetable event as you perform a megadissection on a very, very fresh 12 foot tiger shark.

History comes alive as you walk through the palace of Diego Columbo or climb wearily 3000 feet to stand in awe upon King Henri Cristophe's monument, La Citadel, regarded as the 8th wonder of the world. Traditions of the sea take on far deeper meanings after you feel the ship punch through heavy seas on night watch or reef sails during a heavy blow.

There is a sense of personal development as you gain nautical skills such as the satisfaction and confidence at the increasing ease by which you shoot stars at twilight or fix a position at noon. The wisdom of the old sailors' adage "one hand for the ship, one hand for yourself" will be very clear the first time you uneasily climb up the ratlines.

If you are interested in knowing more about the SEAmester experience and how student participants complete a full college semester of course work while sailing aboard this untraditional clasroom, write to: SEAmester, Long Island University, Southampton Campus, Southampton, New York 11968.

These people and 3 million others have something to celebrate.

What is your opinion of Juniata's lounge parties?

Jeff Haines, Tim Rodak, Tim Wilson (freshmen) — "The floors are wet. The beer should be in two spots so there is no line. It sucks when beer gets spilled on you."

Todd Mullen (sophomore) — "I think it's a cool way to meet people and it's a good way to get to dance but I think they could be better by having more than just beer."

Stephanie Seidle (junior) — "Not only is it ridiculous that there is only one lounge party each weekend night, but they're too crowded and too hot. You'd think this campus could provide for a more diverse social life on weekends."

four million got through, officials announced Thursday. The Immigration and Naturalization Service noted 1,265,054 people, more than 95 percent of them Mexican, were caught in the year ending Sept. 30. That's up 11 percent from the previous year.

LONDON — In the aftermath of last Monday's rioting in the North London district of Tottenham in which a constable was killed, the police warned that they would be prepared to use plastic bullets and tear gas in future confrontations with rioters. Opposition political figures once again demanded a public inquiry into the nature and causes of inner city violence as they have after each of the recent outbreaks.

Seriously, our food service has had a good reputation. We have many extras that other schools don't. But, if the essentials - like ice, soda, and main courses - slip and are allowed to go below par, what good are the extras?

Maybe this has just been a rough couple of weeks at Baker. We all hope so, invisible ice seems to be getting a cold response. (P.S. This was not an editorial, but maybe it should be.)

Art Exhibit Opens In Shoemaker Galleries

An exhibit entitled "Illustrative Graphic Art" appearing at Juniata College's Shoemaker Galleries October 14 through November 15 will feature the work of 41 student artists from the Fachhochschule Technical Institiute in Munster, West Germany.

The exhibit will include illustrative works in a variety of media, all of which were produced in the last two years as typical projects in the course of study at Munster. The students selected the topics themselves and a multiplicity of themes is represented in their works. Many are illustrations of fairy tales, fables and legends by well-known authors such as the Brothers Grimm, Wilde, Kafka, Hesse, Mann and Tolkien, but there also are illustrations for calendar pages, book covers and playing cards.

Illustrative graphics have a very special charm as well as special limitations. Their almost universal appeal springs from their close relationship to the world of fantasy—the fairy tales, fables and legends which they illustrate.

But part of the appeal of the illustrative art also is in its concreteness. By its very nature, the illustration must serve a specific purpose other than itself—to make visible what the text describes. Pictures can add elements that words cannot communicate and present imaginative pictures of objects and concepts. Thus, although the illustration is limited in the sense that it must function to illumine a text, there is no limit to the richness of its inventive possibilities.

In additon to the constraints imposed by the text, there also are special technical problems which confront the illustrative artist. A relatively small design format is required, for example, since most books are small. Moreover, even though the artist is usually free to choose the topic for illustration, the image he creates must be capable of reproduction. This means the medium must be chosen and handled in such a way that it can be readily and clearly replicated by the printing proccess. For this reason. as can be seen in this exhibit, ink drawings, woodcuts and linolium cuts are favored media for illustrators, but other media such as crayon drawings, chalk drawings, watercolors as well as gouche, collage and mixed media techniques also can be employed under certain circumstances.

The opening reception for the "Illustrative Graphic Art" exhibit will be held in Shoemaker Galleries October 14 at 8:15 p.m. Professor Reinhard Herrmann of the Department of Design at the Fachhochschule in Munster will attend the reception.

Shoemaker Galleries are located in Carnegie Hall, corner of 17th and Moore streets. The exhibit is open weekdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Baxter To Deliver Trustee Lecture

Dr. Craig Baxter, professor of politics and history at Juniata College, will deliver the fifth annual Harold B. Brumbaugh Trustee Lecture Friday, October 18 at 8:15 p.m. in Alumni Hall, Brumbaugh Science Center.

The lecture series is designed to enable faculty members to share their expertise and research with members of the college's Board of Trustees, students, staff and interested residents.

Baxter's lecture, "How to Build a Nation: How to Destroy a Nation—The Cases of South Asia," will examine how nations in South Asia have had trouble developing the sense of "togetherness" needed to advance. He will focus his remarks primarily on India, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Bangladesh. Baxter notes that while Bangladesh has had some success in this "togetherness" process, the other nations have had a difficult time because of internal language and religious differences.

A member of the Juniata faculty since 1981, Baxter was a Foreign Service Officer from 1956 to 1980.

Autumnfest

On Saturday, October 26th, Center Board's S.N.A.P. Committee is holding its annual AUTUMNFEST. The bus will leave for Camp Blue Diamond at 6:45 p.m. from in front of Ellis Saturday evening. Entertainment will include the Allegheny String Band, square dancing, and hay rides. Such traditional autumn refreshments as apple cider and doughnuts will be served. Sign up at the Information desk by Wednesday, October 23rd. Autumnfest is FREE.

Nancy Briggs is the daughter of Connie and Jerry Briggs and will be escorted by Steve Poska. Nancy is from Monticello, NY and is a 1982 graduate of Monticello High School. Majoring in Corporate Accounting and Finance at Juniata, Nancy commented, "It was a great honor to learn about being nominated to represent the senior class in Homecoming. It is certainly something I will always remember."

Kate Poppenberg is the daughter of Oliver and Mary Kay Poppenberg and will be escorted by Matt Siegel. Kate is from Sewickley and a 1982 graduate of Sewickley Academy. Majoring in Personnel Management, Kate commented, "I was thrilled to learn about being chosen to represent my class and it will definitely make my senior year more memorable."

Lisa Anne Smoker is the daughter of Mrs. Betty Smoker and will be escorted by David Heck. Lisa is from Lancaster and a 1982 graduate of Conestoga Valley High School. Majoring in International Studies at Juniata, Lisa said, "I was honored to learn of being chosen to represent the senior class. This will add to my great memories of my years at J.C."

Kim Detwiler is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Detwiler and will be escorted by James Van Buren. Kim is from Altoona and a 1982 graduate of Altoona Area High School. Majoring in Management and Marketing at Juniata, Kim commented, "I feel honored to be in Homecoming because the entire event and weekend is very special and this way I feel more a part of it."

Robin Bird is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Bird and will be escorted by Michael Azar. Robin is from Holsopple and a 1982 graduate of Conemaugh Township High School. At Juniata, Robin is concentrating on General Management/Computer Programming. About being selected for Homecoming, Robin commented, "I am really psyched to be on the Homecoming court. Thanks to everyone who voted for me."

CASE Addresses Alcohol Abuse

By Virginia Krall

There is a growing student concern sweeping campuses all over the nation. It has nothing to do with studies, relationships, divestiture of South African stock or even financial aid. However, it deals with the most abused drug used today by virtually every college student in the world-alcohol.

Juniata also shares this concern with thousands of others and here is what JC students are doing; they are becoming involved with the Committee for Alcohol Studies and Education or CASE.

CASE is a group of concerned and active students who aim to encourage responsible drinking behavior and also work to provide positive peer support to help other students evaluate their drinking habits and attitudes. It is important to note that CASE does not want to abolish alcohol consumption-they want to promote mature behaviors while you drink. The motto of CASE is "If you choose to drink, drink responsibly."

Educational and social programs CASE has sponsored in the past include "Don't Drive Drunk Week", The "JC Spirit Fair", non-alcoholic cocktail parties and the ever popular "Juniata Punch Bowl".

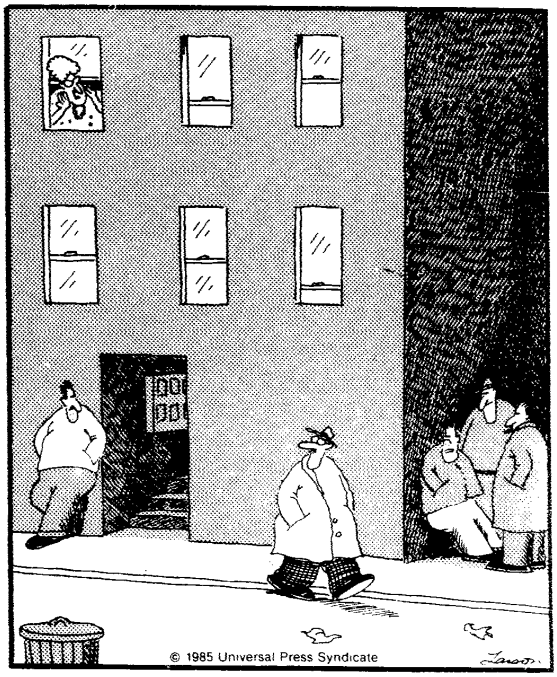
How can you become involved? Come to the first CASE meeting on Thurs. Oct. 17 in the Faculty Lounge. This is your opportunity to support alcohol awareness among Juniata students through a supportive peer group.

Help CASE awaken Juniata's campus to the harsh adult realities of alcohol abuse and to reach out to potential drunk drivers before their victims become statistics!

Persons who are interested in joining CASE but cannot make this meeting should contact Ginny Krall or Caren Ogrisek for more information.

Message Board Ordered

Centerboard has come up with an alternative to the P.A. system for advertising student organizations in the cafeteria. Centerboard is planning to purchase a running message board, similar to the ones at McDonalds and Wendys. The message board will be installed beneath the clock in Baker Refectory. The board will be rather small, measuring about four feet long. The message board will cost Centerboard a great deal of money, but they believe that it will be worth the cost. The board will be computer programmed. Student organizations will be able to rent space on the message board to publicize their meetings and activities. Students will be able to rent space for personal messages also. Centerboard believes that this means of publicizing events will be more effective than the P.A. announcements, which are usually not heard by the students.



"Sidney! I made a mistake! ... Deposit the $50 check into savings, and put the $500 in cash into checking!"

Prospective Students Inspect JC Campus

by Cinny Cooper

A good crop of prospective students visited Juniata College last Saturday and Monday. The Open House and Visitor's Day were sponsored by the Admissions Department.

Twenty families attended Saturday's Open House. Because of Monday's Visitor's Day and the "admissions year" being still quite young, Saturday's group was "not as large as in the past," said Chris Collins, Admissions Counselor.

The Juniata visitors toured the campus Saturday morning. Other activities included a department fair with representatives from various academic disciplines on hand to answer questions and a panel of students to talk about campus life.

Approximately 28 families attended Monday's Visitor's Day. Students sat in on classes and were given tours. A financial aid seminar took place during the afternoon and students were interviewed by Admission Counselors.

Collins was generally pleased with the days'events. He noted that the visiting high school seniors were of a "quality higher than in the past." Not only were their academic credentials good, but their preparation for the campus visit was evident in the questions they asked, explained Collins.

Men's I.M. Softball Action

By Andy Hiscock

The Intramural Men's Softball League was in action two days last week. Despite a number off lopsided scores, the league seems to be fairly even depending on what day you see a game. Every team has at least one win and the teams at the bottom of the standigs have already displayed the talent to give the league leaders a fight.

On Saturday, October 6th, "Mincues" picked up their first victory of the season by defeating "B.B.A." in a slugfest 14-12. "The Mincue's" were trailing the entire game but put together a spectacular comeback effort. In the 6th inning, they rallied for 7 rund to pull themselves within 2 runs. In the last inning, they capped their comeback with 4 runs to pick up the win. League leading "Softballs" remained undefeated (5-0) as they had no trouble with "Fresh & Honest" by the score of 11-1. "Softballs" picked up 4 runs in the 1st inning which proved to be enough for the win. They scored 8 of their 11 runs in the first three innings of the game. Dan Sunderland played an excellent defensive game at shortstop for "The Softballs". "Return of the Trout" also won their game versus "The Biffs" 12-3 to hold onto second place in the league. Shawn Wescott played a good offensive game and Eric Lane provided continual verbal support for the "Trout".

On Thursday, October 10th, "Softballs" came from behind to defeat "B.B.A." 21-15. "Softballs" scored 5 runs in the 6th inning to tie up the score at 14-14. In the last inning, tney kept rolling with 7 more runs to win. "The Biffs" picked up their first victory of the season when "Fresh & Honest" forfeited. "Return of the Trout" held off "Mincue's" to pick up their fifth win of the season and remain in 2nd place in the league.

"Mincue's" jumped out to a quick lead with two runs in the first, but "the Trout" came right back with 4 in the 2nd. "The Trout" tacked on two more runs in the 4th and despite runs in the 3rd and 5th innings, "Mincue's" never regained the lead.

I.M. Co-Rec Volleyball

By Andy Hiscock

The two Intramural Co-Rec Volleyball leagues are well into their fall season now, and the competition for the play-of berths is already becoming evident as many of the matches are being pushed to the third game.

B-League was in action Wednesday, October 9th with four matches being scheduled. "Staff Infection" remained undefeated (6-0) and held onto its first place spot in the league by defeating "Wonder Buns" 15-12, 15-7. Ed Kaminsky displayed good hustle and Bill Latimore played a soilid game for the Staff. "Missionaries" were also able to keep pace with the league leaders with a hard fought victory over "Merlin's Minstrels" 15-11, 15-13. Lynn Forwood had a good defensive game ("digging") and Eric Rome accounted for a number of the scoring for the victors. In another match, "Phase-9" climbed over the .500 mark with a victory over "Mix-n-Match" 15-10, 15-5. "Phase-9 Captain Karen Bennett had a good serve and was strong at the net for the winners. "Comedy of Errors" defeated "Tomer's Awesome Team" by Forfeit.

League A was in action on Thursday, October 10th. "Rag-Tags" defeated "Darrylects" 15-7, 15-6 to keep to stay in the hunt for the league championship. Wes Harpold played a solid game both defensively and offensively for "The Rag-Tags". "Thankews" held onto first place in the league (6-1) with a match win over "371-09M" 15-6, 14-16, 11-0. "371-09M" fought back in the second game of the match to win, but "Thankews" displayed their league leading power in the third game and put everything together to blank their opponents. "The Mad-Spikers" kept pace with the leader and picked up a victory over "Longshots" 15-4, 15-8 to remain in second place in the league with a season record of (5-1). Jan Trissler was unstoppable at the net for "The Spikers". In the final game "Wipeouts" fought off "The Jaggers" to win their match 15-12, 15-9. Amy Clark did a good job of setting up the front line in both games.

Indians Strike Fear Into Hearts Of W. Maryland 'Green Terrors' 43-7

By Joe Scialabba

Juniata made it three wins in a row last Saturday with a 43-7 bombing of hosting Western Maryland.

The Indians broke open the non-conference game early in the second quarter and never looked back. The Tribe is now 4-2, and the Green Terrors are 0-4.

Juniata jumped out to a 15-0 lead on Mike Culver touchdown passes of 17 yards to Morgan Johns and 11 yards to Mike Cottle in the first quater. Mike Schaffner kicked his first of five extra points and holder Rich Howey passed to Jim Metz for a two-point conversion to build the early advantage.

Western Maryland got back in the game momentarily following an interception when they went 31 yards in six plays to score on a 3-yard pass from Scott Bassett to Larry Smith with 9:42 left in the half. The score 15-7 lasted just 2:30.

The Indians took the ensuing kickoff and scored after a 6-play, 74-yard drive. Culver hit Cottle from 6 yards to cap the drive that was highlighted by a 66-yard pass to HB Greg Townsend.

"The pass to Townsend was a key," said Juniata Coach Rob Ash. "They had a chance to get back in the game. It was a third down play and we really needed a first down, but got alot more. We broke their momentum and put the game in our back pocket."

"We really got beat on the long pass," said Western Maryland's Jack Molesworth. "We thought they'd run and didn't expect that much passing. Their big plays hurt us and turnovers killed us."

One of four Juniata interceptions of Terror passes came on the forst play after the third Indian score. Safety Paul Kutches picked off his first off two passes at the Terror 25. Culver threw his fourth TD pass, a 10-yarder to Johns, five plays later.

"I am really happy with our passing game," said Ash. "Our passing has been improving gradually throughout the year, and this was one of our best performances in a long time. It combined well with a steady running game."

Culver hit 11 of 22 passes for 215 yards, using five different receivers. He also ran for 12 yards and added a 1-yard touchdown in the third quarter to finish with 227 yards total offense.

"Mike had his second good game in a row," said Ash. "We had to pass well to win. I was impressed with their ability to stop our run. We just passed well enough to blow it open."

Freshman halfback Brian Mylett, who rushed for 55-yards off the bench, finished the scoring with a two yard run in the final staza. The Indians complimented their aerial attack witha steady 167 yards rushing.

Western Maryland could muster only 58 yards on the ground and 67 yards passing. "We got physically whipped," said Molesworth. "We hoped to pass and run the sweep, but they stopped us pretty well."

"We are getting consistent efforts on defense," said Ash. "We were powerful against the run and our pass defense was ooportunistic. We are not just stopping people, but controlling the field and creating things."

"It's really great that we have some momentum now that's carrying over from one week to the next. This was a good time for a letdown, and it didn't happen. This is not a real high and low type team; they seem to play at an even keel."

All-American hopeful Gino Perri led the defense with 12 tackles, while Bob Crossey had 11. Rich Howey, who set up Juniata's opening score, and Tim Kirsch each had interceptions to go with Lou Komer's fumble recovery.

The defense which is tops in the Middle Atlantic Conference, will have a tough test this Saturday against Wilkes. The Homecoming kickoff is set for 1:30 p.m. at Juniata's College Field.

Keeper Kevin White makes a good save. Defense is the soccer team's best game, but the offense has been lacking. In an effort to shore up the attack Coach (Jaeger) has moved deffensemen Steve Grater and Mike Gifford to offense and dropped Sean Ruth to stopper. John Kun will replace Grater as wing fullback.

Lady Indians Place 2nd In Tournament Juniata Invitational This Weekend

This past weekend the J.C. Volleyball squad competed in the Loyola Invitational. Once again our ladies did an outstanding job and fought their way to the Finals against strong Division #1 and #2 schools.

On Friday, October 11th our ladies opened the tournament versus Robert Morris, a Division #1 school from Pittsburgh with a strong straight game victory 15-4, 15-3. Next the Indians met Navy, a Division #2 school ranked second in the East. Our ladies fought tough and came back after a first game loss 8-15 to win the match with two strong games 15-13, 15-11. Our ladies would meet up with Navy again in the Finals. In the third match on Friday, the Indians faced Howard, a Division #1 school from Washington. Our ladies were in control of the match the entire time and won 15-9, 15-8.

On Saturday, the Indians met up with the University of Delaware (Division #2). Our ladies coasted to a 15-7, 15-8 match victory. We then took on a strong Towson State University (Division #1-Maryland). We won the match 2 games to 1- 15-4, 11-15, 15-8 to earn a spot in the semi-finals.

J.C. met the University of maryland, baltimore County (Division #2) in the semi-finals. The Indians won the match in straight games 15-4, 15-9 to reach the Finals.

Here the Indians met up with Navy (Div. #2) for the second time in the tournament. The Navy team proved to be too strong as they defeated the Indians 7-15 in the first game. The Indians didn't give up and fought in the second game but came up short 13-15. Second place in a tournament with Division #1 and #2 teams is quite an accomplishment and signifies the strength of Juniata as one of the best Division #3 schools in the Country!

Next on J.C.'s schedule is the Indian Invitational to be held in the Kennedy Sports + Recreation Center this Friday and Saturday (18th and 19th). Five teams will competing in the round-robin type play. On Friday, J.C. will meet Edinboro State at 6 p.m.. Edinboro is a strong Division #2 school. At 8 p.m. J.C. will play York College. On Saturday morning (11 a.m.) the Indians will meet Duquesne (Division #2). The big match will be at 7 p.m. when the sparks will fly as Juniata College, ranked #6 in the nation squares off against probably the #1 ranked Division #3 school in the nation, Grove City. This match is sure to provide plenty of action and top-notch play.

I urge everyone to attend this weekend's volleyball action that will prove to be both exciting and dramatic and will showcase the Juniata Indians as they fight to be the best Division #3 school in the nation. Good Luck Ladies.

Nancy Kulp to Teach at JC

Nancy Kulp has played a variety of roles on stage, screen and television, but when she enters the classrooms of Juniata College in November, she will be "appearing" as Artist in Residence for the winter and spring terms.

Teaching will be an entirely new role for the gifted actress, best known for her long-running portayal of Jane Hathaway on the hit television comedy series "The Beverly Hillbillies." During Juniata's winter term, Ms. Kulp will be teaching courses on the history of motion pictures, and television in America. The spring term will find her teaching advanced acting, as well as directing the college's spring theatrical production.

"Ms. Kulp's presence at Juniata will provide our students with a unique learning opportunity," said Dr. Frederick M. Binder, Juniata's president. "We continuously strive to enhance our academic program, and having such a talented actress teach at Juniata will be a marvelous experience."

A Pennsylvanian by birth and heritage, Ms. Kulp is a graduate of Florida State University and a U.S. Navy veteran, reaching the rank of Lieutenant in the USNR (WAVES). She makes her home in Port Royal, Pa.

In addition to "The Beverly Hillbillies," the Emmy Award nominee starred in "The Bob Cummings Show" in the 1950s and "The Brian Keith Show' in the '70s. She also has appeared in episodes of such popular television shows as "I Love Lucy," "The Love Boat," "Sanford & Son," "The Twilight Zone," "Playhouse 90" and "G.E. Theater."

Ms. Kulp has appeared in five Academy Award winning motion pictures — "The Parent Trap," "A Star is Born," "Sabrina," "The Three Faces of Eve" and "Shane." In addition, she was featured in "The Model and the Marriage Broker" with Thelma Ritter, Jeanne Crain and Zero Mostel, "Steeltown" with Ann Sheridan, "Count Three and Pray" with Joanne Woodward, "Strange Bedfellows" with Rock Hudson and five films with Jerry Lewis.

On Broadway, Ms. Kulp starred in "Mornings at Seven." She also has performed in stage productions of "Oklahoma!," "Pippin," "Luv," "Butterflies Are Free," "Happiest Days of Your Life," "Busybody" and "The Wizard of Oz." Currently, she serves on the board of the Screen Actors Guild.

"I have always enjoyed being in an academic environment," said Ms. Kulp. "Juniata is a beautiful college with an excellent academic reputation. I can't think of a better place to teach."

Juniata College Takes A Bite of the "Big Apple"

by Lauralee Snyder

The glory of Homecoming '85 shown through the gloomy clouds this past weekend as alumni and trustees returned to Juniata to celebrate the occasion.

The events literally "kicked off" at 2:00 Friday with powder-puff football. No sophomores showed up for the event, so the freshmen girls played against themselves. The seniors won the battle in their gama with the juniors. A fun time was had by all as the girls tried their hand at football.

The East Street Fair was a new twist added to JC Homecoming events. Most booths featured foods such as carmel apples, crepes, and cookies. A pie throwing booth gave the students a chance to spite their RAs. A dunking machine and an airlift also added to the exhibits. The fair lasted about two hours and was DJed by V103.

The cheerleaders sponsored their annual Pep Rally Friday night to get everyone psyched for all the sporting events on Saturday. Introduction of the Homecoming candidates and their escorts, cheers and dances by the cheerleaders, and speeches by team captains highlighted the pep rally.

On Saturday morning the rain held off long enough for the annual parade. The seniors won the float competition as all the classes showed off their floats bragging the Big Apple - New York, New York theme. The JC Band and Cloister Kazoo Band participated in the parade as well as all the Homecoming Candidates.

Food service put their special touch on the weekend as they featured New York Deli style food at lunch time on Saturday. Some out of the ordinary dishes included specialty salads, fresh fruits, deli sandwiches and hot pretzels.

Nancy Briggs was chosen as the 1985 Homecoming Queen between rain showers at halftime of the football game. Court representatives were freshman Colleen Lenick, sophomore Alicia Cicotti, junior Marie Rose, and senior Kim Detwiler.

The Wild Video Dance Party was held Saturday night in the Intramural Gymnasium. Despite the sudden change in the alcohol policy that prohibited alcoholic beverages from being served, students enjoyed watching videos on 2 15-ft. screens.

Events concluded Sunday with the girls Rugby team against Penn State. The JC girls lost but had a fun-filled game.

Overall Homecoming '85 was a huge success. The Homecoming Committee was chaired by Bridget Berich.

Editorial

We Get No Respect

The editors of The Juniatian feel that our newspaper is not appreciated nor supported enough by the student body. The editors have tremendous difficulty in getting any reporters at all, much less ones that can be relied upon. We often find ourselves making up for the lack of reporters by writing the articles ourselves in addition to putting in an average of five to six hours a week organizing, typing, and laying out each issue.

Being involved with the campus newspaper has many advantages, especially for those interested in the English or communications field. Writing an article a week usually takes no more than one hour and provides an opportunity to meet many students, administration, and faculty. Additionally, the editors are interested in teaching reporters how to use The Juniatian's new computer system.

For those of you who are not reporters at heart but do wish to express their opinion through a letter to the editor or wish to submit information or an article for their club or organization, you are more than welcome to drop a legibly written copy off in The Juniatian office on the Monday before they wish to have it published. We have many people say that they want to write a letter to the editor and even though we encourage them and tell them how to do it, the letter never gets written. The Juniatian is the perfect tool for expressing your views -please take the time to use it.

In the future, we would like to incorporate some new ideas and perhaps even extend the paper to twelve pages. However, we cannot begin to utilize these ideas with the apparent apathy towards the newspaper.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

This is to inform the students of Juniata that on Friday, Oct. 18, at 3 p.m., we, the co-chairpersons of the Center Board Dance Committee, were told that alcohol would not be served at the Homecoming Video Dance. It was not our intent, therefore, to deceive anyone who had purchased tickets prior to 35 hours before the dance, or those who attended the dance without knowing about the change in policy.

We would like to take this opportunity to thank the members of our committee. We appreciate their support and the work they put into this dance. It is unfortunate that the Dance Committee as a whole did not receive a formal explanation from the administration on this policy.

Sincerely,
Carol Connell
Becky Olson
Co-chairmen of Center Board's Dance Committee

Apologies

What is your opinion of the new bookstore hours?

Susan Kipp (senior): "Between 5 and 7 used to be really convient hours to go. So, I think it's ridiculous that they took them away."

Phil Schlegel (sophomore): "I think it should be open until 7 like it was last year because most people cannot get there until after dinner."

Stephanie Mills (junior): "I don't think it's made much of a difference. After 5 is when people are still eating and it doesn't get used much."

Bob Adams (senior): "As a cost cutting measure reduced hours are a good idea but I feel that the hours should be changed to 10-6 to rate more practical for students' schedules."

Vince Anselmo (junior): "It's better for the workers but it really does not affect me."

Sue White (sophomore): "I liked it better when it was open until 7 because that's when I had time to go in and take my time without a big crowd."

Club Funding Announced

By Mary McDougall

Under the present 1985-86 budget, only 13 of the 25 small clubs on campus will receive funds from Student Government, announced Tom Trent, chairperson of the budget and management committee, at last Tuesday's Student Government meeting.

The 13 clubs aided by Student Government have been appropriated a total of $2175 for 1985-86. Trent reports that, for the 12 clubs which received no money, there are a possible three reasons for the decision:

1) The club officers did not submit a budget for 1985-86 or did not attend the meeting scheduled by the budget and management committee to discuss the club's budget.
2) The club showed a deficit for 1984-85.
3) The club's budget showed that expected revenues are higher than expected expenses.

This budget is solely concerned with small clubs and does not include the "Big Five" clubs (V103, The Juniatian, Alfarata, Kvasir, and Laughing Bush) which are completely funded by Student Government.

"The purpose of Student Government club funding is not to be the sole support of the club," Trent said. "It is meant to make up the difference between what the club can generate and what it needs."

Trent also stressed that clubs that weren't budgeted to receive funds in the present budget will be able to receive money if they resubmit a budget for winter term.

"There are funds set aside for these clubs as well as for any new clubs," said Trent.

Trent also reported that the budget and management committee is considering a club loan program to help clubs with a shortage of money initiate fund-raisers. It is also considering a matching funds scheme for small clubs and funding for the four classes.

WASHINGTON—Top administration advisors have told President Reagan he will go to the summit with Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev next month with the "strongest hand of any prsident since Eisenhower." That assesment was based on these two factors: —Continuing economic problems for the Soviet Union, forcing it to try to hold defense costs at the present level, avoiding the huge expense of developing new weapons programs. —A reversal in the recent military balance, with the United States threatening to move ahead of the soviets in some areas.

Pulchritude does not exist below the surface of the derma.

By Joe Scialabba

I was happy to learn this past weekend that alumni have as much trouble remembering our names as we do remembering their names.

Still, despite this, I was a little uptight that I couldn't be specific in some conversations. But, I guess that happened to a lot of us, didn't it?

Of course, if you were like most that forgot names this weekend you found a way to get around using them.

You might have given the plain: "Hi! How are you? Nice to see you."

Or, you may have gone the little more direct, but still not specific, route: "So, what are you up to? Do you like being out of school? Do you enjoy your job?"

Maybe you were placed in a "must know the name situation." You know, the ones when the person just flat out dares you: "You don't know my name, do you?" There weren't many ways to get out of that one.

But, you could have twisted your response enough to at least not offend the person. If the person started with their first name you could have jumped in quickly: "I knew that! I just couldn't remember your last name." Or vice versa.

No matter what the specifics, I think it is safe to say that many people were on both ends of the boat this past weekend. I guess it's really no big deal.

One thing that does bother me is that most of us never had enough time to see everyone that we knew was back.

I got tired of having people ask me if I saw "so and so," and I didn't. Whose fault is it? Mine or their's?

I spent so much time talking this weekend there was barely enough time to splash my dry throat with beverage. Then, when I finally fell victim to my indulgence I was questioned for not being out late enough to see everyone. It was the long hours trying to see everyone that sent me to bed exhausted early Sunday morning!

How can a student win in this Homecoming game? I guess nobody knows because when I asked an alum on Sunday at McDonalds she had the same question I had.

"It is impossible," she said.

As I finish this edition of Muddy Run I think of all the people that I will eventually forget and wonder: "Will they forget me?"

"You know they will," she said.

STASH YOUR TRASH

Counselor's Corner

by Dr. Jay Buchanan

Most people are familiar with the terms assertiveness and aggressiveness. Unfortunately, many cannot make the distinction between being assertive and being aggressive. All too often, the two are used interchangeably when in fact they are the complete opposite of each other. Aggressiveness pays off on the athletic field but cllearly has no place in one's interpersonal relations.

Psychologists Robert Alberti and Michael Emmons, in their book, Your Perfect Right, make the important distinction between the two behaviors. They suggest that aggressive behavior oftentimes, results in a "put-down" of another person. The aggressive person is not concerned about the rights or feelings of the other person, but only in achieving his/her own personal goals. By contrast, the assertive approach takes the rights and feelings of the other party into consideration.

The point of all this is that we can learn to be more assertive and we can learn to be less aggressive. In both situations, we will be more satisfied with ourselves and happier in our relations with others.

Alberti and Emmons tell us that there are barriers to being assertive. They include the belief by many that they don't have the right to be assertive. Another barrier is that many people become highly anxious when thinking about being assertive. Finally, many people lack the social skills required to effectively express themselves.

Consistant with these barriers it has been my experience over the years in working with college students that much of the anxiety, depression and low self-concept experienced by many college students is due to an inability to cope in interpersonal situations. In other words, when we don't know how to behave in certain situations, we become anxious and behave inappropriately.

In the next article we will examine the five dimensions of assertive behavior and also look at other strategies toward being assertive.

Short Story Contest Rewards Creativity

Creative writers are invited to enter the 1986 Raymond Carver Short Story Contest sponsored by Humboldt State University.

The winner will receive a $250 cash prize and publication in "Toyon '86," Humboldt's literary magazine.

Submissions are limited to one unpublished, fictional story, not to exceed 25 double-spaced pages. Two copies of the manuscript should be sent with the author's name, address and title of the story, typed on a cover sheet. Deadline is December 1, 1985.

Entry fee is $5 payable to the Raymond Carver Short Story Contest. All entries should be mailed to Carver Contest, c/o Department of English, Humboldt State University, Arcata, CA 95521.

Writers should also include two self-addressed, stamped envelopes for notification of receipt of manuscript and announcement of winners and runners-up. Manuscripts will not be returned.

The judge for the 1986 Raymond Carver Short Story Contest is Charles Baxter. Baxter is an author who has received a National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) Grant and a Guggenheim Fellowship. His stories have been published in such anthologies as "The Best American Short Stories 1982," edited by John Gardner, and in "The Pushcart Prize VII: Best of the Small Presses."

Baxter is the author of two books of poetry called "Chameleon," and "The South Dakota Guidebook." His collection of short stories, "Harmony of the World," was the first place winner of the sixth annual Associated Writing Program award series in short fiction 1984. "Through the Safety Net," Baxter's second collection of short stories, was published in 1985.

The HSU contest has been established in the name of award-winning writer and Humboldt State alumnus Raymond Carver.

Carver's books include "Cathedral," "What We Talk About When We Talk About Love," "Fires," and "Will You Please Be Quiet, Please?," which was nominated for a national book award.

Carver is a Guggenheim fellow and was awarded NEA grants for both fiction and poetry. He recently left his teaching position at Syracuse University to accept a five-year Strauss Livings Grant, which allows him to write full-time.

Exchange Students at J.C.: Ralf and Helen

by Terri Smith

This week's featured exchange students are Ralf Tolle and Helen Hodgson.

Ralf is from Marburg University in Germany. When he was attending Marburg, he was active in water polo and was on a dorm soccer team. At Juniata, he is a member of the International Club, and enjoys playing tennis and swimming.

He compared Juniata with a "German boarding school" because both have campuses and Juniata is much smaller than Marburg, a university of 16,000 students.

Goslar, Ralf's hometown, is a one thousand year old city in the northeastern part of West Germany. One of the streets in particular is a totally intact Medieval city street lined with framework housing; there are no modern buildings on it at all.

Ralf has two more years before he graduates with a Master's degree. He then hopes to pursue a PhD. He would like to stay in the University and work in the Pharmaceutical industry.

Helen is a Business major from Humberside College, also known as Hull College, in England. According to Professor Jim Donaldson, advisor for most of the Business exchange students, their required classes are somewhat different from most business student's courses. While here, the English students are required to take Marketing and the French must take Financial Management I and II.

Compared with Humberside, Helen finds Juniata more difficult; Humberside students are much less pressured until the end of the school year when they have their finals. The business students have exams once a year and spend the remainder of the year writing term papers.

At Juniata Helen is involved in the International Club, for which she served as chairperson at their booth during Homecoming's Street Fair (which she says did "quite well." They made a profit). She is also a member of Juniata's Executive Club, is on the Film Committee, and plays on an intramural soccer team. While at Humberside, Helen was involved only in the badmitton club because there was "not that much to do. It's easier to get involved in things here."

Helen is from Norton, located 60 miles south of Newcastle. Her out-of-school activities included being a Girl Scout "Guide," as they are called in England.

After graduating, she hopes to work in a media field related to advertising and management. For now, given the choice of continuing her education at Humberside or Juniata, Helen would choose Juniata - "Definitely."

A.V. Policy Changes for Yamaha

By Kathy Guerin

The Juniata College Center Board, owner of the Yamaha and Sunn systems, has changed the policy concerning the uses of this equipment.

Due to the current upheaval in Juniata'a Audio/Visual Department, the risk of damage and liability of Center Board, these changes were deemed necessary.

The policy is as follows:

1. The Yamaha system will only be permitted to be used for live music, band practices, Center Board events and for formal events. The Sunn system will be permitted to be used at campus parties.

2. To be permitted the use of either the Yamaha or Sunn systems there must be a trained person present to set up and work the system.

3. The cost of the Yamaha system is $30 for a minimum of three hours and there will be an additional charge of $10 for each hour after the initial three hours. The Sunn system will remain free.

4. In the event of damage:

a.) Damage is defined as the willful damage or abuse of system. (i.e. blowing the speakers).

b.) In case of damage to either system, Center Board will help the group pay for one half of the total damage cost. the group that was using the system will be responsible for the other half of the damage cost.

c.) After each use the systems will be checked to make sure the system is returned in the same condition that it left in.

5. This policy will go into affect November 21, 1985. This policy was brought into effect by Center Board on October 9, 1985.

Area Doctor to Lecture On AIDS Controversy

Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (A.I.D.S.) will be the topic of a lecture presented at Juniata College Tuesday, Oct. 29 at 7 p.m. at Alumni Hall, Brumbaugh Science Center.

Dr. David Schooley, medical director of the South Central District, Pennsylvania Department of Health will be the speaker at the free lecture sponsored as a public service by the Juniata College Student Health Center.

A member of the Department of Health staff for the past eight years, Dr. Schooley formerly practiced medicine in McVeytown. He is a graduate of The Pennsylvania State University and received his medical degree from the Philadelphia College of Osteopathic Medicine.

While working for the Department of Health, Dr. Schooley has been active in the A.I.D.S. education program. He has regular contact with the National Center for Disease Contol in Atlanta, obtaining the most current information on A.I.D.S. research.

In his lecture, Dr. Schooley will report on the latest A.I.D.S. research and attempt to dispel many of the myths surrounding the much publicized and controversial disease. The public is cordially invited to attend this informative lecture.

Autumnfest

On Saturday, October 26th, Center Board's S.N.A.P. Committee is holding its annual AUTUMNFEST. The bus will leave for Camp Blue Diamond at 6:45 p.m. from in front of Ellis Saturday evening. Entertainment will include the Allegheny String Band, square dancing, and hay rides. Such traditional autumn refreshments as apple cider and doughnuts will be served. Sign up at the Information desk by Wednesday, October 23rd. Autumnfest is FREE.

Halloween Spirit— Catch It Friday Night

by Laura Mumaw

What's worse than being tormented by a masked, murderous, demented, bloodthirsty psychopath on one of the scariest nights of the year? That's easy! Having this horrible nightmare return to finish the job as you are freaking out in the safe(?) recluse of your local hospital. Once again the "queen of scream," Jamie Lee Curtis returns for more abuse as she is forced to fight yet another grueling battle between beauty and the beast in Halloween II.

In this sequel to Halloween, Miss Curtis finds herself racing through the secluded(?) corridors of a hospital, once again pursued by a masked monster. As she desperately searches for means to protect herself (a stray meat cleaver or a handy hypodermic needle might do), her tormentor terrorizes the hospital staff (lots of gross little scenes for you blood and gore lovers).

The mad doctor returns as well, hoping to put an end to this horror. He also succeeds in lending a little insight to the earlier years of everyones favorite psychopath, or Michael as he cares to refer to him. He too risks life and limb to put this monster out of business. Permanently!

Definitely a movie to thrill and chill. Especially as we near this Halloween season.

Halloween II will be shown in Oller Hall, Fri., Oct. 25, at 7:30 p.m.

Indians Run Away With Football Victory

by Joe Scialabba

Juniata moved another step closer to a Middle Atlantic Conference title shot last Saturday with a 34-6 Homecoming win over Wilkes at College Field.

The Indians won their fourth straight game and raised their record to 5-2 overall, and 4-1 in the MAC. Wilkes is 3-3 overall and in the conference.

The Tribe once again relied on solid defense and an opportunistic offense, scoring in two seperate bursts and creating six Colonel turnovers (five interceptions).

The first clump of scores came as the Indians built a 21-0 halftime lead in just a 4:03 span, starting late in the first period. Quarterback Mike Culver threw two 6-yard touchdown passes to Mike Cottle before Gregg Townsend sprinted 33 yards following a Wilkes' punt to score on the second play of the second quarter.

Clayton Carlin set up the second score with the first of his two interceptions, returning the initial pickoff to the Colonel 19 yard line. Carlin began the second half scoring spurt with an interception and return to the Wilkes' 44 in the third period.

Fullback Ian Malee capped a 4-play drive on a 7-yard TD run with 4:46 left in the quarter. A minute later, Malee ran 23 yards on the next possession to put the game out of reach. An extra point pass failed, after Mike Schaffner had hit all five previous PAT kicks.

"It was a very satisfying game," said Juniata coach Rob Ash. "I was happy with the overall effort. Wilkes was fired up and well prepared, but we got out of the early fury without giving up a score."

Wilkes had two good chances to score first. After the opening kickoff, the Colonels moved to the Juniata 23 before running out of downs. Then, after Culver fumbled at the JC 27, Wilkes was on the 20 yard line when Indian linebacker Brian Warren recovered a fumble and let the Tribe get out of trouble.

"Field position turned around to our favor," said Ash. "Our defense started to create opportunities and then we converted them into touchdowns. Our special teams also played very well."

Mark Dorner set up the first Indian score with a 26-yard punt return to the Colonels' 33. It took just five plays to cover the distance as Culver hit Townsend for 8 yards and Cottle for 14 yards, both for first downs, before passing for the first of two aerial scores. Culver connected on 9 of 13 first half passes.

"They were very run conscious and gambled on the passing game," said Ash. "We wanted to throw first to loosen them up and then run later. If we would not have passed well we might have been in trouble."

But, the Indian passing game opened things up for the ground game. Halfback Rick Bouch had 58 yards on just five tries, with a 35-yard run sparking a third quarter TD drive. Malee gained 57 yards, and Townsend, who was injured in the third quarter, rushed for 52 yards and caught 3 passes for 28 yards.

Juniata totaled 187 yards on the ground with 157 yards passing. Wilkes managed only 24 yards rushing and 182 passing, despite a school record 22-of-49 aerial barrage.

"Our two lines played well," said Ash. "Defensively, we stuffed their running game and pressured the quarterback. Offensively, we ran and passed well."

Wilkes scored their only points on a fourth-quarter pass.

"This was a good game for us," added Ash. "It was not a cakewalk, and we had to work hard. We played another physical game, and we should be ready for the next two weeks."

Juniata travels to Delaware Valley this Saturday before playing MAC leader Lycoming in Williamsport on November 2. The Tribe returns home the following Saturday against Susquehanna.

The women's cross country team was on the road last weekend competing at the Allentown Invitational. Finishing fourth out of 12 teams, the ladies brought home a trophy for their efforts. Kris Smith received a medal, finishing in third place overall, and Sue Gill (11th) was also a medalist. Shelly Steke (17th), Julie Drummond (38th) and Kim Esh (42nd) all ran strong races to boosl the team's final standings.

The women (4-3) will be traveling to Lock Haven and then Western Maryland as they prepare for M.A.C.s.

Lady Indians Volleyball Battle to the End

Ladies put together unbelievable comeback effort that just falls short

By Andy Hiscock

UNBELIEVABLE!! I don't know where to start. I'm glad I'm writing this article rather than speaking, because my voice still isn't right after last weekend's Juniata Invitational. I may sound like a broken record when I say that the Lady Indians once again were spectacular this past weekend, but it's true. Week after week our ladies "dig down" and come up with an even more impressive showing than the week before. Well, not everyone got to see the Homecoming tournament (too bad!) so let me try to recap the action.

The Lady Indians opened the tournament on Friday night with a strong 3-0 match victory over Division 2 Edinboro State. J.C. looked sharp, and worked the ball smoothly to win the first game 15-10. The second game went much the same way with the Indians jumping out to a quick lead on strong play at the net by Cathy Miller and Carolyn Stambaugh which allowed Coach Bock to intergrate underclassmen into the match. Sophomore Jodi Fox and Freshman Jackie Rebert providing powerful a scoring tandem for the Indians. By game 3, even the less experienced players began to work together and steadily broke serves and created scoring opportunities for the 15-5 victory. Junior Lori Bason played a solid game with added playing time both offensively and defensively, while freshmen Maria Tweardy 'setting' and Heather Pruim also having a strong outing.

Later on Friday (8 p.m.), the Indians met York College. Our ladies continued to roll with three decisive game victories 15-1, 15-8, 15-1 for their second match victory. J.C. excells at moving the ball around the court to set up the most opportune scoring opportunity, and this match was no exception. Sophomore Beth Hoppel 'mixed-up' the plays dispersing the sets to so many different players coming off the bench along with a few dink's of her own to keep York guessing the entire match. Once, again, underclassmen were able to get in the match and continued the scoring show. Sophomore Brenda Heiland and Freshmen Maria Tweardy and Dana Worthington had solid games coming off the bench. With Tweardy 'setting', Brenda put down a few strong cross court spikes and Dana Worthington played strong on defense making some good 'digs'.

On Saturday, the Indians picked up where they left off the night before as they defeated Division 2 Duquesne in three straight games. The Indians were unstoppable in the first game and cruised to a 15-0 victory. The second game was closer, but our ladies still appeared to be in total control of the game, with just a few flaws in their timing allowing their opponents to stay close. Junior Diana Hauger made here presence felt as she had her serve humming again and was resposible for a string of points. Senior Dorene Duncan was solid in the backcourt and Sophomore Mariella Gacka continued her solid play as she had throughout the tournament with some spikes right down the line as the Indians went on to win game 2 15-12, and game three 15-7.

The stage was now set for the last match against 2 ranked Grove City (division 3) and J.C. who I believe are now ranked 7 in the nation in division 3. The good sized crowd expected an action packed rematch between two of the top Division 3 schools in the country with the Indians coming into the match having not lost a game in the tournament and Grove City only losing one. Things did not start out well for the Indians, with Grove City creeping out to an early 4 point lead in the first two games. Our ladies fought back the entire time, but were just not able to climb out of the early hole as points were were exchanged as well as alot of service swapping without scoring which took its toll on both teams as the games dragged on but continued at the grueling intensity in which they began. The Indians lost the first two games 8-15, 11-15.

The Indians now began their spectacular comeback effort. The Indians appeared to be at the top of their game in game 3 as they commanded the entire game with an offense that combined powerful spiking and a finesse game that placed the ball where their opponents weren't. Jr. Mariella Gacka combined with So. Beth Hoppel as they set up the offensive plays. Jr.Carolyn Stambaugh, and So. Cathy Miller used the "short set" to catch Grove City off gaurd and either pounded a spike or brushed the ball to the empty middle for a number of points. Game 4 was much the same. J.C. seemed to be in better physical shape then Grove City as the match went on. The Indians fought time and time again to break Grove City's serve and tack on a few points. In order to win, J.C. needed everyone to pull together and have a good game, but I feel that Freshman Jackie Rebert acted as the spirit booster for the team. She was firing spikes down the lines on both sides and made a few shots from deep within her own side as difficult to return as spikes. The Indians won game four 15-5 and had the momentum going into deciding game 5.

Grove City opened up a four point lead 4-1 early in the game, but our ladies never gave up. We broke their serve a number of times, but were plagued by some mistakes of our own such as serves and spikes just out of bounds that kept us from taking a solid grasp in the game and would have demoralized most teams. As the crowd cheered, the Indians slowly clawed their way back. Jr. Mariella Gacka provided a cool head under the tremendous pressure and continued to play solidly as she had throughout the tournament. So. Jodi Cox came up with a few key sets with other people out of position to keep the comeback alive. The physically draining match began to take its toll as two of Grove City's players had to leave the game (dehydration) and Juniata's Cathy Miller sufferred leg cramps.

The Indians took the lead 14-13 and had a chance to win but failed on their attempt, and Grove City came back with two three points to win the game 16-14. Despite the dissapointing loss our ladies should be proud of their accomplishment. A comeback from a 2 game deficit is difficult against any team, and they did it against the 2 ranked team in the nation. They proved not only to the crowd that they can beat Grove City, and displayed strong character as they pulled together after the first two games. It was a total team effort that allowed them to win and will make them a better team in the future.

I think that the effort that the Lady Indians gave Saturday night halped to bring the school a little closer together, and I'm sure that I am not alone when I thank the ladies for the effort that they gave this past weekend and wish them the best of luck for the rest of the season. As I said last year when Juniata rallied from a 2 games to none deficit against the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in the NCAA Division Three National Quarter-finals last year, that old saying, "It doesn't matter whether you win or lose, it's how you play the game" still stands true. As far as I'm concerned, "We may have been outplayed, but we will never be outclassed!!"

Play Brings Shakespeare To Life

By Tina Acri

The National Shakespeare Company enthralled a filled auditorium with their performance of "The Merchant of Venice" on Wednesday evening, Oct. 23.

This was the second of four Artist Series events here at Juniata. The company tours all over the United States, but their home base is in New York City. They have been touring for the past 23 years.

The play itself, "The Merchant of Venice," was an excellent protrayal of one of William Shakespeard's "most popular and controversial plays." The actors and actresses performed tremendously, making it a very entertaining show. Ezra Baines, who played the Launcelot Gobbo, was an outstanding actor and added humor to the scenes.

Jeff Soderstedt, sophomore, felt it was an excellent performance. He commented, "Just reading Shakespeare is boring, but seeing his works on stage makes you appreciate his talents."

The trial scene from "Merchant of Venice" was one of the highlights of last week's Artist Series performance. The National Shakespeare Company put on an outstanding show that thrilled the Juniata community.

Trustees Make Plans And Bestow Honors

by Cinny Cooper

Physical improvements to the Juniata College campus were just one topic discussed at the Trustee meetings held Oct. 22.

According to student representatives Melissa Gronert and Craig Bieler who attended the Building and Grounds Committee meeting, the Trustees are considering the possibility of an entranceway to the college at 18th and Moore Streets. A telephone pole will have to be relocated to do this. The proper authorities are being consulted.

The Trustees also discussed an addition to Swigart Hall. A more detailed expense estimate and sketches will be necessary before further discussion.

The resurfacing of the track at College Field was also brought to the floor.

According to a report submitted by student representatives Stephen Meeker and Tracey Yonko, Student Services Committee members were interested in establishing a location where the faculty could meet for informal discussions among themselves or with students.

The conversion to semesters was brought up at the Academic Affairs Committee meeting. The topics reviewed by the Committee included class hours under the semester system and the 1986-1987 academic calender.

In other action, Dr. Philip D. Cronemiller of Arcadia, Calif. was named to the Board of Trustees for a three-year term.

Dr. Cronemiller, a 1939 Juniata graduate is a surgeon at the Arcadia Medical Clinic in Arcadia, and also is on the surgical staff at the Methodist Hospital in Arcadia and the Santa Teresita Hospital in Duarte, Calif.

Dr. Cronemiller's professional affiliations include: diplomate, American Board of Surgery; fellow, American College of Surgeon; honorary member, San Diego Society of General Surgeons; member, Los Angeles Medical Association and American Medical Association.

Dr. Cronemiller has written various papers and publications on cancer surgery and chemotherapy, surgery of ulcer disease and data processing in surgery and cancer.

Another trustee, Donovan R. Beachley, Sr. of Hagerstown, Md., was unanimously elected trustee emeritus at the fall meeting. He is a 1921 Juniata graduate and has served on the Juniata Board since 1945. He is currently the Chairman of the Board.

Dr. Beachley received an honorary L.L.D. degree from Juniata in 1968. He is principally responsible for establishing the Beachley Distinguished Professor Award presented annually to a member of the college faculty.

Schettler Conducts Research

by Melissa Barbor

Dr. Paul Schettler, one of the college's Chemistry professors, was chosen to participate in a research project conducted by the Gas Research Institute. This project is to study Devonian shale, a natural gas resource found close to population centers.GRI is spending $7.5 million per year to support Juniata and other institutions and companies in the effort.

Ordinary techniques used to locate natural gas, drill, and determine the amount of gas present do not work with wells drilled in Devonian shale. Therefore, the research project has been established to develop techniques to increase the productivity of the shale wells.

Schettler was given a three year contract to conduct research at Juniata that will specifically deal with the physical and chemical properties of the shale itself and how those influence production. This research will be done mainly in the laboratory but does include some field work. The field work

Band Performance

A variety of musical selections will be performed by the Juniata College Band at a free concert Saturday, Nov. 2 in Oller Auditorium.

The band is under the direction of Ibrook Tower, associate professor of music and a member of the Juniata faculty since 1974. Tower received his bachelor's degree in clarinet and music education form the Peabody Conservatory of Music, now affiliated with Johns Hopkins University, and holds a master's degree from Temple University. In addition, he is working on his dipolma in fine arts from the University of Calgary, Alberta and is solo clarinetest with the Altoona Symphony.

The Best Sports Around

Winning or losing, Juniata fans and players are some of the best sports around. They appreciate the quality of the game, not the final outcome.

The Juniatian, and the greater part of the campus, saw the truth in this a few weeks ago at the volleyball match between Grove City and our Lady Indians. Our girls fought hard and played well. The fans witnessed some good volleyball. Even though our team did not come out on top, the fans put aside their disappointment and rose to honor both teams with a standing ovation. We should all be proud of this sportsmanship.

Intramurals boast their own good sports. Although witnessed by only a handful of people, last Sunday's IM volleyball game (B League) between the last two undefeated teams showed athletic honesty on both sides. One player called a carry on himself. Another player, a spectator at the time, called a ball in bounds against his team. And when the two teams disagreed on a call, it was played over. Although both teams wanted to win and keep their undefeated record, winning wasn't the main purpose - playing fair and having fun was.

The Juniatian is proud of those who play fairly and who recognize the other guy, whether he won or lost. At a college where tradition is almost passionately protected, let's hope that this attitude is guarded closely.

Along Muddy Run

by Joe Scialabba

Well, now that the rest of the nation has switched back to standard time the big question on the Juniata campus is how long Juniata will remain in daylight savings time? You know, how long will the clocks be an hour ahead?

You may say that this is a familiar question, and it is. Last fall the same question was asked and we found the answer was "for a while." That's right, it takes quite awhile for the Juniata time system to be right there with the rest of the Eastern Time Zone. We may be an hour ahead of the where we are supposed to be for months.

But what is really frustrating is when we finally get back on the right time track it's time to switch again, which means we will be right back where we started again.

It must be tough to be a clock around here. If you are stationed in Good Hall you always have a different time from clocks in the Science Center, so you can never get together with them to do whatever clocks do together. Also, if you are a Juniata clock you can never visit clocks that work somewhere else because, once again, the Juniata time zone is not matched by anyone.

It must also be annoying to be a Juniata clock when all the students and faculty complain about you and use you for excuses. It isn't exactly fun to have people swear at you and yell at you because you are a little off, and you can't do one thing about it.

Maybe the new clocks around campus can escape the horrors of being wrong all the time? I doubt it.

Well, to get back to what time of year it is (Eastern Standard Time) again, it is time for us to walk home from dinner in the dark and to always think it is later than it is. Of course, since all the clocks on campus will tell us it is later than it is for a couple more months it can really be a tough time for all of us.

I really don't know if there is a solution to this problem, but if there is we won't know about it here at Juniata until a couple months, and an hour or two either way, than the rest of the civilized world.

It's time to end this timely story about time.

The moral of the story is to get a watch, and set off channel 12 — official Huntingdon time, which is another story all together. I'm really glad I'm out of time.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

After reading last week's Juniatian, I feel I must comment on the article written by Andy Hiscock concerning the volleyball tournament. I appreciate the time and effort it takes to write an article, but I feel a little extra time should have been taken to eliminate the glaring grammatical mistakes. The article contained long, bulky sentences which seemed to run on forever and never completed a thought. I quote: "Our ladies fought back the entire time, but were just not able to climb out of the early hole as points were were exchanged as well as alot of service swapping without scoring which took its toll on both teams as the games dragged on but continued at the grueling intensity in which they began." Sentences like this make the article very hard to read and do not give a favorable impression of the author or the paper.

In the future, I do hope that Mr. Hiscock will take more care with his articles. A college paper should protray class, not ignorance.

Sincerely,
Cheryl Kimbrough

Dear Cheryl,

I have to agree with you. With the advent of the new computer system here at The Juniatian, my articles have gone down in quality. Being basically a two man Sports Department means late hours on 'set up' night but the quality of the paper should not suffer as a result, and no excuses can be used. What do you want from a GEO major?!

What do you think of the possible elimination of Raft Regatta when we change to semesters?

Kathy Anderson (sophomore)- "I think Raft Regatta is one of the most well-liked activities at Juniata and I think almost all students including myself would be mad if it was eliminated. I would transfer."

Andy Romano (sophomore)- "I think they would be denying a lot of students the enjoyment of experiencing one of the best days at Juniata. I think this is an opportunity for all students to participate in a school activity and I will transfer with Kathy.

Dave Bates (junior)- "Have it in the fall because it is one of the best activities that Juniata has. I will also transfer and start Raft Regatta with Kathy and Andy at another school."

Mary Joy Sagan (sophomore)- "I think they shouldn't eliminate it because it's afun time and it breaks up the monotony of studying for finals."

Randy Farkosh (junior)- "I'm opposed to it and it would eliminate school spirit because everyone really looks forward to it."

Tom Reese (junior)- "I think it will be a great social event loss and we should try everything in our power to save it."

JR Class Event

By Lauralee Snyder

A junior class "get together" was held last Sunday at Camp Blue Diamond.

The early evening activities included a hayride around the campground. Afterwards, hot dogs over the fire, hot cider, and roasted marshmallows were enjoyed by the students.

Although the turn out was not as high as expected, all who attended had a great time.

Future junior class events at Camp Blue Diamond are being planned. Any input is appreciated. Send suggestions to Box 424.

will be done in the areas of New York State, Eastern Ohio, Western Virginia, Tennessee, and Kentucky. Schettler and his crew will be examining core samples of shale known to contain natural gas and samples known not to contain natural gas and comparing the two.

Other Juniata professors have been included in this project. They include: Rick Parmely, who was the school's laboratory manager and is now working full-time on this project, Dr. Rhodes and Dr. Wampler, who have worked on the computer aspects of the project, and Dr. Gustafson, who has also been working with some other aspects of the Juniata Shale Project.

RHA Event Proves To Be A Success

By Tina Acri

Octoberfest was held Saturday night, Oct. 26, in South's Rebel Den. Approximately 250 people enjoyed hot dogs, sauerkraut, hot pretzels and other traditional German refreshments.

South RHA sponsored the annual event, and according to Bill Miller, RHA President, Octoberfest was a "great success." Those attending seemed to really enjoy the festivities also. Sophomore Beth Lewis commented, "South RHA did a really good job. It was one of the best weekends up here so far."

S.N.A.P.'s Autumnfest

Hayrides and square dancing highlighted last weekend's Autumnfest '85 held at Camp Blue Diamond.

The Allegheny String Band entertained approximately 45 faculty members and students from 8:30p.m. to 12 a.m. The band provided four sets of square dancing.

Hayrides, arranged by Camp Blue Diamond, began at 7:45 and 9:30. Students and faculty enjoyed the crisp mountain air and hay battles between friends.

Autumnfest is an annual event sponsored by S.N.A.P.(Saturday Night Alternative Program), a Center Board Committee. This year's activities were organized by senior Paula Marie Panco.

Indians Roll On 17-3

Look To Scalp Warriors For MAC Lead Saturday

By Joe Scialabba

When Juniata meets Lycoming this Saturday in Williamsport it will be for a share of the Middle Atlantic Conference lead. The Tribe will take a 6-2 record and 5-1 league mark into the showdown with the undefeated Warriors, after the Indians won their fifth straight game last Saturday.

Juniata came from behind in the second half to down Delaware Valley 17-3 in Doylestown. The Indians trailed 3-0 at halftime, but found a way to get points they had missed in the first thirty minutes.

Junior quarterback Mike Culver was intercepted three times in the first half, including one in the end zone and one on the Delaware Valley six yard line, but redeemed himself with a fine second half to finish 16 of 26 for 196 yards and two touchdowns. The TD tosses came just four minutes apart in the third period

Trailing 3-0 and on its own 21 after an Aggie punt, Juniata turned the game around on a first down play. Culver threw to flanker Morgan Johns down the left sideline and watched him coast 79 yards to score with 10:00 left in the quarter.

Next, following a short Delaware Valley punt, the Indians went 36 yards in six plays to make it 14-3. Culver hit Mike Cottle for the 10-yard score before Mike Schaffner booted his second extra point. The score followed a third-down Delaware Valley penalty that gave Juniata a first down at the ten.

"At worst it could have been 10-3," said Aggie coach Al Wilson on the effect of the costly penalty. "But, instead of a field goal try they got a first down and then a touchdown."

"I thought we were in control at halftime, and things were looking good before the big pass. Then we got rocked back and just never recovered." "I was a little concerned as the third quarter wore on," said Juniata's Rob Ash. "But we really came out a lot better in the second half."

"Neither team could run well, so it came down to the passing games. Our pass defense-offense combination was better than theirs, and that was the difference in the game."

Juniata free safety Rich Howey had two interceptions and Bryan Warren added one to raise the Indian season total to tie a school record at 25. Delaware Valley could manage just 71 yards out of a 9 of 30 passing effort, while rushing for 83.

"Juniata was what we expected," said Wilson.. "Their defense was tough and physical upfront with active linebackers. The great numbers (interceptions) speak for their secondary."

"They were as physical as we expected," countered Ash," and we weren't sure if we could run on them. However, we ran well in some key situations."

Halfback Rick Bouch, filling in for injured Greg Townsend, and Culver had runs for first downs when the Indians rushed six times in a seven play drive before Schaffners's 22-yard field goal set the final score with 11:08 left in the game. Fullback Ian Malee also worked hard, allthough the Tribe gained just 94 yards on the ground.

Indian linebacker Bob Crossey had 15 tackles and Gino Perri recorded 13 stops. Steve Haley and Lou Komer each nailed quarterback sacks for the dominant Indian defense, which lowered its total defense average to just over 202 yards per game.

"We were a little flat and had five turnovers but still won, and that's a good sign," said Ash. "Delaware Valley was a good football team. We've established ourselves clearly as in the upper tier of the conference."

A win over Lycoming would clear a space at the top, of the whole tier.

In their last away meet of the regular season, the Juniata Women's Cross Country team (5-4) ran to a 27-30 win against Western Maryland.

Kris Smith won the 3.1 mile race in 20:22, with Sue Gill capturing a crucial second place. Western Maryland then packed in runners for the next four places making the meet very close. Juniata pulled out the victory with strong performances from Cheri Byars (9th), Kim Esh (10th), and Julie Drummond (11th) all finishing in front of Western Maryland's fifth runner to ensure the Indian victory.

World News Update

by Cinny Cooper

WASHINGTON - President Reagan has ordered an investigation into a news leak concerning secret CIA plans to undermine Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy. The classified intelligence information, leaked to The Washington Post, detailed a plan to topple Khadafy by promoting insurrection within the Libyan military.

BEIRUT - Lebanon's three main rival militias met in Damascus on Monday to work out details of a peace accord to end 10 years of Civil War in Lebanon. Syrian Vice President Khaddam called the meeting to "iron out last-minute wrinkles" that stalled the talks over the weekend.

PHILADELPHIA - Pennsylvania's unemployment rate rose only .2 percent in October to 7.7 percent. The jobless rate in New Jersey increased by 1.4 percent to 6.4 percent. The national unemployment rate was unchanged at 7.1 percent.

THE HAGUE - The Netherlands became the last of five NATO allies in Western Europe to agree to accept American intermediate-range nuclear missiles. After a 6 year debate the Dutch government has accepted the missiles, adding that they intend to reduce the number of nuclear weapons it carries on F-16 and Orion aircraft as part of its NATO responsibilities.

WASHINGTON - Twenty-two of the nation's largest record companies have agree to place warnings on recordings that have explicit lyrics about sex, drug abuse or violence. Stanley M. Gortikov, president of the Recording Industry Association of America, announced that albums, cassettes and videodisks will carry the notice "Explicit Lyrics - Parental Advisory." The American Civil Liberties Union denounced the move as "close to censorship."

Will The Keg Stop Here?
Alcohol Policy Reviewed

By Mary McDougall

Major changes are pending for Juniata's alcohol policy following advice from the college legal counsel, according to Arnold J. Tilden, vice president and dean of student services.

At an open meeting held last Wednesday in Baker Refectory, Tilden announced that, beginning winter term, alcohol will no longer be served at college sponsored activities including lounge parties. The administration is also considering restricting kegs in halls of residence.

"We have become aware of serious legal concerns relating to the institution's liability . . . It is our impression that the alcohol policy as it now stands leaves the college open to an uninsured risk," said Tilden.

Tilden explained that the forthcoming changes are the result of recent court decisions finding "social hosts" liable for the injuries of guests who were "furnished" with alcohol at a social event. The case which has set the precedent is known as Congini v. Pottersville Valve. In 1984 the court awarded damages in the millions to an 18-year-old who had an automobile accident upon leaving a company Christmas party.

Kay Stevenson, legal counsel to the college, noted that Juniata's liability stems from the fact that, at lounge parties, students are being furnished with alcohol by clubs and organizations that are closely affiliated with Juniata College.

"When a lounge is signed out, the student signs a social function request form which states that the party sponsor will uphold the laws of the commonwealth. It was our belief that the college was insulated from liability but actually it is very vulnerable," said Tilden.

Tilden explained that, in a lawsuit, a club would not be considered a separate entity, but synonomous with Juniata College.

"It would be very easy for a lawyer to establish that it was Juniata College that furnished the alcohol as well as the individual or club," said Tilden.

Tilden stressed that the changes in the alcohol policy do not in any way reflect student behavior. He added that lounge parties have been "very successful from a programatic point of view" and that he has been "more than satisfied" with student behavior in recent years.

Baker Refectory was filled to capacity at last Wednesday's meeting called to explain the forthcoming changes and the reasons behind them. Present at the meeting were Tilden, Stevenson and members of the Student Affairs Council.

Presidential Selection Continues

By Mary McDougall

The list of candidates for a new president of Juniata College has been narrowed down to six and a decision by the Board of Trustees is expected in early 1986, according to Henry Gibbel, trustee and chairman of the trustee selection committee

This weekend, the committee was off-campus conducting interviews as part of the selection process. Gibbel indicated that the list of candidates is "very confidential" in order to protect the candidates who are currently holding responsible positions.

Assisting the trustee selection committee is an advisory committee consisting of student, faculty and alumni representatives. Representing the student body are seniors Lynn Forwood and Jack Thomas while professors James R. Donaldson, Klaus Kipphan and William E. Russey are present from the faculty. The committee is reviewing the candidates and will make its reccomendation to the Board.

At least two of the final candidates will be brought to the Juniata campus with their spouses before a decision is reached, reported Forwood. The purpose of the visits will be to allow faculty, staff and students to interact informally with the prospective presidential candidates and direct their comments to the advisory committee. The visits are expected to take place early in winter term.

"We are hoping to include as much student input as possible in making our reccomendation to the Board," said Forwood. "There will be ample opportunity for interested students to meet with the candidates when they're here."

Focus On The Problem

Last week Dean Tilden spoke to a crowded Baker Refectory about a change in the alcohol policy. The students' concern was obvious in the remarkable attendance and the questions posed.

The Juniatian commends Dean of Student Services Arnold Tilden for bringing the policy and its problems directly to us, the students. It is reassuring to know that the administration is considering the students in this decision.

We must keep in mind the complexity of the situation. No one has an easy solution; let's not expect too much and ask for one. Our decision makers need our input and support — not our misguided criticisms.

Many questions were raised at last week's open forum. Somw were very helpful in clarifying the situation. On the other hand, The Juniatian believes some questions focused on the wrong problem. The problem lies in how Juniata College will adapt to the new law - not in how unreasonable the law may be (or so some seem to think). Questions concerning the validity of the law should be posed to your State Representatives - not to the Dean of Student Services or the Student Affairs Council.

With a little effort on everyone's part and our attention focused on the right problem, an acceptable policy can be laid out. Let's deal with it and not waste time complaining about it.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

The cover story of the October 21st issue of Time, concerning the Achille Lauro incident, is titled "Turning the Tables: the U.S. strikes back at Terrorism." I agree with the article's condemnation of the terrorists' action, but find the position that the U.S. is therefore a preserver of justice self-righteous and hypocritical.

In the interview with George Schultz on page 26, he says, "You have to get the message to terrorists that the civilized community is opposed to what they are doing, and prepared to take action to see that they don't succeed, and that they are brought to justice, so there is a cost." So the U.S. government is civilized, George? How would you categorize our planting mines in Nicaraguan harbors? Is that what being civilized means? What about the CIA's distributing of manuals advising Nicaraguan rebels to kidnap and assassinate government officials? Some of the manuals were tied to balloons and floated into the country! Please be a little more humble in your lectures on being civilized next time.

The second assertion in Schultz's statement is that the U.S., among other nations, is going to enforce justice in these cases. The World Court is a pretty well recognized forum in which international disputes are addressed in the hope of coming up with a just solution. When Nicaragua filed its suit against the U.S. in the World Court, the government decided not to participate in the proceedings. The Nicaraguan government wanted the U.S. also to be "brought to justice," just as we want the terrorists in the Achille Lauro incident to be "brought to justice." We reserve the right to hold them accountable for the injustices they commit yet refuse ourselves to be held accountable. This is hypocritical and is a distortion of justice.

If our goal is to become a more civilized or humane and just world, one thing is for certain: it will involve a lot of hard work on the part of each and every nation, each and every individual.

Sincerely,
Jude Vachon

Along Muddy Run

by John Kun

You know what really sucks? When they start messing around with our favorite pastime here at old Wanita. You know what's even worse? They're right! They have to do something about it, so this article won't try to fight them; instead it will look at how our life will change.

Except possibly for Cloister, the weeknights shouldn't be too different. You can still get a case and play poker with the girls or bridge with the boys, cocktail parties will be cocktail parties and besides, weekdays are for studying (stop laughing).

When that first weekend rolls around, culture shock will run rampant. I really feel sorry for freshmen. Being a senior, I gave up on "meat markets" long ago, but I foresee many long, lonely nights for many an underclassman. There will be a great lack of stuff to do.

The very fabric of parties will be altered. No longer can we play 3-7-11, we won't have enough stuff to play with. We'll have to play 3-7. Quarters will become nickels due to lack of funds. Zoom-Swartz and Pfigliano will be Zoom-Swartz. People will dance with other people instead of posts. We'll actually start caring what kind of music is played. Saturday and Sunday lunches won't look like a scene from "Dawn of the Dead." No longer will one be able to tell a freshman by the head he puts on your mug. Floors will stay clean. Mugs and taps will be obsolete. Tap owners won't be popular people anymore. Garbage cans will be used for garbage. I don't know - it all seems so un-college. I'm glad I'm getting while the getting's good. If you need me in the meantime, I've moved to Max's.

South's Halloween Masquerade

by Tina Acri and Terry Seiple,Jr.

South's Rebel Den saw lots of wierd and wild people (and things) on Friday, November 1. The Sophomore Class sponsored a Masquerade in accordance with Halloween.

There was a devil, Christmas tree, coneheads, a tornado, and various other interesting costumes. Five winning costumes were picked and each received a prize of five dollars.

The prize-winning masquerade contestants were: John Petrovich as a pyromaniac; Becky Abraham as a Christmas tree; Scott Cole and Marie "Murph"Rose as cadavers; Becky Olsen as a devil; and finally the "New Alcohol Policy Enforcer" who still remains nameless although rumor has it he may have been Arnie Tilden's nephew.

The Lesher room of Adriene Rudeen and Charlene Porta took first place in this year's Room Decoration Contest, sponsored by Randy Deike, Director of Housing and the Residential Life Committee.

J. Omar Good Lecture

Juniata College's J. Omar Good Lecture Series will begin Thursday, Nov. 14 with a program entitled "Chrisianity: The True Humanism."

The 8:15 p.m. lecture in the Ellis College Center faculty lounge will be delivered by Dr. Clark H. Pinnock, professor of systematic theology at McMaster Divinity College in Hamilton, Ontario.

A member of the faculty at McMaster since 1977, Pinnock received his B.A. degree in Ancient Near Eastern Studies from the University of Toronto and his Ph.D. in the New Testament from University of Manchester.

A young evangelical theologian, Pinnock is held in high regard for his strong, innovative scholarship. He has served as contributing editor to "Sojourners" and "Christianity Today" and associate editor of "Themelios."

Pinnock is the author of numerous books, the latest entitled, "Sheer Christianity."

The public is cordially invited to attend this lecture.

RHA Notes

by Jennifer Nicholson

Sherwood

According to RHA President Chris Thompson, Sherwood is planning a 50-50 raffle and a party at which a weekend trip to Florida will be raffled off for the near future. Residents are presently participating in Monday Night Football socials every week.

Tussey-Terrace

Residents are playing "Assassin", Tussey vs. Terrace. They plan to continue with their weekly parties and their weekly movie night. Additionally, they are selling M&M's and ordering a hand stamp for parties and t-shirts with the TNT logo on them.

North

North RHA is planning a Coffeehouse for the Wednesday before finals and have a "Last Chance at East" party scheduled for this Friday, Nov.8. Residents, under the direction of President Scott Cody, held a Coffeehouse on Oct.9 and a 50-50 raffle during Homecoming weekend.

Counselor's Corner

by Dr. Jay Buchanan

In the last article, we discussed the distinction between assertive and aggressive behaviors. We also examined certain barriers to assertiveness. Today, let's look at ways to be more assertive and begin with the five dimensions of assertive behavior as outlined by Alberti and Emmons.

First of all, to be assertive means to act in one's own best interests, but not at the expense of someone else. The assertive individual takes the feelings and rights of the other person into consideration. Additionally, to act in one's own best interests is to take initiative, to be proactive versus reactive, and to generally exert reasonable control over one's lifespace.

Secondly, to be assertive is to stand up for oneself. We are all familiar with the saying, "Why do I say yes when I really mean no?" We have to learn to say no and to set limits on our time and energy. Standing up for oneself also includes the right to express one's opinion. Additionally, it requires that one deals effectively with criticism. Oftentimes when we are criticized we get defensive and aggressive behaviors are then manifested.

A third element of assertive behavior suggests the comfortable expression of honest feelings. It's okay to feel and show anger occasionally. If one consistently suppresses his/her feelings, they may finally erupt in aggressive behavior toward others. To express honest feelings means to admit that one is anxious or fearful at times. It also includes showing affection or friendship.

Yet another aspect of assertive behavior has to do with exercise of personal rights. As a member of the Juniata community and as a student one has the right and the responsiblity to be heard and to particpate fully in the affairs of that community.

Finally, assertive behavior suggests that we do not deny the rights of others as we exercise our own rights. One does not unfairly criticize or purposely hurt another person. As Alberti and Emmons state, ". . .assertive behavior is a positive self-affirmation which also values the other persons in you life."

World Affairs Lecture

"Peace and the Arms Race" will be the topic of the World Affairs Lecture to be presented by Dr. Matthew Melko Tuesday, Nov. 12 at 8:15 p.m. in the Ellis College Center faculty lounge.Melko is a professor of sociology and anthropology at Wright State University in Dayton, Ohio and is president of the International Society of the Comparative Study of Civilizations. He also has served as editor of "The Comparative Civilization Bulletin." A graduate of Alfred University, Melko received an M.A. degree from University of Chicago, and M.S. degree from Columbia Graduate School of Journalism and a Ph.D. from the London School of Economics and Political Science.

Melko is the author of several books, the latest of which is "Peace in the Western World", written with John Hord. He has written numerous papers and articles on civilizations, social systems, peace and family and has been published in such journals as "Main Currents in Modern Thought" and "Journal of World History."

The World Affairs Lecture Series is sponsored by Juniata's political science department and Peace and Conflict Studies Committee with support from the John C. and Elizabeth E. Baker Endowment, the Sedgely Thornbury Lectureship and the William G. and Mary A. Nyce Lectureship. The public is cordially invited to attend. There is no admission charge.

Do you have any positive ideas towards the alteration of the alcohol policy?

Scott Cody (junior) -"They are going to have to come up with more for weekends because the lounge parties have always been a big part of our weekends. The room kegs should be allowed they would help fill the void."

Mandy Wildermann (sophomore) -"It would be nice if they could set up a pub and sit at tables, as opposed to Tote, somewhere that you could dance and socialize with a nightclub atmosphere and charge admission for the bands."

Ralf Tolle (senior) -"I don't think people learn to stop drinking through prohibiting alcohol. Restricting does not help people learn to handle alcohol. Restriction treats only the effects, not the cause."

Ed Yencha (freshman) -"Have room parties and have bands, charge admission for them and bring your own alcohol."

Christine Haefner and Margaret Longsworth (sophomores) -"We think it sucks even though we realize the jeopardy of the school. They should have mixers with bottles like at South's Semi-Formal and this way, they're not liable."

Wagner Spends Summer in Alaska

By Mary McDougall

When Paul Wagner went to work in Fairbanks, Alaska, he gave new meaning to the term "summer job."

The Juniata senior from Narberth spent last summer as a volunteer paleontologist for the Bureau of Land Management (BLM), a division of the Department of Interior. As a paleontologist, he looked for fossils of animals frozen in the permafrost and uncovered in Alaskan gold mines. Part of the role of BLM is to monitor federal lands on which there are mining claims. In Wagner's capacity as an agent of the BLM, he visited gold mines checking for fossil finds among the mined rock.

"It's hard to believe, but 'gold fever' is still alive in Alaska," says Wagner. "People come up on their vacations to look for gold in the rivers and streams — it's like the gold rush never ended," he adds.

"Part of my job was public relations," Wagner explains. "Many miners were afraid that if we found fossils in their mine they'd be closed down or their work would be limited. We had to convince them that this wouldn't happen. We tried to get the miners excited about the fossils, convince them to collect bones for us and set aside anything they found."

Over the course of the summer, Wagner collected approximately 2,500 bones, mostly from the Pleistocene era, 10,000 - 30,000 years ago. These are the ice age mammals, including such extinct animals as the saber tooth cat, wooly mammoth and a species of American lion.

"I had to learn a lot about anatomy for the job," says Wagner, "like how to identify a left bison tibia from a small fragment."

"Many of the fossils we found were of species similar to present day mammals but are what we call 'megafauna' which means they were much larger. For example, the stag moose which was common at that time period had an antler span of over 14 feet."

Wagner found the position with the BLM through the Student Conservation Association based in Charleston, N.H. Through this organization, college and high school students can acquire volunteer jobs in wildlife research and other related areas. Jobs are available wih such agencies as the Department of Interior and National Park Service. Wagner's position was volunteer, but his travel and living expenses were paid for by the BLM.

Alaska, however, was not Wagner's first experience with fieldwork. Durng the summer of 1984, he spent six weeks in the Chihuahua Desert in Mexico studying invertebrate marine fossils with a group from the Princeton University geology department. His research there became the subject of an independent study with Dr. J. Peter Trexler, professor of geology.

"It was interesting work," says Wagner. "Because of the geographical features of the land, such as the surrounding mountains, there were a large number of endemic species — species particular to that small region."

With a major in natural history, Wagner says he has always been interested in museums. His desire to study both geology and biology, he says, led him to an interest in paleontology, which encompasses both fields. He says he hasn't yet decided what area he'd like to concentrate on in graduate studies, but a return to Alaska is a definite possibility. "It's beautiful country," says Wagner, "and for me the work was ideal."

Wagner is currently working on a paper to be published jointly with his supervisor at the BLM based on their work last summer.

Senior Paul Wagner displays his day's findings while working as a volunteer paleontologist for the Bureau of Land Management (BLM) in Fairbanks, Alaska.

Cheltenham Students at JC for Semester

By Helen Bailey

This year at Juniata there are four students from Saint Paul's and St. Mary's College, Cheltenham, on the Brethren Colleges Abroad (BCA) program. The program lasts for one semester, giving English students a chance to study in the U.S.

The four girls are education majors. Claire Buckley, Tracy Lane and Rachel Bealt are specializing in primary school teaching and Yvonne Grant in secondary education.

Asked why the girls came to the U.S., Claire wanted a change of environment, and along with Tracy, says that they wanted to find out for themselves the differences in culture between the two countries. Tracy feels that it is good to get away from friends at home, and Yvonne says that she certainly wanted to meet more people of her own age. Rachel believes it "broadens your mind."

Cheltenham College and Juniata are about the same size but the girls say that there is more to do in the town itself of Cheltenham. Claire says the Juniata has "a lot going for it" but claims she misses the Student Union bar at home. She and Tracy prefer the rooms here. In England, rooms tend to be single, Tracy comments that this may be due the the English being more reserved and liking their privacy.

Yvonne prefers Juniata, saying that the people are friendly, the place is nice and the food is better. The people have meant the most to her, partly, she thinks, because they want to talk, realizing she is foreign, and also because she has gone out of her way to meet new friends. However, she stresses that American people seem to be very ignorant as to the existence of colored minorities in England (because she is a colored English girl.)

Since settling into life at Juniata, Claire has become involved in the drama group's production of "Little Women." She says that some things here make her appreciate her own culture more, she has also realized that distances are not really a barrier. She also says, "I'm glad U2 and Tears For Fears have broken the U.S. charts."

Rachel, who has gotten into the health craze ("decaffeinated coffee," etc.) claims that you learn to be more accepting of other people and learn how to get on with others in a short space of time. Tracy (also into the health bit) gets the impression that American students are more work oriented coupled with the ritual of, "It's Friday night, let's get the bottle out."

All of them say it was easy to adapt to life here although to Rachel the coins were difficult to sort out at first. She says that Americans have made her "more enthusiastic." Yvonne, who has become very interested in volleyball, in agreement with Claire, says that, occasionally language can be a barrier in that the same word will mean something very different in England. Overall, Yvonne feels she has fitted in very well over here. She was also recently chosen to represent Cheltenham students at a meeting of the trustee's wives. She does her teaching practice at Huntingdon Middle School which she claims is "fantastic."

Claire's final comment on the college is, "I like the way you can get pizzas in the middle of the night," and "I love the smell of popcorn down the corridors." Yvonne says, "If I had to do it again I would."

Little Women Opens Tonite in Oller at 8 p.m.

Little Women, a play by Marian DeForest based on the classic Louissa May Alcott novel, will be presented Nov. 7, 8 and 9 at 8 p.m. in Juniata College's Oller Auditorium.

This version of Little Women was originally presented on Broadway in 1912 and was a success in London in 1919.

Set in Civil War Massachusetts in 1863, the story centers on the March family and especially the four daughters: Jo, the feminist; Meg, the little mother; Amy, the sophisticate; and Beth, Miss Tranquility. Generations have read this book and its sequels Jo's Boys and Little Men.

Little Women will be performed by a cast of 12: Elizabeth Oishi, a junior from Baltimore, MD; Rush Blady, a freshman from New Hope; John Petrovic, a sophomore from Hookstown; Stephen Meyer, a junior from Bethesda, MD; Rob Boyer, a junior Greentown; Jocelyn Fowler, a senior from Springfield; Margaret Gonglewski, a sophomore form New Cumberland; Claire Buckley, an exchange student from Kent, England; Jennifer Graham, a freshman from Clearfield; Cheryl Kimbrough, a senior from Lansing, Ill.; Mary White, a sophomore from Coatesville; and Lisa Baer, a sophomore from Doylestown.

This production is directed by Dr. Howard H. Crouch, professor of education and produced by seinior Caron Lee Cheetham of Wayne, NJ. Doris P. Goering, assistant proffessor of speech and theater, is providing technical assistance. All performances are open to the public. There is no charge for Juniata students and staff.

J.C. Club Corner

By Virginia Krall

A new and exciting club has been formed at Juniata called SHAC or the Student Health Advisory Committee.

SHAC is an organization which works in cooperation with Juniata's Health Center Staff in order to improve health awareness on this campus.

These students are interested in emphasizing wellness and preventive medicine by providing a variety of health related services. Thus a primary goal of this new committee is to schedule monthly educational programs concerning vital health or wellness issues that may effect the Juniata population.

Weight control support groups, quit smoking support groups and eating disorder/nutrition groups are all ideas being worked on by SHAC. They hope to implement peer counciling for human sexuality problems and also for alcohol use/abuse.

Most recently SHAC has given students the opportunity to take a CPR course. Ouestionaires have been distributed through the mail in order to find the most convenient time for interested students.

Long term projects for SHAC include panel discussions on eating disorders, a program on organ donating and to sponsor a Wellness Day with local agencies who would administer diagnostic counciling.

SHAC also would like to start a library of films, videos and cassettes that deal with health related topics which could be used by the Juniata community.

Students in SHAC serve another purpose too. They are working in conjunction with the Health Center Staff to improve the Health Center's services. Producing quality health care and reaching the needs and wants of the student are all concerns of SHAC. Student representation will give the Health Center staff a "student's point of view."

SHAC not only provides students with an opportunity for involvement in the policy and programming of Juniata's Health Center but it also makes them a part of the dissemination of health related information to the students.

Members benefit through the education derived from participating in the search for solutions of health care problems and they gain experience in a health setting.

If you are interested in pursuing a health related field or are just a concerned student, SHAC is the club for you! Anyone who thinks SHAC might be for them should contact chairperson Ann Kiraly or go to the Health Center for more information. SHAC's next meeting is Monday, November 11 at 7pm in the Health Center.

Scouting Service Club Seeks Able Volunteers

by Curtis Benner & Lisa Shook

Time. Time. Adult men and women are needed to donate not money, not apathy, and not excuses, but time.

Your job (time spent):

(1) Community services, such as, helping the children lead more rewarding lives through the scouting program.

(2) Fund raising projects, such as, selling delicious chocolate chip cookies.

(3) Environmental projects, such as, cleaning the cliffs of refuse and grafitti.

Your reward (payment for services rendered):

(1) Keep warm in front of a blazing fireplace at one of the local lodges for a weekend.

(2) Take a hike through the cool, clean, fresh mountain air.

(3) Take a road trip — through a competitive road rally.

(4) Do you like to party?

The Scouting Service Club invites you to come taste the challenge, and take a bite of life. We live by the equation— A LITTLE HARD WORK = PERSONAL FULFILLMENT × FUN —and you could too.

The Scouting Service Club meets every Tuesday at 9:00 in the Blue Room in Ellis.

New York Trip To Be Dec. 6-8

By Tina Acri

The Center Board committee has been busy this year. Their newest activity is a weekend trip to "The Big Apple," New York City.

December 6-8, students will explore "the city that never sleeps." Central Park, Broadway, shopping on Fifth Avenue, Greenwich Village, museums— these are a few of the many places that these lucky people will be visiting.

They will be staying three days and two nights at the Excelsior Hotel. The cost is only $65 for room and transportation. There are only twenty spaces left, so if you are interested, make your reservations at the Ellis Information Desk by Nov. 11.

Semester Status

by Cinny Cooper

This is the first article of a weekly series designed to address questions concerning the upcoming switch to semesters.)

This week's topic:
Who's Doing What?: A General Overview.

Next year's switch from a trimester system to a semester system involves many faculty groups, administrators, a student committees.

Academic Dean Joseph Stewart and Registrar Constance Collins are currently reviewing next year's curriculum. According to the Registrar, course approval has three steps: 1) Each department submits their course proposals; 2) The Dean and the Registrar review course proposals; 3) The Academic Standards Committee hands down the final approval.

A Center Board Special Events Evaluation Committee has been formed to study the impact of semesters on college traditions (Mountain Day, Madrigal, Raft Regatta). Karen Reap is the chairperson.

The Ad Hoc Committee For Semester Conversion was established to channel information to the student body through Public Service Announcements (PSA's) on V103 and articles in The Juniatian, and possibly an open forum. The committee consists of representatives from Student Government, Center Board, V103, and The Juniatian.

Many aspects of the semester system have already been decided.

The academic calendar has been finalized (i.e. vacations, final exam periods, classes begin, classes end, etc.)

A daily schedule of class hours has been approved. (To clarify, the length of time slots has been determined- not the length of specific classes.)

Graduation requirements, Programs of Emphasis (POE) requirements, and General Education (GE) requirements have been set.

A normal student course load in a 14-week semester has been established.

The conversion of units to semester hours has also been finalized.

The main task yet to be completed is a master schedule of courses. According to Dean Stewart and Dr. Collins, this will appear around February or March.

Many of the issues already decided will be presented in upcoming articles and PSA's. Any suggestions, questions, or concerns can be addressed to Box 995. [Next week's topic: The Academic Calendar]

CB Attends Programming Conference

By Kathy Guelin

Five Center Board members and Wayne Justham (administrative advisor to Center Board) left for a four-day programming conference in Cleveland, Ohio on Thursday. The conference was for the Great Lakes Region of the National Association of Campus Activities, of which Juniata is a member. This year's delegates were: Ginny Krall, Dana Harriger, Kathy Guelin, Diane Matlesky and Alex Grigson.

Education seminars were given on such subjects as: "Alcohol on Campus: Choices and Changes," "Designing Successful Promotions From Effective Marketing Strategies," "Effective Group Decision Making," and many more. Showcases were also held to give the delegates a look at some of the talent that could be "bought" for campus activities. The delegates also attended exhibit halls where they could meet and talk to various agents and artists.

Eight hundred from many colleges in the Great Lakes region attended the conference. It was a great opportunity to participate in co-op buying, learn ways to improve your campus programming board, and to meet other students.

I.M. Volleyball Action Picks Up As Playoffs Near

By Andy Hiscock

The long Intramural Volleyball Season is beginning to show in a number of ways. A number of teams have forfeited out of the league either because the 'thrill of victory' doesn't outweigh 'the agony of defeat' anymore or they have too much work to do (I doubt it!). Despite the fact that some teams are bailing out, the teams left are gearing up for the play-off position fights and the quality of play is improving.

In League A, five of the seven teams remaining have winning records. This past Thursday, four matches were scheduled. 'Rag-Tags' maintained their hold on first place in the league (11-1) as they were handed another victory with 'The Jaggers' forfeiting. '371-09M' also picked up a win by forfeit as 'The Longshots' forfeited out of the league. 'The Mad Spikers' did have to work for their victory over 'Darrylects' (15-7),(15-6). Robin Urban set up the front line well and Craig Bannon made a few good points for 'The Spikers' while I was there. 'Thankews' kept pace with the league leaders with their win over 'Wipeouts' as they were forced to come from behind in the match and win the last two games (8-15), (15-10), (11-4). Rich Mrosky played a solid match for 'Thankews' who raised their season record to (11-2).

In league A this past Sunday, 'Wipeouts' kept their play-off hopes alive with a victory over 'The Jaggers' (15-11), (15-8). Jack Winebrenner and Laurie Fitzgerald were playing well while I was there. Also, '371-09M' remained in the play-off picture as they picked up a surprising forfeit win over third place 'The Mad Spikers'.

League B was also in action last week. Last Wednesday, October 30th 'Missionaries' upped their season record to (10-2) with by way of forfeit. 'The Spinners' defeated 'Merlin's Minstrels' (15-3), (15-3). Amy Hoffman made some good back-court saves and Barb Carlisle made a few good dinks for the victors. On Sunday, 'The Bosses' beat 'Comedy Of Errors' in two close games (16-14), (16-14), but have since dropped out of the league according to the I.M. Department. 'Druts' kept their league leading undefeated season intact as they cruised to a straight game victory over 'Mix-n-Match' (15-7), (15-7). 'Vegetarian Cows' also picked up a win as 'Wonder Buns' forfeited out of the league.

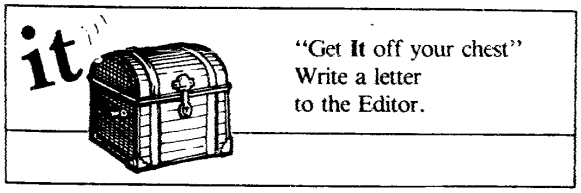
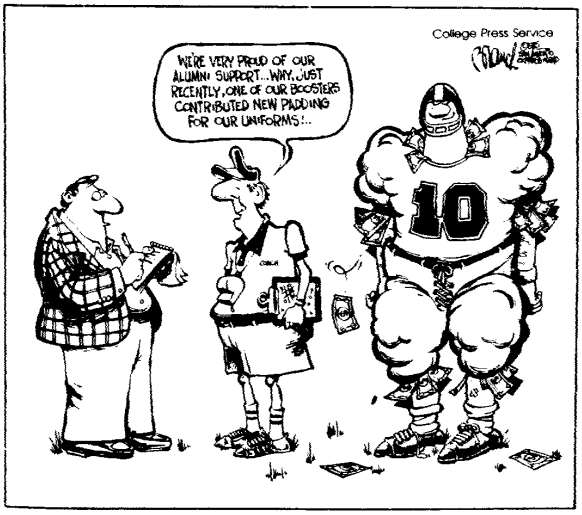
I.M. Softball Action Continues

By Andy Hiscock

The weather is starting to get colder, but the I.M. softball action is heating up with the season winding down, and three teams are fighting for the last play-off spots.

This past Thursday, three games were scheduled. "Mincue's" picked up a win as "Fresh and Honest" forfeited out of the league. "Softballs" remained in first place (8-2) as they defeated "Biffs" 11-6. "Softballs" built up an early lead with 2 runs in the first, 5 in the 2nd, and 4 more in the 3rd. "Return Of The Trout" squeezed by "B.B.A." with a 5-4 victory. At the end of the regular 7 innings, it was all knotted up 3-3. The game went into the 9th inning where "B.B.A." finally broke the tie with a go ahead run. "Return Of The Trout" displayed why they are in 2nd place in the league (7-2) as they rallied for two runs in the bottom of the ninth to win. Lets hope that the weather holds out for the rest of the season and through the play-offs.





Lady Indians Volleyball Do Well In Tournament

By Andy Hiscock

This past weekend the Lady Indians Volleyball squad participated in a tournament at Elmhurst, Illinois. The Indians competed against other Division 3 schools including the #1 and #4 Division 3 schools in the nation.

On Friday night, they mett Carrol (Wisconsin). The Indians won the match in straight games (15-6), (15-5), and (15-3). Later on Friday, J.C. met a tough squad from the University of Wisconsin at Stevens Point (ranked #10). The Indians won the first game (15-11). The next two games were hard fought, but the Indians came out on the short end with Wisconsin winning (15-11), (15-11). Once again, the Indians dug deep and pulled together for a comeback match win as they won game #4 (15-13) and game #5 (15-11).

On Saturday, J.C. met hosting Elmhurst (ranked #4) The Indians won the first game (15-13), but lost the next three games (2-15), (8-15), (11-15) to lose only their 6th match loss of the season..

The day didn't get any easier for our ladies as they came up against the #1 ranked Division 3 school in the nation- Illinois Benedictine. Our ladies hung tough throughout the whole match. We won the first game (15-10), then dropped the next two games (5-15), (8-15). The fourth game saw Juniata once again rise to the pressure as they won (15-13). Wisconsin proved to be a litle bit stronger as they won game #5, but we have to remember that this was the #1 ranked Division #3 school in the nation that we pushed to the deciding game.

The Indians were ranked #7 in the nation for Division 3 schools as of last week. Their current season record stands at 29-7. The Indians came out of the tournament this past weekend 2-2, but the experience that the younger players received cannot be measured in wins or losses and can prove to be more important in the long run. The Indians played well against some of the best Division 3 schools in the nation. The Lady Indians now look toward the MAC's this weekend. I wish them the best of luck.

Labba Lines

By Joe Scialabba

It's transition time in the world of sports as we move from the baseball and football fields to the basketball courts and hockey rinks.

Nationally, the Major League Baseball season has ended, and the NFL and NCAA football seasons have fell into their latter stages. Soon taking the spotlight are the NBA, NHL and college basketball seasons.

Of course, football is far from over, ask any Penn State fan.

How about those Nittany Lions? Joe Paterno has an 8-0 squad, sitting atop several national college polls. Can a team with almost no offense win a national championship? Only time will tell, but don't count on PSU finishing the regular season without a loss. Both Notre Dame and Pitt loom in the final two weeks. The Fighting Irish are coming back from a horrid start while the Panthers are hoping to save Foge's job.

Right in our own backyard we have seen a pretty good football team —the Juniata Indians. Before the season I never would have guessed we would have gone to Lycoming in position to tie for the Middle Atlantic Conference lead. It's too bad everything didn't go like we wished it would, but 6-3 with two games to go is nothing to be ashamed of in any league, especially the MAC.

Since we are talking about the MAC, I think it's appropriate to wish the women's volleyball team the best of luck in their try for an unbelievable fifth consecutive title this weekend at Western Maryland.

Also, we wish the cross country teams the best this weekend in the MAC's.

Looking ahead to our winter sports offerings I see smoke rising from Kennedy Sports+Rec Center as a fire of new Indian spirit is burning.

The women's basketball team is preparing vigorously for what could be a move to the top of the Northwest Section of the MAC.

On the other hand, the men see the upper part of the division as a distinct possibility in 1985-86, with a freshman crop as good as any in the MAC.

The mats should bring new excitement to College Hill as a youth movement hopes to shoot the Tribe wrestling team to new MAC heights.

All is well, and the mixture is right for a great winter sports season.

Obviously, the fall seasons aren't over yet, and great things can hit Juniata well before the first snowfall. But one thing is certain, Indian sports are at one of their most exciting points in years.

JC Passing Records Fall, But Tribe Loses 39-27

By Joe Scialabba

A record-breaking passing performance was not enough last Saturday as Juniata fell to unbeaten Middle Atlantic Conference leader Lycoming, 39-27 in Williamsport.

Falling behind 18-0 early in the game, the Indians never fully recovered, dropping their first game in six weeks. The Tribe is now 6-3, and 5-2 in the MAC.

Lycoming raised its record to 8-0 overall and 7-0 in the conference. The Warriors, ranked sixth nationally in the NCAA Division III poll, won their 12th straight game and need to win only one of their final two games to clinch the MAC title.

Indian junior quarterback Mike Culver attempted a record 49 passes, completing 25 for a record 353 yards and three touchdowns. Culver also broke the total offensive play record with 62 tries.

"Mike had a great game," said Juniata coach Rob Ash. "He hung in there well, and didn't get frustrated."

Culver's favorite receiver was sophomore split end Mike Cottle, who placed his name in the Juniata record book as well. Cottle grabbed 12 passes for a record 214 yards and three TD's, tying a school mark. Cottle has 11 touchdown catches this season, tying another school record.

"He had a super day," said Ash. "He showed great concentration. He does what he has to do to get open, and then he catches the ball."

Culver and Cottle connected for scores from 34, 24 and five yards, all in the second half. His first TD reception made the score 32-14 late in the third period.

Juniata was ready to get right back into the game as the final quarter began. The Indians moved 47 yards in just four plays to the Lyco 26 before Mike Flaherty intercepted a first-down pass on the one and returned it 17 yards.

Lycoming iced the game with a 10-play, 82-yard touchdown drive. Junior QB Larry Barretta ran 35 yards to score with 7:42 left in the game.

Barretta had a great day of his own, hitting 16 of 22 passes for 217 yards and two touchdowns. The 28 and 48 yard TD tosses were to wideout Rich Kessler, who caught a Lyco-record 10 passes for 155 yards. Barretta also rushed for 50 yards on 13 carries.

"He (Barretta) had an outstanding game," said Ash. "It was just a hot day for him. He passed, ran and audibled very well."

Juniata got into an early hole after a blocked punt and interception set up two first-half scores for the Warriors. Running back Joe Parsnik had six-yard and one-yard TD runs following drives of only 19 and six yards. A touchdown pass was sandwiched in between to give Lyco an 18-0 lead with 14:26 left in the half, as all three PAT tries failed.

A Culver one-yard TD run gave the Indians hope with 6:58 to go in the second quarter, but Lyco followed with a quick five-play, 77-yard drive capped by Frankie Girardi's 40-yard run to make it 25-7 at halftime.

"We got behind early and everything had to change," said Ash. "We couldn't run on offense and had to gamble on defense, and that gave them a couple of insurance scores.

"Even though they scored 39 points, our defense worked hard. We just gave Lycoming good field position early and they took advantage of their opportunties.

"They are an outstanding football team. They will represent the league well if they make the NCAA playoffs.

"On the other hand, we can finish alone in second place if we finish with two wins. We have a lot to play for these fina two weeks."

Juniata hosts Susquehanna and Upsala to end the season. Two victories would give the Indians an 8-3 finish, more wins than any season since the 1973 Stagg Bowl team went 10-2.

Sophomore Frank Phelps returned five kickoffs for over 100 yards last Saturday, almost breaking one for big yardage in the frustrating defeat at Lycoming, costing the Indians almost all their hopes for an MAC crown.

Football Team Says Thanks, Appreciate Your Support

Dear Editor and Students:

On behalf of our teamates and the entire Juniata football team we would like to thank everyone who has shown us such great support this season.

We would also like to give special thanks to all those that made the trip to Williamsport to support us in our game against Lycoming. It was great to turn around and see so many faces and to hear familiar voices cheering us on.

We also hope you will continue to show your support in our final two home games against rival Susquehanna and Upsala, as we hope to finish with two exciting victories.

Once again, thank you for your support. It is definitely noticed and appreciated.

Sincerely,

Gino Perri and Bob Yanckello,

WORLD NEWS UPDATE

By Mary McDougall

CLIFFSIDE, NJ — A corporate Falcon 50 jet and a private Piper Cherokee propeller plane collided Sunday kiling at least five people and raining fiery debris on two suburban towns.

The jet crashed into an apartment complex in Cliffside Park, burning five brick buildings and forcing 90 families to flee. The plane crashed into a house in nearby Fairview.

STRATFORD, NJ — Pelle Lindbergh, the All-Star Philadelphia goaltender, was declared brain dead and was not expected to recover following a car crash early Sunday.

Team Doctor Edward Viner said Lindbergh, one of the National Hockey League's top goalies, suffered extensive brain and spinal cord injuries and was being kept alive on life-support systems at a Stratford, NJ hospital.

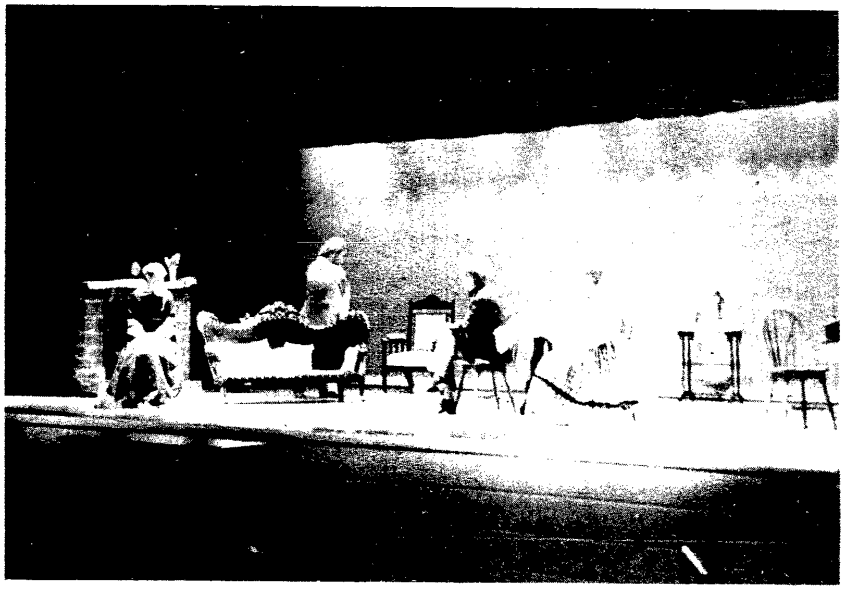
WASHINGTON, DC — the Prince and Princess of Wales arrived in Washington and began a three-day visit in the capital with coffee at the White House with President Reagan.

MOSCOW — Gary Kasparov won the world chess crown from Anatoly Karpov with a victory in the last game of their match in Moscow. At 22, he is the youngest world champion in the game's history.

RESERVE, La. — Miroslav Medved remained abroad as the Russian grain freighter he had twice jumped from pulled away from a Mississippi River dock near new Orleans on her way back to the Soviet Union. The Reagan administration allowed the ship to leave after officials concluded that the Ukranian seaman wanted to go home.

WASHINGTON, DC — President Reagan, in a speech broadcast to the Soviet Union, said Sunday that the United States had no hostile intentions and that the two sides must never engage in nuclear conflict.

Using and expanded weekly radio address, Reagan said he hoped his summit meeting this month with Mikhail S. Gorbachev would be fruitful and would lead to more sessions between the two leaders.



Margaret Gonglewski, Rob Boyer, Rush Blady, and Cheryl Kimbrough discuss "trashy" journalism in a scene from "Little Women." Louissa Mae Alcott's novel was presented in Oller Auditorium in three well-attended performances.

'Little Women' in Oller:
A Critical Review

by Helen Bailey

"Little Women," a play by Marian DeForest based on Louissa M. Alcott's novel, was presented last week in Oller Auditorium. A cast of twelve acted out the story of the March family and how their relationships change, develop, and grow, between the years 1863 and 1868.

The opening scene pegs the girl's characters right at the beginning. Jo, played by Cheryl Kimbrough, really lives her part of the tomboy; and in the same way, the character of the sweet and feminine Amy (Lisa Baer) comes alive as well.

The first main event in the play is when the father, Mr. March, played by Rush Blady, becomes ill and comes home from the Civil War. News of the illness panics the family, bringing the scene to life and the individual characters out of the actors.

Hannah, the maid played by Claire Buckley, adds life and lightheartedness throughout the play with her exagerated walk and her flustered manner. Amy adds humor by her mispronunciations -she means "punctual" when she says "punctilious," and "volcano" when she says "vulcan." The contrast between Jo and her sisters is also amusing.

Scenes where there was plenty of emotion were portrayed sometimes in a half baked manner. Laurie, played by Stephen B.Q. Meyers, rushes in to tell the family about the publishing of Jo's article in the newspaper, and although there was some air of excitement, most of them on stage seemed to just stand around. Lack of emotion came across in the acting of Mr. March; he never really seemed relaxed in the part. The fact that he looked the age to marry his daughters, rather than be their father, detracted from the part also.

John Brook seemed slightly detached from his part. In the scene where he finally gets together with Meg, it was unclear as to whether the nervousness he portrayed was acted or real.

The play spans a time of five years. This length of time is not apparent during the play, except for the changes of costume by some of the actors and the two different wigs that Jo wears. High quality costumes complimented the sparse scenery (and sparse change of scenery) and the lighting - which remained the same throughout the play.

The final scene held good acting by Professor Bhaer, played by Rob Boyer, in which his half German accent becomes more apparent.

"Girls, my girls," says Mrs. March "for as long as you live, I can wish you no greater happiness than this." This says it all really, the idea behind the play is that true happiness can be found by simply getting married. If the actors did not agree with this, then they do deserve credit for making the best of a not too brilliant storyline.

Peeping Tom in Mission

by Kim Chatfield

Mission House residents have had some unusual visitors. One was a burglar and the other a Peeping Tom. The Mission residents feel that the burglar and Peeping Tom are the same person and wonder about the safety of their house.

The burglar and Peeping Tom were looking and entering through the bathroom window. Fortunately, the burglar did not steal anything; the Peeping Tom was almost caught. One of the residents noticed someone looking throukgh the bathroom window and told the other roommates. They found some guys to block the alleyway. The Peeping Tom fell off the chair he was standing on and jumped over a fence so the guys couldn t catch him.

The Mission residents, alarmed, went to talk to Randy Deike, Director of Housing. He, in response, asked Security to step up their patroling and asked the Huntingdon police to check out the area. Randy feels that the Peeping Tom is not visiting just Mission but also other homes. "I have made sure that the building is secure and the students are aware of the situation," Deike said, "so the Mission residents shouldn't worry."

Mission residents are not necessarily in agreement. "We found out that Peeping Toms have been a problem for years, and feel we should have been told about it." They also claimed that a light is supposed to shine/protect the side of the house where the Peeping Tom is known to peek. The light which was designed to protect the house shines only from the back. To this day, there is no light that shines on the side in question.

Security measures weren't taken until after the burglar and Peeping Tom raided Mission House, claim Mission residents. Why weren't proper precautions taken after the first incident? the Mission people are wondering.

The Handicapped: Our Priority

The Board of Trustees is considering building an entranceway to announce to the world the presence of Juniata College. I'm sure some people find this exciting and glamorous. But where are our priorities? Wouldn't our money be better spent on making our campus more accessible to the handicapped?

Consider Good Hall. How easy is it for students with physical disabilities to get to even the first floor? Not a simple task without the help of some friends.

Or worse yet, let's discuss Ellis College Center. Because of the architecture, we have to go up or down steps to get where we need to go. It's not as if we can avoid the building. We eat breakfast, lunch, and dinner here. We pick up our mail here. We attend club meetings here. Try to maneuver these steps on crutches or in a wheelchair. The inaccessibility of one of our most used buildings is alarming.

Ramps would not be difficult to add on to Good Hall. One section of the front steps could be sloped to accomodate wheelchairs. Granted, elevators and chair lifts would be expensive. As long as our ratio of handicapped students is low, classes could be moved to accomodate those with difficulties in reaching upper floors.

Ellis Hall will be more of a problem - but if Juniata found the money for a new Sports+Recreation Center, there must be ways to fund this sort of project.

Maybe the Trustees need to know what the students consider to be of high priority.

Along Muddy Run

by Joe Scialabba

How much more can it rain?

It has to rain more in Huntingdon than anywhere else. The past 21 days have featured just one legitimate totally sunny day, the rest had plenty of clouds and rain.

This is truly hard to believe since over the summer it hardly rained at all. Now, with the college in session, it finds a way to rain seemingly 90% of the time.

Maybe there is a curse on the Juniata College student in 1985. Why? I don't know.

Still, what can explain several tragic occurences:

One, the lack of phone lines in Ellis.

Two, the huge hole dug near Ellis for no apparent reason except to sever the phone lines.

Three, invisible foodstuffs in Baker.

Four, a changing alcohol policy, leading to Five, no traditional lounge parties, then maybe

Six, no kegs in rooms, before

Seven, who knows?

Then comes the now infamous brown/blackout on Sunday that sent terror through bodies from Good Hall to the computer center to North. Strange things are happening at Juniata, making Halloween look like a picnic.

What's happened to our quaint, quiet, fun, happy, steady, predictable and unique school. Are we being punished for our years of taking everything we had for granted? I'm not sure.

I am sure, though, that the Juniata I know and love is changing very, very rapidly. At this point, I hope all the changing and raining end after Thanksgiving, or we might get as much snow as a dry town in Montana this winter. I don't want to think about it.

Madrigal Sign-ups

by Cinny Cooper

Madrigal Dinner sign-ups will be held "the same way they've always been run," reported the event's chairperson, K.C. Coulter.

Students can sign up for the Christmas dinner Wednesday, Dec. 4 on a first come, first served basis. This system has been criticized in the past because students have camped outside the night before sign-ups in order to get a good table.

Coulter pointed out that only Juniata students are permitted to attend the Dec. 13 dinner. Students not on the meal plan may participate by paying $4.95 when signing up.

Tables of 8 and 4 are available. Students must submit names, meal sticker numbers and one box number at the sign-up desk in the Ellis Ballroom.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

Recently there has been a lot of talk, or rather complaints, concerning the change in the alcohol policy at Juniata College. Many students have shown a concern for the elimination of the traditional lounge parties, some to the point of threatening to transfer. Several weeks ago, Baker Refectory was filled with students who wanted to learn about their future drinking rights. As I looked around, I was very impressed with the attendance and thought that maybe we, as students, could influence the decision.

As it stands, last weekend was the end of a long line of alcohol lounge parties. From my understanding, this new "law" was initiated to relieve the college from responsibility for driving-related accidents caused by alcohol. This may free the school from the possibilities of law suits, but the students will still be responsible for their drinking and driving. I'm sure that I am not alone when encouraging JC students, and everyone else, to not drive at all after consuming alcoholic beverages.

I've always thought that people I know can drive when slightly intoxicated — things never seem to happen to people you know. It's always someone killed in another state, from another school, or someone in the same town that you've never heard of - that's how it always is. Well, two weeks ago, the father of a very good friend of mine was killed by a drunk driver and the drunk driver walked away with a scratch on his forehead. It's hard to believe that someone I

What did you do when the lights went out?

Jonathan Valori (junior): "I freaked. First, I had a computer program due and I had a test to study for which wasn't easy with the lights out and computers down."

Roy Santa Croce (sophomore): "I was in the library and couldn't deal with no lights. We lit candles and went to the downstairs apartment and played poker with a bunch of girls. It ruined my night when they went back on. I wish we'd have a black out more often."

Noreen Aylesworth (freshman): "I drank beer and had a blackout party and went outside for awhile. A lot of people were mad cause the computer center was down and no one could type."

Lori Dobbins (sophomore): "We lit candles and Dan played his guitar."

Sharon Dotts (senior): "Not a lot, went visiting. 2nd South had a pizza party. You couldn't exactly study."

Jason Eggleston (sophomore): "I went to McDonald's."

Juniata Trustee Named Volunteer of the Year

Dr. Edwin L. Kennedy, a prominent member of Juniata College's Board of Trustees, has been named the 1985 Volunteer of the Year in education by the Council for Advancement and Support of Education (CASE).

Kennedy, who was selected for the honor from a field of 45 nominees, received his award at a gala celebration in Washington, D.C. The award recognizes the numerous volunteer projects he has undertaken at nine different colleges and universities including Juniata and his alma mater, Ohio University. Kennedy's service to higher education dates back to 1954.

A resident of New Vernon, N.J., Kennedy is a retired senior partner of the international investment firm of Lehman Brothers, Kuhn, Loeb, Inc., the firm he has been associated with since 1941. He currently serves on the Board of Directors of the Kerr-McGee Corporation, and is a former director of the Ingram Corporation, Oil Shale Corporation, Sunlite Oil Company, Ltd., Tosco, Republic National Gas, Murphy Corporation and Southern Production. In addition to Juniata's board, where he has served since 1969, Kennedy also is a trustee at Ohio University and Hiram College.

Kennedy has served Juniata as honorary chairman of the Margin of Difference campaign completed in 1976 and the Sports+Recreation Center phase of the Century II Campaign. Juniata's new Kennedy Sports+Recreation Center is dedicated to Kennedy and his late wife, Ruth E. Kennedy.

After graduating from Ohio University, Kennedy taught in the Ohio public schools and then did graduate work at Ohio State University and the Harvard University Graduate School of Business Administration. He holds honorary doctorates from several institutions including an L.H.D. from Juniata awarded in 1977, the year he was the college's Commencement speaker.

Kennedy's early business career included work in commercial banking and private investment advising, at which time he developed a strong interest in the energy and petroleum field. Under Kennedy's direction, the petroleum and natural gas field became one of Lehman Brothers most important financial activities.

CASE established its Volunteer of the Year award in 1983 to recognize the vital role volunteers play in education. Last year, Kennedy received CASE's Exceptional Achievement Award as one of the top 10 higher education volunteers in the country.

"There are many outstanding examples of Dr. Kennedy's commitment to higher education," said Juniata President Frederick M. Binder. "This prestigious award is richly deserved as a public recognition of his many years of volunteer service to institutions like Juniata College. We are grateful for Dr. Kennedy's dedication and support, and congratulate him as 1985's Volunteer of the Year in education."

More than 2,700 educational institutions in the United States and Canada are members of CASE, the international professional association of campus fund raisers, alumni administrators, government relations professionals and communicators.

Semester Status

by Cinny Cooper

(This is the second article of a weekly series designed to address questions concerning the upcoming switch to semesters.)

The 1986-1987 academic year will have Juniata students in class Monday, Aug. 25 - two weeks earlier than this year.

The 1986 fall semester will consist of 74 class days, ending Thursday, Dec. 11. Friday will be Reading Day. Final exams will begin Saturday, Dec. 13 and continue the following Monday through Friday.

Two vacations are scheduled during the fall semester. Students will begin their fall recess after classes Friday, Oct. 17. Classes will resume on Wednesday, Oct. 22.

The second vacation, Thanksgiving Recess, will be Wednesday, Nov. 26 through Sunday, Nov. 30. Classes will resume Dec. 1.

The 1987 spring semester will consist of 72 class days, beginning Monday, Jan. 19 and ending Tuesday, May 5. Finals will begin Thursday, May 7 and end Wednesday, May 13 (excluding Sunday, May 10).

Spring Recess will start after class Friday, March 13. Classes will resume 10 days later, March 23.

Students will have no class on Good Friday, April 17.

Because of the new schedule, seniors will graduate one week earlier. Commencement will be May 17, 1987.

Physics Lecture Held On Halley's Comet

Halley's Comet and Juniata College's historic Brashear telescope were the topics of a lecture last night at the college's Brumbaugh Science Center.

Dr. Norman E. Siems, associate professor of physics and department chairman, and George Drobnock, president of the Mt. Union Historical Society, presented the lecture entitled "Halley's Comet: Juniata College 1910 and 1985."

Drobnock, a 1972 Juniata graduate, opened the program with a talk on the college's five-inch Brashear telescope, purchased from John Brashear in 1908. According to Drobnock, Brashear, one of the most prominent telescope makers of the early 20th century, visited the Juniata campus to lecture in the early 1900's. He was invited back again in 1908 and brought the telescope with him. Through a subscription system, the college purchased the telescope for $500.

Early college records show that the instrument was often used by students for "telescope parties," and to view Halley's Comet in 1910, the last time the comet visited earth. The Brashear telescope will be on display the night of the lecture.

For the second part of the program, Siems talked about the nature of comets in general and about the upcoming visit of Halley's Comet. Siems noted that Halley's Comet will be visible in the sky in November and December, and again in March and April. The comet visits earth every 75 years.

The Nov. 13 lecture was sponsored by the Society of Physics Students.

Indians Football Defeats Crusaders, 30-24

By Joe Scialabba

It was fitting. The Juniata College defense was finally rewarded for its aerial thievery Saturday when sophomore tackle Tom Yeager ran 30 yards with his second interception to score in the fourth quarter, and help the Indians to a 30-24 Midle Atlantic Conference win over Susquehanna University.

The tribe defense, which now claims a record 31 interceptions in 10 games, picked off four Ken Hughes passes, resulting in three Juniata scores.

Yeager's first interception on the Juniata 29 yard line started the Indians on an eight play, 69 yard drive midway through the first half. Quarterback Mike Culver threw six yards to Mike Cottle to give the Tribe a 14-7 lead with 13:58 left in the first half.

Linebacker Bob Crossey intercepted a third- quarter pass on the Susquehanna 34 yard line with the Indians clinging to a 17-14 advantage. On the next play Culver hit Cottle again to cushion the lead 23-14 with 8:50 to go in the period.

The Juniata pass rush was pounding Hughes continually, leading to Yeager's scoring play in the final stanza. A blind-side rush and hit knocked the ball right into the lineman's grasp and Yeager's churning legs did the rest.

Crossey ended any Crusader chances with his second interception in the final minute deep in Susquehanna territory.

"Tom Yeager may have had one of the best games of all-time," said Juniata Coach Rob Ash. "To go with his two interceptions, he also had a solid game overall, nine tackles and a sack."

"Twenty-four points sounds like a bad defensive game for us, but it wasn't. We let them have two short drives thanks to fumbles. Other than that we were solid. The turnovers were a big part of the game."

Two Juniata fumbles aided the crusader effort. The Indians fumbled on their first play of the game at thier own 15, and two plays later Hughes threw 13 yards to Al Bucci for a 7-0 lead. A fourth- quarter fumble led to a five- play, 40 yard drive to make the score 30-24 with 7:25 left in the game, as Joe Witt bounced in from the one to cap the drive.

Juniata kicker Mike Schaffner, who hit three of four extra points, and Crusader Randy Pozsar traded third quarter field goals from 37 and 28 yards, respectively, as the Indians took a 23-17 lead into the final quarter. Schaffner broke and tied two more Juniata records Saturday.

The score was tied at the end of the first two quarters with Crusader runningback John Lotti finishing the first- half scoring on a 2-yard run with 10:01 left to make it 14-14. Juniata freshman fullback Pat Dunneher scored his first collegiate touchdown late in the first quarter to tie the game at 7-7, following the block of 225- pound lineman turned fullback Ty Snavely.

The "ice box" play, as Ash terms it, is an immitation of the Chicago Bears' "Refrigerator Perry" play. Juniata's version worked for the third time in three tries this season.

Without a gimic the Indian rushing game produced 209 yards, with tailback Rick Bouch gaining 98 yards on 22 carries, Fullback Ian Malee 71 on 10 tries and Culver 39 on 14 keeps, but it was the overall offensive balance that pleased Ash.

"Our offensive line had an outstanding game," said Ash. "They have been having a great season, but this was super. We ran and passed well."

Quarterback Culver, who now owns an Indian record with 15 touchdown passes this season, connected on 14 of 20 passes for 208 yards and no interceptions. Cottle, who caught six passes for 108 yards, also moved into the record book with his 13th TD catch of the year.

Culver hit Tight End Jim Metz five times for 75 yards and Flanker Morgan Johns grabbed three for 25 to take some pressure off Cottle, who has 50 catches on the year.

"It was an exciting, thrilling game," said Ash. "Our guys played well when it got tough and things were on the line."

"Susquehanna had a nice team, and I was impressed with their offense. We won because we could run the ball better."

The Crusaders managed just 61 yards on the ground and hit only 16 of 41 passes for 206 yards.

Juniata, now 7-3 and 6-2 in the MAC, won for the sixth time in the last seven weeks, and now owns the Susquehanna- Juniata Goalpost Trophy for the first time since 1981, when JC won 17-0. Susquehanna fell to 2-7, and 2-6 in the MAC.

The tribe can clinch the MAC runner-up position with a win this Saturday against Upsala. The kickoff is set for 1:30p.m. at Juniata's College Field.

Junior Quarterback Mike Culver puts one up over the middle on the road to 208 yards passing and a Juniata record of 15 touchdown passes in a season. A solid effort by both the offense and defense led to the 30-24 victory over Susquehanna to keep the Indian play-off hopes alive.

Men's V-Ball Host Tourney

By Larry Hillman

Juniata's Men's Volleyball Club hosted two teams from Messiah and one team from Elizabethtown Colleges this past Sunday in a tournament. Juniata's A-team (JCA) finished with 6 wins and 2 losses, tied with Elizabethtown, while our B-team (JCB) recorded only one win against 7 losses. That one win however came against Elizabethtown.

JCA, led by setters Tom Hunt and Andy Rhinehart split their first match against Messiah A, 9-15 and 15-11. Our B-team's first opponent was J.C.'s A-team, who showed no reluctance to put the ball on the floor against their clubmates, as they won 15-3 and 15-2.

Next JCA took the measure of Messiah's B-team, 15-8 and 15-11. Chris Hester, Mike Wojcik, Danny Stambaugh and Keith Hall provided the offense. Elizabethtown took one from JCA 6-15, but some stubborn defense and sharp offense provided JCA with a 15-11 win to end the day.

After the two losses to the A-team, Juniata's B-troops faced Elizabethtown and lost the first game 6-15, but turned things around in the second game by pulling the upset of the day 15-9. Setters Larry Hillman and Mike Nelson coordinated the offense.

Next JCB battled Messiah B, but narrowly lost 14-16. The second game of that match ended 5-15. Terry Seiple, Jack Winebrenner and Jim O'Brien sparked the offense.

Ladies Win MAC's

by Andy Hiscock

The Juniata Women's Volleyball Team brought home their fifth straight Middle Atlantic Conference title this past weekend. The MAC's were held at Western Maryland this year. The Indians put together another strong performance after a slow start to win the MAC championship and move on to the NCAA division III play-offs.

On Friday afternoon, the Indians began their pool play. Their first opponent was Western Maryland. JC defeated W. Maryland in three games 15-9, 14-16, 15-6. The ladies met Gettysburg next and after a 8-15 loss in the first game, the Indians pulled together to win the match with 15-8, 15-7 victories in the final two games. In the last match on Friday, the Indians continued to roll as they defeated Scranton 15-2, 15-13.

On Saturday, the Indians played the last pool match of the tournament, the Indians were unstoppable as they crushed Swathmore 15-0, 15-2. The Indians won their pool with an undefeated record to move into the semi-finals where they met Elizabethtown. The Indians had no trouble as they continued their solid play and won the match in two quick games 15-1, 15-6. The Indians reached the Finals with Messiah without a loss. The best of 5 match went smoothly for the Indians as they won three straight games 15-7, 15-11, and 16-14 to win their 5th straight MAC Title. The Indians now wait to see if they will receive a first-round bye in the nationals scheduled to begin November 22nd. I know that I am not alone when I congradulate the ladies on another fine performance, and wish them the best of luck in the NCAA Play-offs.

The Final Presidential Candidates Visit Juniata

by Cinny Cooper

The presidential search began to wind down last week as the final three candidates visited Juniata College.

The three candidates spoke to faculty, students, and administrators in separate sessions. Each candidate addressed the question, "Describe your vision of what you would like Juniata College to become in the next 10 years; based upon the criteria used for the selection of the President, what would your role be in guiding Juniata toward this vision?"

Five criteria have been set forth as a guide in the selection of a president:

1) To sustain and improve Juniata's financial base.
2) To have some experience at a school similar to Juniata in character and tradition.
3) Leadership.
4) To work well with people.
5) To embody the College, its mission and heritage.

Dr. Robert W. Neff is currently General Secretary of the Church of the Brethren General Board. He has been a Professor of Biblical Studies, Youth Minister, and Assistant Pastor.

His studies include classes at Penn State University, Berea College, Yale, and Cambridge University. He has been awarded honorary degrees from Juniata, Manchester, and Bridgewater Colleges.

Neff cited academic excellence as one of his goals for the future of Juniata. This includes superior teaching and "the graduation of a superior person." He also supported a "re-emergence" of the humanities at Juniata.

If in the presidency position, Neff would use the Juniata surroundings as an asset. The opportunities of rural Pennsylvania could be used to attract students, he said.

Neff cited planning, "an ongoing function," as a major responsibility of a college president. He emphasized trust and inherent strength, quoting the phrase "the best leaders, people hardly notice."

The second visiting candidate, Alan J. Stone, is currently president of Aurora University. He has been an Admissions Counselor, Director of Admisssions, Vice-President of College Relations, Vice-President of Development and Financial Affairs, Director of Developoment, and Associate Professor of History at five different colleges.

His studies include degrees from Morningside College, University of Chicago, and University of Iowa. He is a trustee of Carlow College and President of the Associated Colleges of Illinois.

Stone admitted to being impressed by the credentials of Juniata professors and the strong reputation of the college.

He spoke of his concern for raising revenue in a declining market and the "chopping away" of the humanities.

For the future, Stone would increase the freshman class, provide more courses and internships to improve student marketability, and increase the amount of the Juniata budget funded by donations.

Stone described the position of president as being the chief fundraiser of a college, adding "I enjoy asking for money." One of his goals would be to decrease Juniata's debt.

Dan West, the third candidate, is currently president of Arkansas College. He has been a Presbyterian minister, Director of Church Relations, Professor of Interdisciplinary Studies, and Professor of Humanities.

West has attended Austin College, University of Texas, Texas Christian University, U.S. Naval Academy, Union Theological Seminary, Vanderbilt University, and Harvard.

A "financially stronger" college is one of West's goals. He cited hard work and commitment as the ways to meet these goals.

As president, he would work to improve college visibility and marketing, financial support, and "fine tuning" methods of teaching. He also noted the importance of presidential availability and communication.

West spoke of his commitment to liberal arts, and his interest in Juniata's peace and conflict studies and international programs.

Candidate Dan West

Take A Look At The Little Things

Sometimes we overlook the little things. Granted, as students we should be concerned with the alcohol policy and tuition increases, but what about the everyday problems, the ones that make or break your day.

According to the Pathfinder, there are 381 parking spaces on campus. The Security office states that approximately 270 students have registered vehicles. This gives every student driver almost 1.5 parking places. It seems we should all be happy.

Those who spend their time in South or in the Kennedy Sports + Recreation Center probably are content. There are 250 places in these lots alone. On the other hand, our future physicists, chemists, biologists and computer analysts might have a complaint.

The signs in Oller lot practically shout - NO STUDENT PARKING. From 8 a.m. until 5 p.m. this makes sense. Our faculty has to park somewhere. After five, most professors go home and the industrious scientists of the future come out to hone their skills in nearby Brumbaugh Science Center. I would hate to upset a student chemist by telling him he can't park in Oller lot - even though it's usually empty in the evening anyway.

Why not make student parking available in Oller lot from 5 p.m. until 8 a.m.? There are a few reasons. First, the signs would have to be changed. Perhaps there's no room to say "No student parking between 8 a.m. and 5 p.m." Secondly, who would Security give tickets to?

Yes, maybe it is time to look at the little things that make Juniata College an enjoyable place to live - or unenjoyable, depending on whether you own a car or not.

by Michelle Stover

The Psychedelic Furs, otherwise known simply as The Furs, is a sensational new-wave group. The Furs' album "Forever Now" is a mixture of new-wave songs, which are just pure greatness. The album "Forever Now" was produced by Todd Rundgren for Alchemedia Productions and manufactured in 1982 by Columbia Records.

The "Forever Now" tape begins on side one with the title cut "Forever Now," a typical new-wave song. The typical new-wave song makes no sense at all but its pulsating beat makes the song great. The general topic of the song "Forever Now" is how people are always lying to each other and shouting at one another.

"Love My Way," the second song on the first side, has an excellent drum and bells accompaniment. The song is about two people who meet on the dance floor and fall in love, and how other people try to break happy couples up.

"Goodbye" is a fast-beating song about a guy who leaves his girlfriend and makes a life for himself. When he comes home, he doesn't want to see her or his old friends.

Other songs on the first side include "Only You and I" and "Sleep Comes Down" which has an awesome drum section. The song "Sleep Comes Down," a nice mellow song, is about someone who dreams about his lover until he falls asleep.

Side two includes "President Gas," a totally mixed up mess with a great beat. "Run and Run" has a good drum section. "Danger" is about all the danger in the world and how you must lock love up in a cage if you want to keep it safe. The song says that people consider themselves 1 and don't want to be bothered by others. "No Easy Street" is a nice down-to-earth song with a good bass section. "Yes I Do" is about a guy who wants this one special girl - I want you, "Yes I do."

"Forever Now" by the Furs is a totally awesome album. It may take some people awhile to get used to new-wave but once the spirit hits you, it will stay in your heart.

Anyone who tells me that they'll miss this place is sick. I just went through one of our favorite sado-masochistic rituals - the dreaded Drop-Add (which should be called Drop-Dead). Now this is the first time I've ever experienced this delight, and let me tell you, that's just what this is. First you have to find your advisors, which is no small feat of its own. Typical advisor office hours are 4:00-4:30 a.m. and 6:00-6:10 on Sundays. And if you pry yourself out of bed and go to the office, you always find the same thing. The office is open, the lights are on, but your advisor is nowhere to be found. It's like they hide behind the desk and enjoy torturing you. And, if by some miracle, you find them in the office at some God-forsaken hour, then it takes you two hours to explain to them why you have to drop Theoretical-Thermo-Nuclear-Physics and add Underwater Basket Weaving. It's even better that you get to perform this arduous task not once but twice. Now comes time for a trip to the registrar where two harried secretaries try to deal with something the size of Macy's Christmas rush. And to top everything off, you find that your Underwater Basket Weaving Class is closed and all that's left is Differential Equations, Chem. Principles, and Advanced Diseases of the Urinary Tract. I mean seriously, I'm a bio-chemistry major and I'm taking two geology courses this term. When we were freshmen, we should have been issued two rubber stamps with our advisors' signatures on them and left it at that.

On the first day of classes, we should just show up for the classes we want. If we find we don't like them then we should try to find new ones and continue this process until we find a good combination. The classes themselves should be more practical also. Back-stabbing Your Partner 301 would be an excellent upper level business course. How about Synthetic Drug Production For Profit 403, or Covering Up A Nuclear Disaster 411? Any of these courses would be much more practical than the ones we suffer through now, but what do you expect from a Mexican school in the middle of nowhere, in a town whose name means feces collection? Will May never come?

ROME — Remedies for acute church problems that have arisen since Vatican II were called for by the bishops of the extraoridinary synod at the end of their two-week meeting in Rome. They issued a report calling for specific actions that was welcomed and approved by Pope John Paul II.

KAMPALA, Uganda — Signs of war are plentiful in Uganda. After nearly two decades of political oppression, religious strife and untold atrocities and massacres, Uganda is locked in a war with itself. So complete is the crisis brought about by fighting between factions from the north and south that it has virtually ceased to function as a nation.

WASHINGTON,D.C. — Radical budget-making changes would result from the legislation to end the Federal deficits that is expected to pass in Congress this week, lawmakers say. They say the measure would alter the policy goals and political stakes in coming budget battles between the White House and Congress.

WASHINGTON,D.C. — Eastern bloc diplomats were warned by the Reagan administration that their right to travel freely in the United States would be curbed if they were detected in areas that are closed to Soviet officials, State Department officials said. The move is part of a new counterespionage effort to prevent East Europeans from spying on behalf of Moscow.

PITTSBURGH — A convict who became a surgeon is being denied a license in Pennsylvania because of his conviction on drug charges. Dr. Timothy McCormick, who served a term in the state's Western Penitentiary, graduated last June in the top third of his class. The state's refusal to license him has raised a bitter contrversy.

Albright and Juniata Leadership Exchange

by Eric J. Share

How can we improve Albright College? What are its faults? What are its strengths? To help find the answers to these and other important questions, our school invited students from Juniata College to come here, to our campus, and talk about problems that both schools share.

Called the "Juniata/Albright Leadership Exchange Program," it lasted from early Friday evening through Saturday afternoon. After dinner, the student leaders held a conference in the Selwyn Hall Meeting Room. The major topics of discussion were social life and increased student involvement in college policies and decisions.

In years past, Albright's social life had centered around fraternity and sorority parties. But because of new stringent policies, "open" Greek parties are a thing of the past. Now only Greeks and selected invitees may enjoy the relaxed atmosphere that Greek housing has to offer. Juniata faces a similar predictament as there are no Greek organizations on their campus. Although no definite answers were arrived upon, the Juniata representatives told of a program at their school specifically designed to furnish non-alcoholic activities on the weekends. Both schools realize that where there are college students, there is alcohol.

And here lies a double-edged sword. If a college condones use of alcohol on campus, the school may be legally liable for any injuries which may result. On the other hand, if there is no alcohol present on campus, any student drinker who has access to a car will invariably drive to one of the many bars in town. Needless to say, drunk driving follows. It was agreed upon that education (increased alcohol awareness) and common sense among the student body are the best solutions.

The Juniata representatives included Mara Blake(Pre-Teaching), Ann Tinsman(Student Leadership Development), Sue Gulla(Student Affairs Council), Amy Lane (Resident Hall Association), and Lisa Shook(Band Front).

Albright's representatives were Sandy Galtere (C.A.R.), Eric Share (The Albrightian), Steve Pottieger (S.G.A.), Kristin Diefenderfer (C.A.R.), Scott Bilder (WXAC-FM), and Stuart Brandt (WXAC-FM).

After the Friday night conference and a quick change of clothes, the girls from Juniata were treated to the Sharks concert. They were escorted by the brothers of Tau Kappa Epsilon. After an invitation only gathering at the TKE House (no open parties!!), the Juniata students retired for the evening to the Reading Motor Inn, courtesy of Albright College.

Another conference dealing with the same subjects took place on Saturday morning. "I had a lot of fun," said Lisa Shook from Juniata. "I expected a lot of boring lectures, but the atmosphere was very casual and relaxed. We learned a lot more that way. And the people here are all so nice!"

In the near future, Albright representatives will visit Juniata College to continue this Leadership Exchange Program. Hopefully, these and other similar programs will help both schools to solve their problems.

New Policy Gets Trial Run

By Laura Mumaw

This past weekend was a trial run for the new alcohol policy, with the Juniata Ski Club sponsoring the first BYOB lounge party in Tussey-Terrace. It was very successful.

Under the new policy kegs are being restricted at lounge parties, as well as private parties in the residence halls. Lounge party sponsors are no longer providing kegs, while parties in individual rooms are required to have a 21 year old who has completed Social Host College, a course being offered by the school.

Along with th e specifications, there are certai.. others regarding fines, organizations sponsoring alcohol and liability details which have been outlined by the Student Affairs Council (SAC).

The transportation of alcohol, which once was a major concern with the new policy, posed no problems last weekend. Students were allowed to transport liquor to and from the lounge party if the containers were closed.

There is still the opportunity to attend lounge parties as well as to entertain in individual rooms. Revisions may occur later, however this initial test was a positive start for the new policy.

Much credit for the successful implementation of this policy should go to the student body. As emphasized at an informative meeting during Fall Term, the new policy was not a reaction to concerns on student behavior, but because of changes in the law. At this time the student body was informed of the liabilities of the college and the possibilities of being sued. The impact of the new laws pertaining to social hosts and their furnishing alcohol triggered the change in Juniata's alcohol policy.

Ski Club Sponsors Trip

by Ann Telfeian and Jill Klova

The Ski Club is sponsoring a week of skiing at Killington, Vermont, March 2-7.

The cost of the trip is $199 (tax included) with five nights of condo lounging. This includes five days of lifts on all mountains involving the gondolas which will take you to Killington Peak which has a vertical rise at 3,000 feet.

A $40 non-refundable deposit is required and there is also a $25 refundable security deposit required.

Ski lessons will be $41, rentals are $75, and rentals and lessons together are $75.

Alfarata Woes Are Over

by Jenniner Nicholson

The 1984-85 Alfarata layout sheets have been returned to Noreen Nightengale, editor of the 1985-86 yearbook. Kristine Van Horn, editor of the 1984-85 yearbook, had taken the layout sheets home and had previously refused to return them to the college. Van Horn recently brought the layouts directly to Nightengale, without contacting any of the college administration, which was considering legal action to obtain the layout sheets.

Nightengale stated that the layouts were returned unfinished. "There was no way Kristine Van Horn could have finished them with her resources. I have to finish them," commented Nightengale. However, this extra work will hopefully not put her behind in her work with putting together this year's book. The 1985-86 yearbook is half completed. The rate of completion now depends mainly on how quickly the pictures can be taken and the copy can be typed.

Members of the Juniata College Women's volleyball team present a check to C. Dean Keaton, chairman of this year's fund drive for the American Cancer Society, Huntingdon County Unit. Sponsler Summers At Armed Forces Institute

Many college students participate in internships as a part of their studies, but few internship programs are as unique as the one in which Todd Sponsler participated this summer.

Sponsler, an Altoona resident and a senior at Juniata, spent 10 weeks working at the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology in Washington, D.C. The world renowned institute is a joint agency of the Army, Navy and Air Force under the management of the Secretary of the Army and supports the study of diseases of all kinds from all over the world. It is the central collection center in the United States of pathological specimens.

During his internship, Sponsler worked in the department of infectious and parasitic diseases. Under the supervision of Dr. Meade Pimsler, researcher in microbiology, he did research in the immunology of mycobacterial infections.

"The first few weeks I spent a lot of time in the library doing background reading, but the rest of the time I was in the lab," Sponsler says. "The research was mostly designed before I got there but I carried out most of it on my own. I worked independently, although there was always help if I needed it."

The disease Sponsler studied is called the Buruli ulcer. It is a rare disease found in tropical countries, usually in Africa and South Asia. "I was trying to characterize the toxin released by the bacteria. I tried to discover its nature and find out why there doesn't seem to be an immune response to it," explains Sponsler.

Sponsler will be continuing his research for the institute while at Juniata. The institute also has plans to publish a paper on the results of his research. "A lot of what I did was new to me. It was a very good experience," Sponsler says.

In addition to his independent research, Sponsler attended daily pathology conferences in which physicians examined and discussed slide specimens of cases sent in from all over the world.

"Their specimen collection is probably the best in the country. Practically any disease you could name, they have a specimen for, and often it's the only existing one," Sponsler says.

Sponsler is the ninth Juniata student to receive the summer student research position with the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology, according to Dr. Robert P. Zimmerer, professor of biology at Juniata. The internship, in which Juniata is the only participating undergraduate college in the country, was established by Dr. Wayne Meyers, chief of microbiology for the institute's department of infectious and parasitic diseases. A 1947 Juniata graduate, Dr. Meyers received the 1985 Alumni Achievement Award for his life-long work which has included service as a missionary physician with the American Leprosy Missions in Zaire and Burundi, Africa for 12 years.

Zimmerer notes that the prestigious internship is open to premedicine and biology students interested in graduate studies in micro-biology. "The student must be academically outstanding and show promise as a future physician or researcher," Zimmerer says. Sponsler is a biology major considering medical school and possibly a career in research.

Sponsler says he also enjoyed the opportunity to see and live in Washington, D.C. "I'd highly recommend it to anyone who had the opportunity to participate."

Todd Sponsler (center) of Altoona, participated in a 10-week summer internship at the world renowned Armed Forces Institute of Pathology in Washington, D.C. where he conducted research on the tropical disease Buruli ulcer. The Juniata College senior, who serves as a biology lab assistant at the college, is the ninth Juniata student to participate in this program. Juniata is the only undergraduate college in the country to have an internship program with the Armed Forces Institute of Pathology.

JC Hosts Impressionist Display

by Helen Bailey

A collection of 30 prints, all poster reproductions of original paintings, are currently on display in Shoemaker Art Gallery.

The reproductions are mainly of the Impressionist and Post-Impressionist style. The posters were made to advertize recent exhibitions in the Metropolitan Museum of Art in New York City.

The main Impressionist painters in this exhibition are Monet (who originated this style and inspired the first exhibition of Impressionist art, Paris, 1874), Pissarro, Cezanne, Degas and Renoir. The term "Impressionism" was originally used by the critics of the day as a derogatory term because such paintings were considered to be unfinished and therefore mere impressions.

The exhibition also includes reproductions of the works of Post-Impressionists—Van Gogh, Gaugin, and Picasso among others.

Expressionists such as Kandinsky, Franz Marc and Nolde are also on display. Expressionism can be distinguished by its use of violent exagerations and distortions, as opposed to the relatively simple, formless art of Impressionism.

The display is serving as a preview for this year's Decadence to Disaster class. The class will travel to the National Gallery in Washington, D.C. Jan. 23.

The posters will be on display for another month.

JELLO WRESTLING

Coming to Juniata??

Catch The Holiday Spirit Tuesday Night

A program of Christmas music will be presented by the Juniata College Choral Union, College-Community Orchestra and the Juniata College Band Tuesday, December 17 in Oller Auditorium at 8:15 p.m.

The first half of the program will be performed by the Juniata College Band under the direction of Ibrook Tower, associate professor of music. Selections will include Cortege "Procession of the Nobles" (Mlada) by Nicholai Rimsky-Korsakov, Johann Sebastian Bach's "Prelude and Fugue in G minor" and "Choral and Alleluia" by Howard Hanson. In addition, William Schuman's Prelude "When Jesus Wept" will feature Robert Schwartz on trumpet and Illona Gillette on Euphonium.

The second half of the program features the Choral Union accompanied by the College-Community Orchestra. The Choral Union is comprised of Juniata students, staff and members of the community under the direction of Dr. Joseph W. Figg, assistant professor of music. The 20-piece orchestra will include Juniata students and musicians from the Altoona and Nittany Valley symphonies.

The Choral Union will perform Bach's "Magnificat." Soloists for the concert will be four Juniata students: Jocelyn Fowler, soprano; Karen Reap, mezzo-soprano; Alan Thomas, tenor; and Darin Everhart, bass. Along with the band's performance of "Prelude and Fugue in G Minor", "Magnificat" will celebrate the 300th anniversary of Bach's birth.

Area residents are cordially invited to enjoy this special holiday concert. Admission is free of charge.

Semester Status

by Cinny Cooper

This week's topic: Unit conversion and POE requirements.

With the switch to semesters, underclassmen will need 126 semester hours to graduate next year.

This number was determined by multiplying 36 (the number of classes normally taken in four years) by 3.5 (the number of semester hours per current Juniata unit).

To determine semester hours already completed, Freshmen, Sophomores, and Juniors should multiply classes completed by 3.5. The Registrar's office will try to handle any conversion problems so that Juniors currently on track will graduate on time.

Most classes under the semester system will run three or four hours per week. There will be a few one and two hour classes.

POE requirements will still consist of 15 courses for current students.

For new students, the POE will consist of 52 semester hours. Eighteen of those hours must be from 300 or 400 level courses.

New students must take nine hours in each of the required core curriculums—Historical/Cultural, Analytical, and Expressive. Current students will still be required to take three courses in each area.

Work Abroad Program Offers Variety of Jobs

"My summer work in London was the most satisfying experience of my life. Immersed as part of the society, among the work force, facing the same problems of inflation and bureaucracy, one cannot help but come to understand how a culture, a people can differ—in attitudes, outlooks and assumptions."

This was the assessment of one student who participated in the Work Abroad Program sponsored by the Council on International Educational Exchange, the largest student travel organization in the United States.

Now in its sixteenth year, the Work Abroad Program is the only one of its kind available in the U.S. It cuts through the red tape to help thousands of students obtain permission for temporary work in Britain, Ireland, France, Germany, New Zealand and Costa Rica. With the assistance of the Council's cooperating student organizations in each country and helpful pre-departure material, participants discover that finding a job abroad is no more difficult than at home.

Apart from a modest program fee of $72 ($150 for Work in Costa Rica), the only significant cost to the student is the airfare—and even that expense may be reduced by special student and youth fares available through the Council.

". . .work abroad is a tremendous learning experience; one is enriched with relationships with fellow workers and the adventure of supporting oneself," reported another student who worked in a Paris boutique. Although jobs found are primarily unskilled—in restaurants, stores and hotels—salaries generally more than cover the cost of room and board. Often participants save enough money out of their earnings to treat themselves to a vacation once they stop working.

Employment found by participants in the past includes work as chambermaids or porters in London's West End, as a farm helper on a sheep station in New Zealand, and as a banking trainee in a prominent Parisian financial institution.

The program is open to degree-seeking students attending an accredited U.S. college or university. Students must be 18 years of age or older and language proficiency is required for the appropriate countries. For more information and application forms, write: Council on International Educational Exchange, PR-WA, 205 East 42nd Street, New York, NY 10017.

The first snowfall at Juniata is famous as a favorite event among the students. Last Thursday's snow was no exception as students all over the campus bundled up and went outdoors for snow football games and snowball battles.

Zimmermans Appointed Parents Council Chairs

Robert and Jane Zimmerman of State College have been named co-chairpersons of the Juniata College Parents Association and its governing body, the Parents Council.

the owner-operator of State College Communications Corporation for the past 12 years, Zimmerman is a graduate of The Pennsylvania State University. He is president of the Pennsylvania Association of Broadcasters and has recently been chosen one of America's 11 best radio station managers by the National Association of Broadcasters. Zimmerman serves on the board of the Central Pennsylvania Festival of the Arts.

Mrs. Zimmerman is a graduate of Denison University and for 10 years has been office manager of State College Communications Corporation. She is on the consultinc committee for the Central Pennsylvania Festival of the Arts and is a member of the Downtown Business Association of State College.

The Zimmermans have two children, Andrew, currently a senior at Juniata majoring in pre-dentistry, and Laura, a high school senior.

The prime purpose of the Parents Association and Council is to assist the administration and faculty of Juniata College in "developing, achieving and maintaining high academic, moral and physical standards for the welfare of the Juniata community," according to its constitution. The association assists the college in admissions, career planning and placement, on-campus activities and fund-raising.

"I am very pleased that the Zimmerman's have accepted this important position," said Dr. Frederick M. Binder, president of Juniata College. "They've made a very positive contribution to Juniata in the past and I know they will continue to do so as chairpersons of the Parents Association."

Jack Troy Exhibits Art In N.Y.C. Show

Jack G. Troy, noted potter and assistant professor of art at Juniata College, was one of 36 American potters selected to participate in last week's "Selection '85" exhibit in New York City.

The contemporary crafts exhibit was held at the Windows on the World Restaurant in New York's World Trade Center and all of the participating potters were chosen by Joan Mondale, wife of former Vice President and Presidential candidiate Walter Mondale. The exhibit was sponsored by the American Crafts Council.

Troy's exhibit piece, a large wood-fired covered jar, was later purchased by a New York collector of contemporary ceramics.

Troy participated in an exhibit at the Blair Art Extension in Hollidaysburg which ran through December 6. In addition, a one-man exhibit of his recent work opened at The Clay Place Gallery, 5600 Walnut Street, Pittsburgh Sunday, November 24 and continues through December 26.

A member of the Juniata faculty since 1967, Troy is a graduate of West Chester State College and received his M.A. degree from Kent State University. He has studied at the Philadelphia College of Art, Alfred University and Haystack School of Crafts.

Four Academic All Americans Honored

Four Juniata College Athletes have been named to the Academic All-American team in their respective sports. Every year a select few college athletes are selected to All-Academic teams for displaying outstanding performances both on the field and in the classroom. This year Juniata was honored with four such students.

Junior Lori Bason, captain of the Juniata College women's volleyball team, has been named to the 1985 Middle Atlantic Conference All-Academic Team by the sports information directors in the M.A.C. Conference.

The Middle Atlantic Conference, the largest conference in the country, has approximately 7,800 participating fall athletes. Bason was one of 15 athletes selected to the team.

Lori is a middle blocker for the Indians. "Lori Bason is one of the finest individuals I've ever coached. A coach could not hope to work with any finer individual than Lori. She's an inspiration academically, athletically and personally to every one of her teammates," said Head Coach Larry Bock.

Lori is a pre-veterinary major here at Juniata with a 3.43 Grade Point Average. She has received numerous awards for academic and athletic achievement throughout her high school and collegiate careers.

Three Juniata College football players have been named to the 1985 District II GTE Academic All-American Team by members of the Collegiate Sports Information Directors of America. Juniors Bob Crossey, Lou Komer, and Ian Malee have all earned spots on the team.

Crossey, a 5'11", 205 lb. Junior linebacker, was the leading tackler on the Indian squad for the second consecutive year. In order to be selected for the team, student-athletes must possess a 3.2 grade point average or better. Crossey carries a 3.5 grade point average in the pre-medicine program at Juniata.

Komer, a starting defensive end for Juniata is carrying a 3.37 grade point average in the pre-medicine program at Juniata. He accumulated 45 tackles, three fumble recoveries, one interception, and two sacks this season.

Running back Ian Malee is a pre-law student at Juniata with a 3.35 grade point average. Malee carried the ball 100 times for 373 yards, had three touchdowns and 9 receptions for 35 yards after 10 games this season.

All three district Academic All-Americans from Juniata will be placed on the national ballot. Sports information directors from across the United States will vote on the national team later this month.

Youthful Indian Grapplers Expect Successful Season

The Juniata College wrestling squad opened their season on December 6th at the Lebanon Valley Invitational.

The team has allready displayed improvement over last years team as they grabbed fourteen points in the tournament to last years one.

The grapplers have a "youthful" look this year with four juniors, one sophomore and eleven freshmen on the roster. Head Coach Bill Berrier is cautiously optimistic about his team. "This year every weight class should be covered. With a full line up we will have the chance to improve upon last year's 7-7 record." Berrier added, "One concern will be our inexperience with a young squad. It may show up in close matches."

"This team works very hard and has alot of drive. It's really a pleasure to work with them," said Berrier who has begun his twenty-sixth season as coach for the Tribe.

Women's Basketball Is MAC Power 3-D In Conference

By Joe Scialabba

The Juniata women's basketball team has established itself among the leaders in the Middle Atlantic Conference after just one week of league play.

The Tribe sports a 3-0 conference record and is 4-1 overall. Juniata leads the Northwest section of the MAC.

After finishing second in the Nazareth (NY) Tournament, the Indians returned from Thanksgiving break and won three staright games.

On Saturday, the Tribe started slowly, but stormed back to flatten the Messiah falcons, 75-44. Sue Grubb had 17 points and 19 rebounds, while Janet Robinson and Darella Fortson tossed 18 and 12 points respectively.

Lycoming fell on Wednesday, 79-38. Coach Nancy Latimore got a chance to use her entire bench, and it responded. Paula Hildegrass, Sue Lockawich, Lisa Gray, Becky Hostetter and Andrea Zavod all made contributions in reserve.

The big win came on Monday when the Indians knocked off MAC-power Elizabethtown, 65-61. Karen Fonner and Karen Ramm, starters with Grubb, Robinson and Fortson, played solid games as the Tribe held off a furious Blue Jay rally. It started the three-game sweep last week.

Juniata traveled to Franklin and Marshall on Monday, and hosted Susquehanna last night to conclude thr pre-holiday schedule.

Former Juniata basketball standout Patti Ryan has recently been named assistant coach for the team. Ryan, a 1985 graduate of Juniata College, was the women's basketball team MVP for four years. She was an all-conference selection for two years and team co-captain. She led the Indians in rebounding and scoring throughout her career.

"Patti will be a real asset to our basketball program. She has been in our program for four years. She knows the players well and she knows the system. We are happy to have Patti as an assistant," said head coach Nancy Latimore.

Labba Lines

By Joe Scialabba

It's December 13, 1985, and Pennsylvania professional football fans have one thing in common: No NFL playoff team.

Philadelphia fans watched their beloved Eagles lose any playoff hopes in a matter of seven minutes in the Fourth quarter two weeks ago. Leading the Minnesota Vikings, 23-0, the Eagles stumbled in every way possible as the Vikings scored four unanswered touchdowns to win 28-23.

No playoffs for the Eagles, you can be sure. What about the Steelers? Well, Sunday night's defensive battle in San Diego all but sealed the Steeler's fate, although they remain mathematically alive. The top rated defense in the NFL was riddled for 47 points, and when QB David Woodley tossed his 14th interception of the year leading to the fifth score, the Steelers surrendered the most points ever on a ABC special broadcast, losing 54-44.

I think the best thing to do is to root against the Cowboys. It's not the same as having the Steelers in the playoffs, but at least it's something.

Men's Basketball Sweeps 2 Games

By Joe Scialabba

The Juniata men's basketball team found the home court to be just what it needed this past weekend as they swept two Middle Atlantic Conference games to break into the win column and jump right back into the league playoff race.

The Indians are 2-2 in the MAC (2-4 overall). After a double loss in the Gettysburg Tip-off Tournament and road losses at Elizabettown and Lycoming, Juniata put together strong efforts in Memorial Gym (Kennedy Sports+Rec Center), defeating Messiah and FDU-Madison.

On Saturday afternoon, Dick Moses scored 24 points and Wayne Paul added 21 in leading the Tribe to a 70-52 win over Messiah. The Tribe led throughout most of the game, pulling away in the second half. Senior John Hunter had ten rebounds.

FDU-Madison came to Huntingdon on Sunday with only one loss in five games, but the Indians jumped to an early lead and recovered from a five-point deficit late in the game to beat the Jersey Devils, 59-58. Paul hit for 21 points again, while Moses canned 12. Hunter pulled down eight rebounds.

"It was nice to rebound from our slow start with two good home victories," said coach Dan Helm. "We put ourselves into a good position to contend for the playoff spots in the MAC Northwest section.

"We've started to improve, but we really have to work on gaining some consistency. I think our young players are beginning to blend in nicely, now we need to build on things."

The Indians hosted Susquehanna on Wednesday night and finish the December slate on Saturday when Allbright visits College Hill.

Indians Volleyball Defeat Cortland State 3-1 To Advance to Final Four In NCAA Division III Finals

By Tom Hunt

The Juniata Women's Volleyball team captured a spot in the NCAA Division III volleyball Final Four last Saturday night with a tense four-game victory over visiting Cortland State from New York. This will be their third appearance in the Final Four since 1980.

Beth Hoppel gave the Indians an early lead in game one. Then, the team entered the Twilight Zone as Cortland State jumped to a 6-1 lead. Coach Larry Bock used both of his timeouts in an attempt to stop the Cortland State run. The strategy worked as the Indians creeped back into the game on a Jackie Rebert serve. The two teams traded points until Cortland State was serving for the first game at 14-13. But the Indians saved the game point, and setter Beth Hoppel served the last three points for a 16-14 win. Balanced scoring was the key to the 1st game victory as Hoppel, Carolyn Stambaugh, and Mariella Gacka each served four points.

In the second game, the Indians dominated their opponent with quick hitting and excellent blocking. After falling behind 2-1, Juniata took the lead for good on a run of serves by Jackie Rebert. Jodi Cox capped the run with a solo block on Cotland State's outside hitter. The scrappy Cortland State team pulled to within four points at 8-4 but Carolyn Stambaugh put the game out of reach with three devastating serves. Sophomore middle blocker Cathy Miller served the final point to give Juniata a 15-6 victory.

The third game was all Cortland State as they jumped out to a 12-4 lead early in the game. The Indians made several mistakes to help Cortland State take control. Coach Bock inserted captain Lori Bason and Junior Diana Hauger in an effort to put some new life in the team. Once again, it was the right move as Bason registered a Kill and Hauger served four points to bring Juniata to 7-12. But the early lead proved to be too much and Cortland State won the game 15-7.

The play in game four showed why Larry's Ladies were ranked in the top ten all year. As in the first game, the Indians fell behind 1-5. Then the former high school teammates, Junior Carolyn Stambaugh and Freshman phenom Jackie Rebert, caught fire. They combined for more than 10 kills in Juniata's 15-11 victory. Jodi Cox also contributed 3 kills. Their fron row activity overshadowed some excellent defensive performances. Junior Mariella Gacka made several spectacular saves to keep the ball in play. The team's only Senior, Doreen Duncan, contributed the pinpoint passing neede to run the powerful Indian offense.

It was a total team effort throughout the 3-1 victory. The Indians offense was led by Jackie Rebert's thirteen Kills and Beth Hoppel's twelve service points. Jodi Cox was credited with four blocks. Much credit belongs to the quiet Coach, Larry Bock. He always seems to make the right move at the right time. His blending of veterans such as Dorene Duncan and Mariella Gacka with newcomers like Jackie Rebert has molded Juniata into one of the top four Division III teams in the nation this year.

The women's volleyball team will take thier 39-7 record to Chicago this weekend in an effort to win Juniata College's first-ever national volleyball title. Their semifinal opponent will be Elmhurst College, the 3 ranked team in the nation. We wish them the best of luck in the Windy City and thank them for yet another exciting season.

Juniata Named Among Best Colleges in USA

Juniata College is considered one of the best buys among colleges and universities in the United States, according to the newly published book, "Best Buys in College Education."

Written by Edward B. Fiske, education editor of "The New York Times," and published by Times Books, the book surveyed the nation's 2,000 four-year institutions and selected some 200 "that offer high quality education at reasonable cost," according to the author.

In the book's introduction, Fiske writes, "To say that something is a bargain is to make a relative judgement about quality in relation to price. In the case of a college or university, this means the quality of the education in relation to what the consumer pays in the form of tuition, room and board."

Each college and university listed in the book is profiled in detail, providing information on location, costs, financial aid, SAT/ACT scores, student profiles, academic program, special opportunities and other key information, including comments from students, faculty and administers.

In his review of Juniata, Fiske notes the high proportion of students that end up with significant academic careers and the high acceptance rate into graduate schools. "All of Juniata's students have something few other college undergrads do — self-designed majors. . . .These enable them to choose one major discipline or multiple majors and design their own programs," Fiske says. "To help with these Programs of Emphasis, each student has two advisers, one from the student's area of study and one from another field for a different perspective. Professors teach only two courses each 10-week term to assure students their attention."

The book also points out a variety of special opportunities available to Juniata students including the Washington Semester program, research projects, internships and numerous study-abroad possibilities. "Students can also take advantage of the 375-acre environmental-studies field station at the nearby Raystown Lake resort," Fiske notes.

"The food in the lone cafeteria is praised, whether from the hot line, the deli line or the salad bar," Fiske states. He also discussed the college's annual social events such as Mountain Day, Raft Regatta, mud volleyball, Madrigal Dinner and All-Class Night. Fiske quotes one Juniata student as saying, "We aren't a suitcase school. It's too much fun here." Athletic opportunities, from varsity teams to intramural sports, also are discussed.

In noting the academic strength of Juniata and the quality of its graduates, Fiske also writes about the loyalty of Juniata alumni. "At a time when the national average for donations by graduates hovers between 20 and 25 percent, Juniata's average in the last decade is more than 40 percent and has been as high as 52 percent. That's a measure of the intense loyalty the students feel for Juniata. As one pre-med major puts it, 'No place in the world could match what I have here.' "

In addition to "Best Buys in College Education," Jumata's academic excellence was recognized recently by "U.S. News and World Report" in its 1985 Study of Colleges and Universities. In that survey, Juniata was listed as one of the 90 best liberal arts colleges in the country. The survey defines liberal arts colleges as the "most selective colleges that award more than 50 percent of their baccalaureate degrees in liberal arts disciplines and attract students from most of the 50 states."

Named with Juniata in the U.S. News study are such institutions as Amherst, Williams, Mount Holyoke, Skidmore, Wake Forest, Colgate, Washington and Lee, Oberlin, Haverford and Swathmore.

Earlier this year, Juniata was listed in Peterson's Competitive Colleges" for the second year in a row. Published by Peterson's Guides of Princeton, N.J., the book presents data profiles of 316 colleges and universities that consistantly have more applicants with above-average credentials than they can accept.

Weekend Programming Given Extra Funding

By Todd Mullen

With the advent of the new alcohol policy, many students were concerned that campus parties and activities would suffer. Among those concerned were the members of the Student Services Staff and the Center Board. To help solve the problem, Center Board turned to the Administration. President Binder answered Center Board's plea by allocating $2000 to the organization, through Student Services, for Winter Term. Center Board Chairperson Ginny Krall says that the money was given "to help organizations work on weekend programming."

What does this mean for Juniata students? It's good news for clubs and organizations planning an activity for Winter Term. The $2000 is provided for those organizations that want to hire live entertainment for a party or an activity. Since all lounge parties are now B.Y.O.B. this means that a club can provide free live entertainment for a party and does not have to worry about losing money for the event. Bands, comedy acts, or any other form of live entertainment are legitimate candidates for these events.

Registrar Resigns

by Jennifer Nicholson

Constance Collins, Assistant Dean of Academic Affairs and Registrar, has resigned from her position at the college. Collins, who has worked at Juniata for one and one half years, is planning to start her own organization in Rochester, New York. She hopes to bring together artists, musicians, and poets with people who have technical training in computers to design educational software for the arts.

Collins is very excited to launch this new project. "It brings together my experience with computers and systems analysts, and my experience with organizations," she commented.

Collins' thirteen year career as a registrar will end on December 20. She stated that she has enjoyed her time at Juniata and found the students here to be especially nice.

The college is presently looking for Collins' replacement. Many applications have been received and a decision will be made as soon as possible. The job involves many functions including overseeing the Registrar's Office.

Editorial

Appreciation

Christmas is the season that brings people together. Friends share special times. Families become closer. This is the time to sit back and smile inside - to realize how lucky we are.

Much to my surprise, somewhere between the carolling, the feasting, and the mistletoeing, I learned something this year. I wasn't expecting to. I had planned to just savor the season. Nothing more.

I learned two things.

Sometimes we take a person for granted. We assumed he knew how we felt - that Christmas at Juniata wasn't really Christmas without him. We never told him, never really said "Thanks," until an important event in his life (and ours) threatened to keep him away. Maybe we were a little selfish - a little unfeeling.

On the other hand, I learned about responsibility. We can't always do what we would like to do. Promises are made to be kept, and sometimes we have to make sacrifices in order to keep them. It is not always easy; but if one man can give up what means so much to him just to make others happy, the least we can do is respect him and appreciate the gesture.

It was a mixed-up Madrigal weekend, full of headaches and hurt feelings, lacking in communication, a little rough around the edges. But maybe that was Santa's gift to us - a little bit of wisdom.

Merry Christmas.

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

by Joe Scialabba

Christmas - a time to enjoy with family and friends.

In this three week stint before Christmas 1985, we have enjoyed special times with our Juniata friends. As a senior, sitting in my East living room on a quiet Sunday morning, I realize how much these times will mean someday; how much they mean now.

The sights around me are a story alone. One roommate is on the pullout bed, covered with a familiar bedspread. A second roommate sleeps on the couch, the colorful afgan not long enough to spare him from the ever-present draft from the windows.

I hear a love song moaning from one room, loud enough to hear, but soft enough to fall asleep to. Still, the sound distracts me slightly from my scan of the room, a scan already slowed by weary eyes from lack of sleep.

In front of me is a pile of pillows and clothes, while an abandoned quarter keg stands to my right with tap in place but spirit exhausted. The circular table in center stage holds many remnants of a Madrigal Dinner weekend.

A pair of glasses reflect the morning sky, as the frames secure a piece of paper to the table top. An empty bottle of Andre champagne is the skyscraper of the arrangement, but the bright red of the Tequila sunrise is the eye-catcher. There are assorted lollipop wrappers on the table, with a newspaper sports section and paper bag adding to the clutter.

There are five drinking glasses on the table, but the true beer mug and three-quarters full beer glass tell Friday's story. A couple of mixed drinks remain from last night - another South semi-formal here and gone, among other things.

Finally, there is the bottle of bubble-blowing mix. Some things are never too un-adult; or is it some people are never adult? Let's say some things have their worth no matter what our age.

As I complete my look around the room, I see more empty cups, cigarette ashes and all the loose pens and pencils we can never find before a weekday class. In general, the room is a downright mess, but it is a mess with meaning - a lot meaning.

It's still a few months before some of us earn the right to have "Juniata '86" placed beside our names on alumni office letters, but its not too soon to think about what we'll leave behind at Juniata.

This is the last Christmas at Juniata for a lot of us, and that's sad. But, there are those that will remain, and there will be people to fill the glasses, to sing the songs and to make the messes. Hopefully, this time next year, someone will wake up early in East 302(or wherever) and go out and look at what they have and smile.

Juniata - good friends, good times, and good memories. That's what Christmas and life are all about.

Merry Christmas.

Pat Benatar, one of the leading ladies of contemporary rock-n-roll, has just released her fifth album, "Seven the Hard Way." The album is a collection of simple, upbeat songs as well as several somewhat subdued ballads.

Trained as an opera singer, Pat Benatar has consistently given her listeners crystal clear, yet incredibly diverse vocals. She seems to have found a successful formula that combines strong drum and guitar lines with her powerful voice.

Side A begins with the second single off the album, "Sex As A Weapon," in which forceful synthesizers back-up pleading and eye-opening lyrics. As the title already hints, Benatar has no hesitations in singing openly and honestly about intimate problems in love relationships.

Just released as a single this past week is the second cut off Side A, "La Bel Age." Somewhat calmer than "Sex As A Weapon," this love ballad displays Benatar's incredible diversity in her vocals.

"Walking in the Underground" contains the characteristic strong drum and bass lines, yet also includes a muted horn solo and creative percussion, displaying hubby guitarist/songwriter/producer Neil Geraldo's creativity.

Side B contains more of the same unmistakable Pat Benatar style. Diverse vocals, heart-stopping guitar licks, a consistently strong beat. "Invincible" is a perfect example. The theme from "The Legend of Billie Jean," the song was released several months before the album and climbed to number four on Rolling Stone's chart. Luckily, the song was more successful than the movie.

Pat Benatar and her band have given listeners yet another album of consistent, straightforward, no nonsense rock-n-roll.

Winter Aerobics Are Underway

By Helen Bailey

The Juniata aerobics class is now into its second year. Started last winter term as a workout session for the field hockey team, it formed into an aerobics class, for athletes and non-athletes alike.

Aerobics, as opposed to hockey, for example, is very much something you take part in for your own benefit, and it provides complete body workout.

Each session (lasting an hour) involves a period of stretching at the beginning and end, 20 minutes of jogging and simple dance steps,and 20 minutes of isometrics (muscle strengthening exercises).

There are six instructors, each taking turns in leading the class. Each has her own workout routine and uses her own choice of music.

So far the instructors have had routine feedback, although they recognize that one or two of the routines need to be polishe up. They stress that if anyone in the class experiences problems whin exercising, he/she must talk it over and an alternative routine will be found.

The number people of attending the sessions is roughly 45, quarter of those being male. The class runs Sunday through Thursday 9-10 p.m. in the multi-purpose room in the Sports+Recreation Center. Anyone can join at any time simply by turning up. For further information contact Polly Oliver at 404 Kline or Melissa Gronert at 306 Long.

Madrigal Celebration For Christmas

by Kimberly Chatfield

The night of the Madrigal Dinner was finally upon us and the snow which had fallen during the day made the atmosphere even more Christmasy. Everyone was decked out in their finery. It was the season to be jolly with Baker Refectory decorated in pines and candy canes. The evening, after everyone finally found their tables, was led by the Juniata Brass Ensemble and the Madrigal Choir.

the highlights of the evening was conducted by Dr. Richard Hunter with his storytelling and by Andy and Terry Murray with their Christmas Caroling in which everyone participated. Old favorites: "Jingle Bells," "Rudolph, the Red-nosed Reindeer," "The Twelve Days of Christmas" were sung. The evening ended on a solemn note with the passing of the light and the singing of "Silent Night."

After dinner, many had the option of going to private parties or attending the dance at the gym. The dance was a success; many rated the band, Rogue as excellent. There was a good turnout of people in the gym.

Juniata Establishes Engineering Program

Juniata College has recently established a three-two program in engineering with Clarkson University in Potsdam, NY.

Students involved in this program will initially complete three years of approved coursework at Juniata and then transfer to Clarkson for two additional years of study in one of four engineering departments: chemical, civil, electrical or mechanical. Upon completing the program, students will receive bachelor's degrees from both Juniata and Clarkson.

Located in upstate New York, Clarkson University is approximately one hour's drive from Ottowa, Canada. The three-two engineering program is the fifth of its kind at Juniata. Similar programs also are available in conjunction with The Pennsylvania State University, Columbia University, Georgia Institute of Technology and Washington University in St. Louis.

"We are very pleased to be able to offer another opportunity to our engineering students," said Dr. Wilfred Norris, pre-engineering advisor at Juniata and professor of physics.

"The new program with Clarkson will lend additional strength to the pre-engineering program at Juniata," he added.

Have A Safe Holiday Season!

Counselor's Corner

by Dr. Jay Buchanan

As the old year comes to a close, many people begin to entertain thoughts of resolutions for the new year. Unfortunately, all-too-often and all-too-soon those thoughts wane, and many of us revert to our old ways of thinking and take on our old patterns of behavior. "This time things are going to be different!", we say to ourselves. What follows are some suggestions to help enhance the chances of keeping our resolutions.

Let's begin our discussion by examining the process of goal-setting. Goals, or objectives, can be defined as something desirable, something to be achieved, or an end to be reached. In the process of setting goals or objectives for ourselves, the following guidelines should be kept in mind.

Goals must be important to the individual. This may seem overly simplistic or obvious, but if the goal is imposed upon you or set by someone else such as parents or the institution, chances are not great that the goal will be achieved. The individual must care about goal attainment. The more meaningful and personalized the goal, the greater will be the chances for achievement. A sense of ownership is critical in the setting of goals.

Goals should be realistic and attainable. This does not mean that they necessarily have to be low in order to be attainable. Many goals go unmet simply because they were inappropriate to the individual. We don't want to be overly ambitious in setting goals for ourselves. An example of an unrealistic goal is saying one is going to study six hours a day when, in the past, one has never studied more than two hours per day. Setting a 4.0 GPA as a goal may be unrealistic if one has never before received a grade higher than a B.

Another characteristic of a goal is that it should be specific. The more concrete and clearer the goal, the stronger is the motivation to accomplish it. Additionally, the clearer the goal, the greater will be our ability to focus our energies toward accomplishment.

Goals should be written down and revised when appropriate. By taking time to commit a goal to paper, we have more invested. By writing down our goals, we reduce the possibility that they will be forgotten as new problems and challenges appear.

If we are new at the process of goal-setting, we should start with short-term goals.

Mitchell Receives Grant For Polymer Research

By Mary McDougall

Dr. Donald J. Mitchell has received a two-year, $76,000 grant from the National Science Foundation to study solid state coextrusion of polymers.

Mitchell's project is a continuation of the type of research he began in 1983 while on sabbatical at the Department of Polymer Science, University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Polymers, Mitchell explains, are large chain-like molecules which make up all fibers. Nylon, polyester, acrylic and plastics are examples of polymers, as well as polyethelene, teflon and rubber. When produced synthetically, polymers have their molecules in a random, disorderly state. "If we can align the molecules, we can significantly change the properties of the polymer," says Mitchell.

Mitchell is hoping to produce the polymers with much greater strengths. "The group I was working with at the University of Massachusetts made a polyethelene (the most simple plastic) stronger than stainless steel," Mitchell says. If successful, the process will be useful in areas where high strength is needed in plastics or synthetic fibers, such as in automobile tires.

Mitchell's research at Juniata will entail studying what happens to the properties of various starting materials when exposed to this process. He will be working with an ultra-high molecular weight polyethelene, a very long molecule consisting of over one half million atoms.

Mitchell is currently being assisted by four students and intends to continue the research this summer with student assistants work ing full-time.

Murphy's To Become Ames Store

by Helen Bailey

When the current merging of Ames Department Stores Inc. and Murphy Mart is finally completed, the new chain of stores (which will change its name to Ames) will be one of the major retailers in the nation.

Having around a 50 mile radius, our local Murphy Mart is one of roughly a hundred stores in the U.S. being merged. On the other hand, the G.C. Murphy Co. chain of stores will remain, being a small staple store and selling mainly basic necessities.

Ames concentrates its stores in smaller towns ignored by larger competitors. Murphy Mart catered to outlying towns in much the same way.

The merger will allow the new store in Huntingdon's Plaza 22 Village to become more competitive with other retail stores. Prices are not expected to rise, since Ames relies on consistently low prices rather than on sales. In the past Ames has boosted store sales by as much as 50%.

The manager of Ames welcomes all Murphy employees to the Ames family, and it is believed down at Murphy Mart that all staff will remain. All workers gain a new benefit package, which in effect is similar to the old Murphy deal, involving such things as life insurance, vacations, etc.

The change began in late 1984 when the idea of merging was conceived. The paperwork was completed in Sept. of this year and the stores were computerized. Although Ames now owns G.C. Murphy's Huntingdon branch, the change is not yet finalized.

Who's Who Includes 32 J.C. Students

By Mary McDougall

The 1986 edition of "Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges" will include the names of 32 students from Juniata College who have been selected as national outstanding leaders.

The 29 seniors and three juniors are: Michael J. Azar, Kelly A. Bauer, Bridget F. Berich, Leslie H. Bonjack, Amy E. Clark, Scott C. Cole, Cynthia L. Cooper, Robert A. Crossey, M. Dana Harriger, Heidi J. Hess, Timothy L. Hoch, Richard F. Howey, Jr., Ronald W. Kaltenbaugh, Timothy J. McCarthy, Gregory S. Molchany, Erik R. Olson, Paula M. Panco and Gino V. Perri.

Also, Lauren M. Rogerson, Robert C. Schwartz, Joseph M. Scialabba, Stephanie L. Seidle, Matt G. Siegel, Lisa A. Smoker, Todd A. Sponsler, Alan E. Thomas, Luther J. Thomas, Jr., David R. Trinkley, Dorothy J. Vesper, Paul J. Wagner, Michael H. Wojcik and Traci L. Yonko.

Campus nominating committees and editors of the annual directory have included these students based on their academic achievement, service to the community, leadership in extracurricular activities and potential for continued success.

The Juniata students join an elite group selected from more than 1,400 institutions in all 50 states, the District of Columbia and several foreign nations. Outstanding students have been honored in the annual directory since it was first published in 1934.

Rare Books Donated

A collection of 16 almanacs and books, dating back to the early 1800s, has been donated to the rare books collection in Juniata College's L.A. Beeghly Library.

The volumes, which include a leather-bound Lancaster Bible, were given to the college by Dr. William T. Parsons, Director of the Pennsylvania German Collection at Ursinus College who is also a visiting research scholar at Juniata. Parsons is currently editing Juniata's extensive Cassel-Brumbaugh-Swigart rare book collection.

Most of the volumes in the collection were printed in Lancaster by Johann Baer around 1819. All but three are in German. The large Lancaster Bible also was printed by Baer and has the original leather binding.

All of these publications will become part of Juniata's 12,000 volume rare book collection which includes almanacs, books, pamphlets, handwritten manuscripts, letters and other predominantly Pennsylvania German documents. Parsons is currently developing a complete annotative bibliography of the collection. The project is being funded, in part, by a grant from the Arcadia Foundation of Norristown.

Women's B-Ball Lead MAC

By Joe Scialabba

Juniata's women's basketball team put the finishing touches on the 1985 half of their schedule last week, and will head home for the holidays as the leader in the Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest section.

The Indians put away Franklin and Marshall in Lancaster on Monday before winning a key MAC game over visiting Susquehanna on Wednesday night.

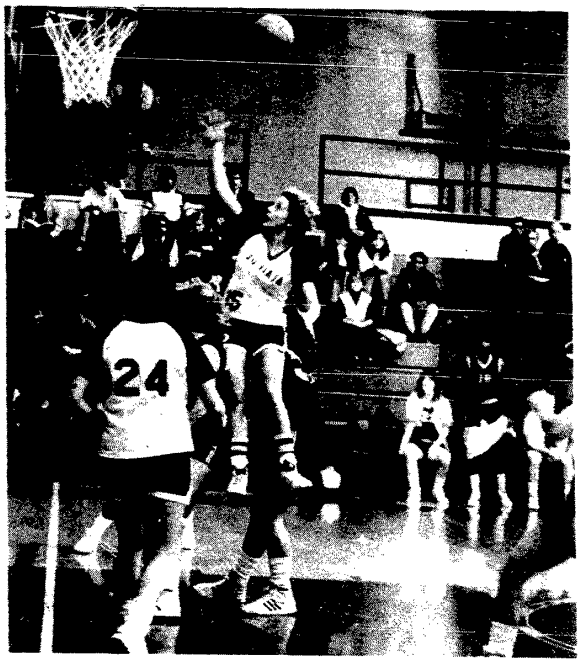
The Indians played one super half in each of the contests and made it work for a pair of wins.

Against the hosting Diplomats the Indians struggled through their worst twenty minute period of the year, a 21-21 tie at halftime. However, the Indians pulled away in the second half to win by a comfortable [illegible]

Janet Robison led the scoring effort with 18 points, while Karen Ramm and Sue Grubb added 11 points apiece.

In the Susquehanna game, the Tribe left nothing in warmups as they sprinted to a big first half lead and then held on for their sixth victory in seven games and fourth conference win without a loss.

Juniata's 39-28 halftime lead was tested in the final half, but in the end the Tribe had the same 11-point margin 64-53. Robison again led the way with 27 points. Sue Grubb added 13. The Indians will begin the 1986 part of the season at Selinsgrove in another key conference game against Susquehanna, who have just the Juniata loss on their record.



Junior Janet Robison lays in two of her team high 27 points vs. Susquehanna this past Wednesday. The Indians won the key MAC game 64-53 to go along with a 56-42 victory over F&M earlier in the week to grab the lead in the MAC Northwest section.

Indian Grappler action this past Saturday vs. Susquehanna. The Indians lost the see-saw home opener 29-15 despite a solid team effort, including a major decision victory to Rich Hoag, a superior decision to Jr. Paul Bernhardt, and a pin by Jr. Dave Cooper.

Men's Basketball

By Joe Scialabba

Juniata was ready to make a move in the Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest men's basketball standings last week and showed it. However, the climb up the standings was postponed until after the holidays after the Tribe lost two one-point decisions on the Memorial Gym floor in the Kennedy Sports+Recreation Center.

On Wednesday night, the Indians played their best game of the season only to lose in triple overtime to MAC leader Susquehanna, 70-69. The visiting Crusaders remained undefeated in the conference after Dick Moses just missed a 30-footer at the final buzzer.

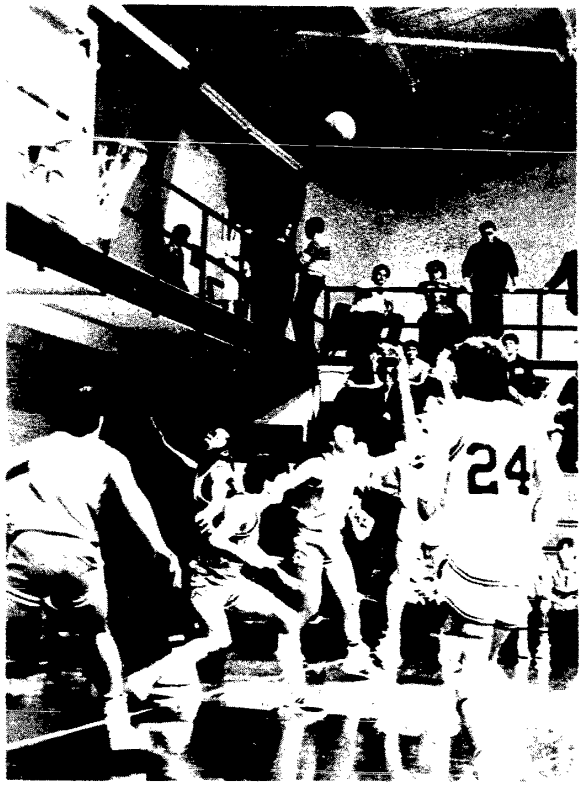
Moses and Les Squair had 19 points to pace the Indians while John Hunter added 14. Hunter had 18 rebounds; Squair had 14 and Moses added 10. It was the first time in recent memory that the entire Tribe frontline scored and rebounded in double figures.

The super effort of Wednesday may have drained the Indians, resulting in a less than average performance against Albright on Saturday, another one-point loss, 59-58.

Squair again scored 19 points while Wayne Paul canned 16. Squair pulled down a team high nine rebounds. "We are really just four points away from being 4-4," said coach Dan Helm. "We played very well on Wednesday against a very good team, but did not play as well as we would have liked on Saturday."

"I still believe that we can begin to win these close games if we just gain a little more confidence and consistency. We have two-thirds of the schedule left to go. If we continue to work hard and improve things can turn around for us."

The Indians are 2-4 in the conference (2-6 overall), but can gain immediate ground in the MAC in key January contests at Susquehanna and Scranton.



Sophomore Wayne Paul puts one in off the glass vs. Susquehanna last Wednesday night. The Indians lost two one-point games last week, including a 70-69 loss to MAC leader Susquehanna and a 59-58 loss to Albright.

Volleyball Take 3rd

The Lady Indians Volleyball team finished their 1985 season with a victory in the NCAA Division III finals to garnish 3rd place.

After a dissappointing loss to Elmhurst (Ill.) on Friday night, the Lady Indians bounced right back to handily defeat Wisconsin-LaCrosse on Saturday to grab a third place finish in NCAA Division III.

The Indians took a positive attitude into the match vs. LaCrosse and used the match as a stepping stone towards the 1986 season. A strong team effort allowed the team to make a last second comeback in the first game of the match to win 16-14 with the help of a key kill by Junior Carolyn Stambaugh. The team was on a roll as they worked to make the final two games look easy as they came away with 15-5 and 15-7 victories.

Sophomore Beth Hoppel was honored as a recipient of the Russel All-American Award. The Indians finished the season with an amazing 40-8 record to compile a 9 season record under Coach Larry Bock of 292-63.

Juniata is both proud and thankful of the effort that our ladies have shown over the years and look foward to more exciting years to come.

DEAR SANTA:

Juniata College has something to be thankful for in the athletic department, but there are still some things that some would like to find in the upcoming year, if not under the X-mas tree next week. Can you help us all enjoy the holidays and 1986 with some special gifts?

Rob Ash would like just another chance at Lycoming. I know he Bill Latimore wants a smooth infield. Should we call the Blue Army or the Queen and her Court?

Arnie Tilden and Doc Stroman want long distance balls, or a dry golf course.

In closing, don't forget all the athletes who have been good little girls and boys, or as good as can be expected.

Merry Christmas,

Vol. XXXVII, No. 12 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | Jan. 16, 1986

Dr. Robert W. Neff Chosen As Juniata's Ninth President

Dr. Robert W. Neff, General Secretary of the Church of the Brethren, has been elected the ninth president of Juniata College effective July 1, 1986.

In announcing Dr. Neff's selection, Dr. Charles C. Ellis, chairman of Juniata's Board of Trustees, said the election was unanimously approved by the Executive Committee of the Board at a special meeting held Dec. 30.

"We are particularly fortunate to have attracted an internationaly known person of the caliber of Dr. Neff," Dr. Ellis said. "He will bring wisdom, great energy and deep commitment to bear on the future of Juniata College."

Dr. Neff will succeed Dr. Frederick M. Binder who will be retiring June 30 after 11 years as Juniata's president and 26 years as a college president. Prior to coming to Juniata, Dr. Binder served as president of Whittier College in California and Hartwick College in New York. Following his retirement, Dr. Binder will spend a year as a visiting lecturer in American history at the University of Leeds in England.

Currently a resident of Elgin, Ill., headquarters for the Church of the Brethren, Dr. Neff, 49, was born in Lancaster then moved to Williamsburg where he lived for many years. He also lived in Huntingdon while his father taught at Juniata.

In 1958, Dr. Neff received his B.S. degree from the Pennsylvania State University and went on to receive B.D., M.A. and Ph.D degrees from Yale University in 1961, 1964 and 1969 respectively. in 1974-75, Dr. Neff studied at Cambridge University in England, and also has studied in Germany and Israel. He holds honorary Doctor of Divinity degrees from Juniata and Manchester colleges and an honorary Doctor of Humane Letters from Bridgewater College.

Dr. Neff was appointed assistant pastor of the First Congressional Church on the Green in New Haven, Conn. in 1958. From 1959 to 1961, he served as youth minister of the First Congressional Church in Cheshire, Conn. Dr. Neff accepted the post of assistant professor of biblical studies at Bridgewater College in 1964. In 1965, he was appointed assistant professor of biblical studies at Bethany Theological Seminary in Oak Brook, Ill., and was promoted to associate professor in 1978 and professor in 1973.

In 1977, Dr. Neff was named to his present position as General Secretary of the Church of the Brethern. As chief executive of the Church, Dr. Neff has been responsible for a budget of $15 million and a staff of more than 400 employees. He is recognized as a strong supporter and advocate of ecumenism, serving on committees and in leadership roles with the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U.S.A. and the World Council of Churches. He has traveled extensively throughout the world and has written numerous articles and papers.

Dr. Neff's parents are both Juniata graduates as is his wife, the former Dorothy W. Rosewarne (class of 1959) and his son, C. Scott (class of 1983), currently the assistant manager of a restaurant in Elgin, Ill. The Neffs also have a daughter, Heather, who is currently in the 10th grade at the Elgin Academy.

The presidential search, which culminated in the election of Dr. Neff, was conducted over a 12 month period on an open and nationwide basis. According to Henry H. Gibbel of Lititz, chairman of the Board of Trustee's Presidential Search Committee, hundreds of individuals advised, participated in and contributed to the search process.

"Our committee considered the credentials of 102 candidates," Gibbel said. "The quality of the candidates was impressive which speaks well of the reputation and strength of Juniata College.

"Dr. Neff is a person of strong character and high ethical standards. He is enthusiastic, vigorous and an excellent communicator," Gibbel added. "A persuasive and knowledgeable individual, Dr. Neff is skilled in the art of conflict resolution and diplomacy. His judgments are good and he inspires trust and confidence."

Serving with Gibbel on the Presidential Selection Committee were trustees John McN. Cramer of Pittsburgh, Warren F. Groff of Oak Brook, Ill., W. Newton Long of Atlanta, Ga., Betty F. Simpson of Tyrone, Robert E. Wagoner of Stamford, Conn., Harold B. Brumbaugh of Huntingdon and Charles C. Ellis of Washington, D.C. The committee was assisted by an advisory committee comprised of three faculty members, two students and three alumni. Also assisting in the search process was John A. Synodinos, a professional consultant.

Dr. Robert W. Neff has been elected as Juniata's ninth President. Neff will begin his duties on July 1, 1986. He succeeds Dr. Frederick M. Binder who will be retiring June 30, 1986 after 11 years as Juniata's President.

J.C. Blair Bomb Threat

By Virginia Krall

An area Huntingdon youth was charged Monday for making a bomb threat from an Ellis College Center pay phone on Saturday, at 3:30pm, forcing J.C. Blair Memorial Hospital to evacuate. Police were assisted when making this arrest by Juniata Sophomore Karen D'Angelo and Juniata Security Guard Kurt Dively.

D'Angelo, a night manager at the Information Desk, reports that while working last Saturday afternoon she observed three young boys walking around Totem Inn. "They spent about an hour in Tote and seemed to be very suspicious," commented D'Angelo.

Apparently the three youths phoned a Bell Of Pennsylvania operator and made the anonymous bomb threat. Later the call was traced back to the Ellis College Center's pay phone.

Police contacted campus security and with the help of D'Angelo and Dively, one youth was apprehended Sunday. He was charged with risking a catastrophe, recklessly endangering the lives of others, terroristic threats, criminal mischief and disorderly conduct.

Borough police report that more arrests may be made.

All 51 patients at J.C. Blair Memorial Hospital, including six persons in the Intensive Care Unit and several newborn infants were

Laurels And Darts

Here at The Juniatian we have been throwing the idea around of Laurels and Darts, a short list of people and groups who deserve a round of applause, a pat on the back, and of people who fell one step short.

LAUREL - To the Athletic Department for modifying their student I.D. policy. It is so much more convenient and just as effective to show our I.D. cards instead of depositing them at the student assistant's desk.

LAUREL - To the girls who lead aerobics Sunday through Thursday. Their popular classes are just what many students need.

DART - To those few Resident Assistants on campus who ignore the rules they are supposed to enforce. After all, there are reasons alcohol is supposed to be kept out of the hallways.

DART - To any worker who gives out office keys or allows people to charge purchases or services under an organization's name without identification or other clearance.

LAUREL - To the Library staff for designating one floor for quiet study.

DART - To the Library staff for not fully enforcing the quiet study on the second floor.

DART - To those students who find it amusing to intentionally break glassware in the cafeteria.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

News from Juniata reachs us in Japan slowly. I only recently heard about the new alcohol policy at J.C. It seems to me that in an effort to reduce and avoid problems, the administration is creating more problems. With this new policy, drinking will just be done under less supervision than in the past. This, I think, makes problems more likely to occur. Correct me if I am wrong, but as I understand it kegs are no longer allowed at lounge parties. I realize that the school is only trying to protect itself, but it seems the administration has simply taken the easy way out. There might be other ways for the school to protect itself. For example, bartenders might be hired to serve at parties. They would become responsible if anything happens.

I am not saying this is the answer. What I am saying is that there may be ways around this problem. And I am not sure that the administration has looked at other options. Maybe they have; I hope so. I hate to see one of the most enlightened policies at Juniata taken away.

Dear Editor,

Tonight the World Affairs Lecture Series will present a program on South Africa. The issues and analyses are complex, but not, for that reason alone, unresolvable. This lecture is of special value because it concerns the rights of an oppressed majority due to the Apartheid System, but more importantly it concerns the rights of another majority - the students of Juniata College. The student body is also facing a structure which denies them certain rights, whether we choose to recognize it or not.

I'm talking about the real economic links (i.e. Juniata's investment interests) between the functioning of a college in middle PA and the maintenance of an ongoing life and death struggle among an oppressed people. Before we allow our World Affairs Lecture presentation to frame the questions for us (enabling us to see ourselves as passive spectators rather than actors in the situation) we may ask ourselves just what the issues have to do with our lives, removed as we are, geographically, from the conflict. Are you and I oppressors?

The question is not simply whether our tuition money supports the Apartheid System. Our responsibility does not rest simply in accountability for the unintended consequences of our tuition bill. We do not directly pay for a racist mode of production. The situation is reversed. A racist mode of production helps pay for our education. The labor of the Black South African worker helps any student who receives Juniata aid for his/her education, through the Trustee investment portfolio. The actual relationship is one in which a system based on convenience functions in order that Black South Africans are acting in solidarity with the needy students at Juniata College. If you receive no Juniata aid, then you do not directly benefit from the Apartheid System. You can buy the luxury of non-involvement. Your concern for human rights may be construed as "magnanimous." As for the rest of us, whether we like it or not, we are dependent upon the labor of a people who, if they had it their own way, would withold their labor from us. We depend upon labor which is forcibly extracted.

But all this depends upon whether the Trustee Portfolio indeed contains investments with companies who have direct interests in South Africa. We do not know. The information is simply witheld from us, the student body. This leads us to wonder, if Juniata College did not have such interests, why would the information be witheld? Why not come clean?

Don't we after all, have a RIGHT to know where those investments are? The answer, according to the Administration, is no. The Trustees reserve the right to withold the information, to protect the college, you see, from the influence of widespread fanatical special student interest groups. Today South Africa, tomorrow the Harpo Marxists, or so the argument goes.

How does the administration value the student body? Do they take our questions into serious consideration - are we "people" to them, or merely co-opted students? Does concern for student's rights extend beyond special hearings to investigate the rationale behind a new alcohol policy?

A small group of students has attempted to get as much as a statement from the Trustees concerning investment status. The "proper channels" have yielded no response. Whether your political views are neo-conservative or militant left, there is one overarching value which we must all share if we consider ourselves students with any voice at Juniata. That value is awareness of the state of affairs. Without that prerequisite we had better aclimate ourselves to the role which has been prepared for us. A more cozy role could not be imagined. We may leave the confines of the parental womb only to find ourselves equally constrained in a new, institutional one.

Sincerely,
Tim Hoch

Motley Crue is a heavy metal band made up of four guys - Tommy Lee on drums, summon drums and vocals; Vince Neil on lead vocals; Mick Mar on electric and acoustic guitars and vocals; and Nikki Nixx on bass, bass pedals and vocals. Motley Crues "Shout at the Devil" LP was recorded in 1983 by Elektra/Asylum Records and by W.E.A. International.

The first cut on the album, In the Beginning, is a prelude to the next song, the title cut, Shout at the Devil. Shout at the Devil is a fast paced song about how the world has become filled with sin and corruption over the past few centuries.

Looks that Kill is about a girl who hurts guys when she doesn't get her own way.

Bastard, a moving, upbeat, dancable song, is about a young woman who is a tease.

God Bless the Children of the Beast is a short, slow instrumental song. The only words in the song are at the end - "God bless the children of the beast."

The first song on Side 2 is Red Hot. The song has a pulsating beat which really moves people. It tells the listener to work for what he believes in.

Too Young to Fall in Love is an excellent song about a guy who wants to be set free from his girlfriend because he doesn't want to fall in love with her. He uses the excuse that he is "too young to fall in love."

CAMP JUNIATA

The year round summer camp!

*Sports	*Fishing
*Parties	*Good Food
*Hunting	*Optional Classes

Camp Juniata is the year round summer camp. Juniata was established in 1876 by an off-shoot Taoist cult called the Sisteren. It was meant to provide entertainment at a significant cost. Juniata stresses personal consumption and seeing what you can get away with.

The surrounding community of Fishingdon provides myriads of entertainment for the "happy camper." Spots of enjoyment include such fine establishments as Max's and Dave's. Hours of purchasing pleasure can be had at Murphy's of Fishingdon, Tyrone and Mt. Union. Natural beauties abound at the world famous cliffs, where prehistoric art such as "I love Lee A." can be seen.

The smiling Juniata camper need not leave our luscious camp to seek entertainment. There's plenty to do right here at Juniata.

The Kennedy Sports and Blow-off Center has facilities for all sports from Tiddly Winks to Jacks. The lovely tennis courts provide the exciting variety of tennis known as "avoid the cracks and puddles tennis." Every night there's a social event to attend.

Depending on how much you participate, the after effects can often be enjoyed well into the next day. One may also spend hours of pure euphoria at the Totem lounge. Here you may find at least five arcade games (most of which work) and almost two pool tables (bring your own cues, balls, chalk, rack and felt.) Juniata also provides classes, but they aren't often attended.

Your stay at Camp Juniata begins as our smiling Camp Chauffers, like Rocco, pick you up at the train. They deposit you at your wigwam which will be your home for your stay. Soon you meet your camp counselor who will take your orders for camp supplies at one of our three well-stocked camp stores, Raystown, Quality or Budget. After getting to know your fellow warriors and squaws, each little Indian meets their Chief Counselor, like the popular Bill "Little Squatting Bear" Huston. The first night Pow Wow provides the opportunity to forget your troubles, your worries and usually your name. Lucky campers even have an opportunity for a bit of social intercourse with other campers, but watch out for those pesty little crabs. This pattern is repeated throughout your stay and varied, depending on the season. Of course, there are always the optional classes for a bit of a change of pace. So if you want to be a "happy camper," then you might as well be a Juniata Indian Happy Camper.

Students Speak

by Patricia Schofield

Do you feel the Residential Life ice hours are adequate on weekends?

Jane Maehl(freshman): "The ice hours should be more in the afternoon."

Tom Kelley(junior): "The last time I was there it wasn't open."

Kathy Witmer(sophomore): "I have no idea what the ice hours are. Maybe they should advertise them better."

Frank Briner(junior): "I don't think they are adequately staffed because I have been there numerous times(4) to get ice and no one has been there."

Sue Kipp(senior): "The last three times I was there to get ice there was no one there to let us get the ice."

Joelle Stanjones(freshman): "No, I don't feel the hours that are posted are enough and the hours that it is open, no one is there."

Ex-Ambassador Speaks At World Affairs Lecture

Topic: Southern Africa

"American Policy in Southern Africa" will be discussed at Juniata College Thursday, Jan. 16 at 8:15 p.m. as part of the college's World Affairs Lecture Series.

Hon. Harold E. Horan, former U.S. Ambassador to Malawi and Deputy Assitstant Secretary of State for African Affairs, will present the lecture in the Ellis College Center faculty lounge.

Currently director of programs for the Institute for the Study of Diplomacy at Georgetown University, Horan also has served as Deputy Chief of Mission in Liberia, Senior Advisor for Africa and International Organizations with the National Security Council, and in other diplomatic posts with U.S. embassies and consulates in Iran, Mali, and Italy.

Horan received his B.B.A. and L.L.D. degrees from the University of Houston and also studied at Rice University and the University of Paris, France. He is a member of the Texas Bar Association and served in the U.S. Army Air Corps during World War II.

The World Affairs Lecture Series is sponsored by Juniata's political science department and the Peace and Conflict Studies Committee with support from the John C. and Elizabeth E. Baker Endowment, the Sedgely Thornbury Lectureship and the William G. and Mary A. Nyce Lectureship. The public is cordially invited to attend this free program.

Students Attend Conference

by Jennifer Nicholson

Five Juniata students attended the National Catholic Student Coalition Conference at Nichols State University in Thibodaux, Louisiana. Over 460 students from all over the United States were present at the Conference which featured guest speakers addressing topics such as: The Pastoral Letter on Campus Ministry, Economic and Social Teaching, and "Building The Vision," the theme of the NCSC.

The students then enjoyed a day in New Orleans, seeing Bourbon Street and hitting various nightspots. The Juniata students - Dave Trinkley, Rich Brnich, Walt Cupit, Brenda Hughes, and Kristine Kleinfelder - attended the Conference with three students from Lock Haven University. The Campus Ministry Board donated $200 towards the trip. Individual student cost was $130 for Conference fees and transportation.

Survival Of The Fittest HOBO Hike Successful!

by Helen Bailey

The traditional HOBO hike was held Monday, Jan. 6.

Behavioral Analysis of Organizations, previously known as HOBO, is a business class whose objective is to understand human behavior.

The class, divided into four groups, went out on the hike as part of the process of meeting people outside of the classroom.

For three weeks before Christmas the class had been studying group processes, how groups emerge and the signs of a successful group.

The day began at 8 a.m. with a volleyball match. The aim of this was not to decide the best team at volleyball but to put recently studied theory into practice.

As it happened though, the team that did come in first - Group 2 - was given a bit of a head start on the hike. Each group was told to make its way to Camp Blue Diamond, located on the other side of Tussey Mountain.

Group 2 set off having no idea where they were. After asking someone for directions they went off down the road. They took the trail up the mountain, encountering some pretty tough climbing and sometimes falling on the rocks due to the damp weather.

Group 1 started off at roughly 10:30. They decided, as a group, to take the shortest route even though they realized it meant climbing two mountains. After climbing the first and knocking on a door to ensure they were right, they continued up Tussey Mountain. Spirits were kept high by Steve who played the clown. At one point, sitting in a tree acting as a baboon, he drew more laughs by falling out of the tree.

By this time Group 2 had reached the top of the mountain, taken a rest and then gone quickly down the other side. They found a road and went out through the woods, going about one half of a mile out of their way. They reached the camp at roughly 1:30, the first group to finish and one of the fastest groups ever to finish.

Group 1 continued down the other side of the mountain and finally got back at 3 p.m., the final group to reach the camp.

Groups 3 and 4 arrived at the camp sometime after the second group, having got rides for part of the way.

According to Andrei from Group 2 and a female member of Group 1 both groups remained pretty cohesive. Jerry was the leader in Group 2 who put forward most of the options, with Bob being the motivator. Group 1 also had a good hike.

One hiker noted that in the classroom the interest is far more centered on self-image and self-esteem, whereas out of that situation they concentrated only on basic needs, like food and warmth.

Professor Albertson would not disclose the real reaon and purpose behind the like, but said only that it involves the study of group interactions and processes. The results of the day will only be known when the class submits its reports. Says Prof. Albertson, "It's always a success."

Semester Status

by Cinny Cooper

This week's topic: Dean's List and Class Hours.

Next year one semester, not three terms, will be enough to earn Dean's List ranking.

According to the Pathfinder, "the letter grades of the last nine units taken are used to compute a grade point average for" Dean's List students under the trimester system. With the switch to semesters, the Academic Standards Committee changed the three term time span to one semester.

A 3.6 grade point average will still be required.

Class Hours

Under the semester system, Tuesdays and Thursdays will be reserved for two hour or one and one-half hour classes. Monday, Wednesday, and Friday classes will be on the hour.

Classes on Tuesdays and Thursdays will be scheduled at 8 a.m., 10 a.m., 12 p.m., 2 p.m., and 4 p.m.

Monday, Wednesday, and Friday classes will be scheduled 8 a.m. through 5 p.m., every hour.

Coming Up

In future weeks of Semester Status we will outline what could happen to various departments and programs under the semester system. Any questions that you feel should be answered can be forwarded to Student Government president, Jack Thomas.

Also coming up, look for an open forum being held to answer questions concerning the switch to semesters.

Casino Night Returns To Juniata

by Dorene Duncan

Juniata's Varsity "J" Club is sponsoring a Casino Night, Jan. 31, to raise money for the athletes' letter jackets. This year, the event will be in the Varsity gymnasium, from 7 p.m. until 11 p.m. Prizes will be auctioned at the end of the evening.

Casino Night is traditionally a semi-formal event. The professors and faculty are asked to be the dealers at the game tables where students attempt to win as much as they can with the play money given them.

At the 10:30 p.m. auction students bid on merchandise donated by surrounding businesses. This year, at least the first hundred students will be given certificates to McDonalds.

There is a slight catch to the auction. The gamblers won't know what they are bidding on. The only clue is the name of the donor. The estimated value of the prizes ranges from $1.00 to $75.00.

The unlucky people who lose their "money," will be able to enjoy dancing and refreshments on the mezzanine.

Prospective Students "Journey to Juniata"

By Dorene Duncan

Students from the east and west were offered a chance to come to Juniata at the college's expense during the first ever "Journey to Juniata" program. The students spent about 24 hours on campus to socialize and attend classes.

The students who were invited are making their final decision on college and all are either inquiries or applicants to Juniata. This program offers them a chance to come and see Juniata. Many would be unable to come because their parents could not afford to take time off from work.

The students were able to ask questions on the bus, as three admissions staff personnel were on board. Materials, such as applications, were also available to the students. Upon arrival, they were greeted by their hosts. Later, a student panel spoke with the students about academics, career planning and placement, co-curricular activities and the freshman year.

Corky Surbeck feels that to date program has been successful for both Juniata and the students. He hopes to expand the program next year to the Northeast and Washington, D.C. areas, along with having the program earlier.

This year, 25 students from the East (Philadelphia and the five surrounding counties) and 45 from the West (Pittsburgh) participated.

Nobody Wants To Be College Presidents

"The American college and university presidency is in trouble," a new study reports.

Things are so bad, the study says, that qualified applicants don't want to become college presidents, and in some cases, incumbent presidents want to get out of their jobs.

The study, conducted by the Commission on Strengthening Presidential Leadership, warns the president's job has become too difficult, stressful and constrained at many institutions.

Colleges have "unnecessarily and unwisely" diminished the power of their presidents in the past 20 years through increased government controls, and meddling by faculty and governing boards, the study says.

The study adds the problems are driving away the top academic officials most qualified for the job.

"Institutions must ask 'how can we make the presidency attractive to qualified applicants,' " suggests Nancy Axelrod, spokeswoman for the commission's sponsor, the Association of Governing Boards of Colleges and Universities (AGB).

"Presidential search committees cannot simply sit back and wait for applications," she adds. "They must carefully seek out candidates who qualify for the position."

But only about half of the nation's best-qualified academic officers want to become a college president, the study claims.

And while finding presidential applicants is frustrating, retaining qualified presidents is often harder.

Presidents are stymied by federal and state controls, particularly "sunshine" laws requiring that they conduct official college business in open meetings, the report asserts.

Increased faculty influence in hiring teachers and governing board intervention in daily decision-making also discourages presidents.

"The power of a governing board and how it relates to the president in many cases reduces the power of the president," maintains Larisa Wanserski, an AGB spokeswoman.

Governing board actions can "isolate (a president) from the public, making it hard for him or her to make decisions," Wanserski says.

The beleaguered presidents often react by resigning.

During any two-year period, the study reveals, about 30 percent of the nation's college presidents are leaving or thinking of leaving their positions. A fourth of them are dissatisfied with their jobs.

"Colleges need to look at the position and make it as attractive and desirable as it once was," she asserts.

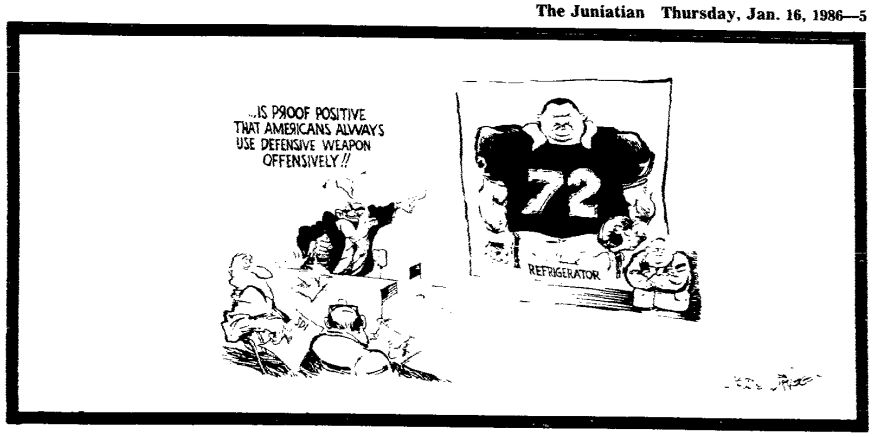
To do it, the study recommends governing boards review their provisions for presidential support yearly, evaluate their president in "ways that do not encourage organized attacks upon them and do not unduly embarrass . . . or weaken them," and make changes necessary to attract and retain suitable presidents.

Boards should scrutinize presidential qualifications as well as the office itself, suggests Debra McCarthy of Higher Education Administrative Referal Service, which helps track down presidential candidates for colleges.

"There's a time for everything," she contends. "What was needed in a president 15 or 20 years ago wasw fine for that time. Now, it's time for something else."

McCarthy says most colleges are looking for presidents with administrative experience rather than strictly academic background.

"Some say there's more emphasis on managerial ability," agrees Nancy Axelrod of the AGB. "The managerial part has become more important for administration and fundraising, but academic background is still important, too."



Social Host Classes are available regularly to those students over 21 desiring to have a keg at their party. More information about class meeting times is available at the Information Desk in Ellis Hall.

S.N.A.P. Sponsors Blizzard

The "Blizzard of Bucks" will be held this Saturday at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall.

Twelve contestants will be chosen from the audience by a professional host to form 3 four-member teams. The teams will then compete in "crazy, wild, zany games" for finalist positions. Even the S.N.A.P. committee, sponsor of the event, is unsure of the games. All they know is they must provide marshmallows and whipped cream!

The three finalists will compete for time in "The Incredible Money Machine," where they are blindfolded and given the opportunity to grab as much money as they can in a limited time. The winner can earn up to $500 in cash.

All contestants will receive free T-shirts.

Celebrate Life At Art Exhibit

The "Joy of Life" is the title of an art exhibit which opened at Juniata College's shoemaker Galleries Friday, Jan. 10 and will continue through Feb. 21.

The exhibit features a broad selection of prints by old and modern masters, celebrating the enthusiastic enjoyment of life. Included in the exhibit are prints by Durer, Rembrandt, von Ostade and other 17th and 18th century masters, as well as works by such modern artists as Chagall and Picasso.

A wide variety of techniques will be represented, including etchings, engravings, lithographs and woodcuts. All of the pieces are devoted to the images which express the pleasures of life. The show is guaranteed to gladden the eye and lift the spirit.

The art exhibit is open to the public at no charge. Shoemaker Galleries are open weekdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Baxter's Book Focuses On Pres. Zia of Pakistan

"Zia's Pakistan — Politics and Stability in a Frontline State" is the title of a new book edited by Dr. Craig Baxter, professor of politics and history at Juniata College.

Published by Westview Press in Boulder, Colo., Baxter's book focuses on President Zia who has ruled Pakistan as chief martial-law administrator for nearly eight years. It is a collection of essays on the changing Pakistani government and the factors which may bear directly on the survivability of the regime.

Along with an introductin and conclusion by Baxter, the book includes such essays as "The Military and Security in Pakistan" by Rodney W. Jones, Juniata alumnus and senior research associate at the Georgetown University Center for Strategic and International Studies in Washington, D.C. Other topics include "Rural Groups and the Stability of the Zia Regime" and "The Impact of the Afghan Refugees on Pakistan."

A member of the Juniata faculty since 1981, Baxter was a Foreign Service Officer from 1956 to 1980 and served in such countries as Pakistan, India, Afghanistan and Bangladesh as officer-in-charge of international science relations for the Near East, South Asia, and Africa. He has served as political counselor with the U.S. Embassy in Dacca, Bangladesh; senior political officer in Pakistan and Afghanistan; analyst for India and Pakistan; and deputy principal officer and political officer with the U.S. Consulate General in Lahore, Pakistan.

Baxter received his B.S. degree in economics, A.M. degree in political science and Ph.D. in history, all from the University of Pennsylvania. He is the author of several books including, "Bangladesh; A New Nation in an Old Setting."

KVASIR Seeks Material

By Carla DeMarco

The time has come for the KVASIR, Juniata's literary magazine, to once again be published. The KVASIR is a collection of Juniata students' creations such as photographs, poems, short stories, essays, plays or any artistic work that a student would like to share.

Juniata students who would like to share his or her talents should not miss this chance. Typed submissions must be made by February 10th, and should include your name and P.O. Box number. Submissions should be sent to P.O. Box 916.

The KVASIR Committee makes the final decision on the exact contents of the magazine. It's still not too late to be on the committee. Interested people should contact Carla Demarco, or watch out for posters on committee meeting times. Everyone is welcome!

All Class Night Plans Underway

All Class Night, an exciting event that Juniata students look forward to, will be filled with friendly competition between the classes. Once again this year, the classes will be making great efforts to write and perform the best skit possible.

The general theme for All Class Night has been selected to be the soap operas. The Senior Class has chosen Dynasty for their storyline. The Junior Class will be using the Guiding Light as their theme. Dallas will prove to be an exciting theme for the sophomores while the freshmen will be spinning off of General Hospital for their skit.

Each class has 30 minutes to set up the stage, give their performance, and clear the stage. There is an estimated 150 students from each class to perform in each skit.

A final draft of the skit is due by March 11 and rehearsals well begin March 18 (at which time a final cast list is due.) All Class Night is staged March 21 in Oller Hall and should prove to be an exciting evening.

Men's Basketball Lose 2 – Regroup And Look Ahead –

By Joe Scialabba

The Juniata men's basketball team started the 1986 portion of the season with two tough losses on the road and in the process fell to 2-8 overall and 2-6 in the Middle Atlantic Conference. But, all is not lost.

"We played very well at times last week," said Juniata coach Dan Helm. "Once again we played conference-leading Susquehanna tough the whole way only to lose by a point. However, our effort at Scranton was not as consistent as it needed to be."

The Indians lost on Saturday to Scranton, 80-63, after dropping another heartbreaker at Susquehanna on Thursday, 61-60.

In the Susquehanna loss the Tribe trailed most of the way and by a seven-point margin, 57-50, with just a minute to go. Still, the Indians made it close, pulling to only a 59-58 deficit with :07 left to play. However, Don Harnum's free throws iced the win for the Crusaders.

Senior Dick Moses hit 10-for-10 at the line in scoring 20 points for JC. Wayne Paul and Les Squair added 10 points apiece.

On Saturday, Juniata fell behind early and never recovered as the hosting Royals held a comfortable lead all afternoon and coasted to the victory. Scranton, 10-2 overall, leads the Northeast section of the MAC, while Susquehanna remains unbeaten in the Northwest.

Paul had 17 points at Scranton; Squair added 14. The Indians missed the scoring punch of Moses, sidelined with a foot injury.

Winter Intramural Basketball Begins

By Andrew Hiscock

Juniata's Winter I.M.'s are getting into full swing now, and the Intramural basketball program is no exception. As in the past years, both the men's and women's leagues have had a good turnout, with the men's league seperated into an 'A' League with 5 teams and a 'B' League with 13 teams. The women's league is made up of another six teams.

In Division A Men's action last Monday, 'Shamma Lamma Ding Dong' held onto a tie for the league lead with a 54-36 victory over 'Fly Boys'. Steve 'CK' Poska had a solid game for Ding's. Also in action on Monday, 'I Was Only Apping' held on to defeat 'Air Huston' 62-58 to remain in a league leading tie. Tom Kelly was good from the outside for Apping.

In Division 'B' Action this last Monday, 'Rolling Thunder' opened their season with a strong performance vs. 'No Name I' as they won 43-31. Scott Wescott and Paul Granger worked the ball well for Thunder. 'Revenge Of Biffs' also kept their sights on the league lead with an opening victory over 'Running Rebels' 68-60.

The Women's Basketball League was also in action this past week. 'The Has Beens' defeated 'No Name' in a close game 49-47. Laura Hoffman had a good game for The Beens. In the other women's game scheduled this past Monday, 'Bock's Babies' handily defeated 'Pink Thunder' 43-17. The Indian Volleyball Team transposed was solid at all positions with Carolyn Stambaugh doing a good job underneath the basket.

It is still too early to tell how the leagues will shape-up.

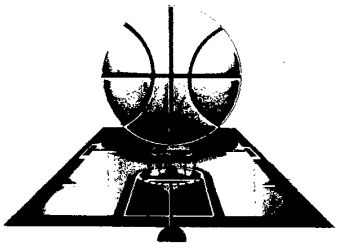
moved into the lobby of the Huntingdon County Nursing Home which adjoins the hospital.

The search of the hospital combined the efforts of 125 people including area fire companies, the police, several ambulance divisions and the National Guard.

The bomb scare lasted for about four hours. Patients were returned to their rooms at 7:15pm.



Juniata Women's Basketball Upset National Champions

By Tracy DeBlase

The Women's Basketball team added a chapter to the history books on Saturday with a 61-60 victory over third ranked Scranton University, the 1984-85 national champions.

The Indians, ranked 13th in the nation with a 7-2 record, traveled to Scranton with hopes of accomplishing something no other Indian team has ever done— defeat Scranton. After 10 years and 14 tries, the dry spell came to an end this weekend. "We're very excited about what we've accomplished today," Coach Nancy Latimore said after the game. "We waited a long time for this day."

The Indians, down 22-26 at halftime evened the score 26-26 in the first minute of the second half on a lay up by Janet Robison off the tap and a short jumper by Sue Grubb.

The two M.A.C. rivals exchanged baskets for 18 minutes. Down 51-53 with :32 left in regulation play, freshman Darella Fortson came through in the clutch with a jumper from the top of the key to even the score 53-53.

In the overtime period JC led 59-56 after Karen Ramm hit a short jump shot with 2:16 remaining. Scranton then scored twice to take a 60-59 advantage with :45 seconds left.

Fortson swished a 10 foot shot with 30 ticks on the clock to give the Indians the 61-60 victory in front of more than 1300 stunned Scranton fans.

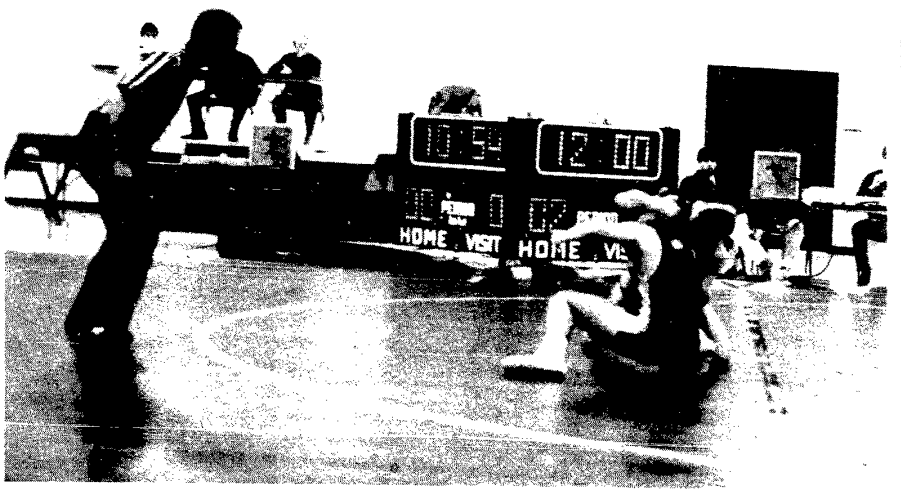
Four Indians hit double digits in the contest. Susan Grubb collected 15 points while Janet Robison added 12 and Karen Fonner and Fortson chipped in with 10 each.

The Indians shot 43% from the field and an outstanding 93% (13 out of 14) from the charity stripe. They are ranked sixth in the nation for free throw percentage.

"It was a real team effort. Everyone made big plays for us," added an elated Nancy Latimore.

Earlier this week the cagers dropped a 53-56 squeaker to Susquehanna. It was the women's first game after a three week Christmas lay off.

Robison led the Indians with 18 points followed by Fortson's 12. Grubb grabbed 13 caroms and six steals. The Indians host Lebanon Valley on Wednesday and Wilkes on Saturday.



Wrestling action from the Indian Invitational Tournament. The Indians failed to regroup after a month-long holiday lay off to capture the tournament, but had a number of good individual performances. The Indains had two third place finishes registered by Freshmen John Swanson and Larry Krizner in addition to three fourth place finishes. The Indian Grapplers travel to King's this Saturday.

U.S. Relation With South Africa Discussed

by Helen Bailey

Last week, at the world affairs lecture, Juniata welcomed the Hon. Harold Horan, former U.S. Ambassador to Malaur and Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs. An audience of over 60 attended.

He introduced the lecture as "U.S. relations in southern Africa - a human rights challenge," and began with a short history of American interest in this part of Africa. He gave some background statistics that were useful for understanding — if it is possible to fully understand — the politics of southern Africa and the situation there.

Speaking of South Africa itself Horan said the country is "ruled by the architects of a hauntingly oppressive society." Spoken like a true politician, it soon became obvious though, that he was only going to disclose so much. His speech was carefuly mapped out and he did not depart from it. The white Afrikaaner, he explained, has, since 1948, institutionalized the system of black and white segregation known as apartheid, building the structure to keep himself in power and now not knowing what to do with it.

He outlined the Reagan plan "constructive engagement." There are five major points involved in this theory, the fifth and most vital being the end to apartheid. At the time of the formulation of this, Horan was heavily involved in African affairs. In fact through personal experience he apparently feels that we "can't trust the South Africans." With this in mind, how has the U.S. made any progress in South Africa at all. What exactly is America's policy toward South Africa?

Finishing the lecture Horan stressed that one important breakthrough has been that of young Republican leaders in the Senate beginning to speak up against what is going on. He personally feels that the solution to the problem of apartheid must ultimately come from the South Africans themselves, although if the U.S. believes itself to be a "moral nation" then we must have some concern for the problem.

Questions from the audience dealt mainly with moral involvement of the U.S. Horan does not believe in U.S. sanctions against South Africa because, he says, the country has its own arms. He says that the U.S. is giving a helping hand to the black unions there.

World News Update

By Virginia Krall

WASHINGTON — The American military is struggling to deal with AIDS, but military commanders have trampled on individual rights and allowed the privacy of many servicemen to be violated, according to those who have been caught up in the process. Recruits who tested positive for AIDS antibodies — even though they do not have AIDS and may never get it — say their medical confidentiality has been broken and they have been embarassed and branded for life.

LAOS — Little new information emerged from talks between a U.S. congressional delegation and Laotian officals on Sunday concerning the issue of 556 Americans still missing in action in Laos from the Vietnam War. U.S. lawmakers said in interviews that the Laotian government had rejected a proposal that Americans be allowed to enter Laos to conduct joint investigations of reported sightings of living Americans.

VATICAN CITY — In a gesture of peace, Pope John Paul II called for prayers for Lebanon and then released two white doves from St. Peter's Square on Sunday. The Pope said he had special thoughts "for brothers and sisters in Lebanon, where the situation has become once again worrying."

Campus Media Advisory Board Being Considered

by Cinny Cooper

A re-established Communications Advisory Board may soon be more involved in electing leaders for each campus media organization.

According to Professor Doris Goehring, a member of the subcommittee making the recommendations to the Student Affairs Council, the decision for action stems from the recent problems with former yearbook editor, Kristine Van Horne. Van Horne took layout sheets home with her last summer in order to finish the 1984-1985 Alfarata and then failed to return them until last November.

The recommendations to the council include four points:

1) Re-establishment of the communications board.

2) Board membership shall consist of media heads, their advisors, and a member of the Dean of Student Affairs' office.

3) Applications for leadership roles within media organizations would be given to the Communications Advisory Board along with recommendations from each media.

4) Consideration for appointment would be made on the basis of experience, grade point average, dependability, and desire.

Goehring, along with fellow sub-committee members sophomore Sue Gulla and senior Ginny Krall, contacted other colleges and universities to learn how college media heads obtained their positions. Most of the schools either followed a strategy similar to the one being recommended at Juniata or allowed individual groups to choose their own leaders.

Reactions to the recommendations were varied.

Junior Shelly Guest, station manager of Juniata's radio station, was apprehensive about the recommendations. Guest feared the board might be "taking the choice out of the hands" of group members. Currently, the entire staff of V103 elects its leaders.

Alfarata's editor, junior Norine Nightingale, thought the recommendations were "great," adding that "the selection process needs a lot of help." In the past, yearbook staff leaders were chosen by the editor and advisor.

International Terrorism Discussed

"International Terrorism" will be discussed at Juniata Thursday, January 30 at 8:15pm as part of the World Affairs Lecture Series.

Dr. Yonah Alexander, professor of international studies and director of the Institute for International Terrorism at the State University of New York, will present the lecture in the Faculty Lounge.

Editor-in chief of "Terrorism: An International Journal" and "Political Communication and Persuasion: An International Journal" Alexander also is a Fellow of the Institute for Social and Behavioral Pathology at the University of Chicago and a senior research staff member at the Center for Strategic and International Studies at Georgetown University.

Alexander received his M.A. degree in international affairs from the University of Chicago and his Ph.D degree from Columbia University. He has published 24 books on the subjects of international affairs, terrorism and psychological warfare. He serves as editor-in chief of a series of books on terrorism for Martinus Nijhoff (Holland).

Wrestle For Charity

An upcoming event at Juniata is bound to make college history. Student Government's Residential Life Committee has organized an evening of Jello Wrestling with the proceeds going to the Muscular Dystrophy Association.

Committee members have been busy getting local businesses to sponsor the wrestlers and to donate prizes and, of course, jello. They are also working to have the event televised by a local television station and hope to include a faculty jello wrestling match. The Committee is very pleased to have the support of the Huntingdon community and the college's administration in this new endeavor. They now need the support of the students as the search for students willing to wrestle begins.

The Juniatian commends the Residential Life Committee for the time, effort, and creativity put into this project which is sure to make February 8 an evening to remember. More importantly, the Residential Life Committee is to be commended for the time, effort, and creativity put into a project for charity. We hope to see all of Juniata's clubs and organizations show the same initiative and caring.

Anyone having any questions about Jello Wrestling, please contact Stephanie Seidle, Box 422 or Chuck Hollander, Box 93.

Do you ever buy a Sunday paper?

I did this week, and now I wonder why?

I spent a dollar to buy The Philadelphic Inquirer upon request from my roommates(?), thinking once again that eight college students would have enough time and interest to take advantage of all the literary offerings of such a well-known tabloid. Of course, I was wrong again.

The paper ended up on the floor of the lounge area (East Apartment) crumpled only by the feet that tramp on it rather than over or around it. Only three of approximately 13 sections are missing from the stack - the front news, the sports and the ever popular comics.

So what? Well, that's really what I thought until I looked at all I was missing by limiting myself to Khadafi, Dr. J. and Garfield. A sunday paper deserves more respect! It's not just a fish wrapper, garbage wrapper or litter box liner.

Take section I - Real Estate. I bet you didn't know Atlantic City is planning a convention hall, or in housing buys Philadelphia is ranked among the best.

The Business section talked on problems at Gimbels and predicted "Cable TV in'Philly in July."

How about section F? Appropriately dedicated to food, it gives "recipes and news about good food, gourmet cooking and fine wine." I read intently, hoping to find tips on what's the "in thing" at BYOB parties, but I was bombarded with Italian food and a heartless story on chicken slaughter. I admit soon my interest was gone, an ESPN basketball replay seemed to be more exciting, so down to the floor the paper fell again, heavy enough a pile to kick up dust, especially since section J and up were still intact, untouched, a fact that is distressing since seven seniors complain of the upcoming search for employment yet can't take the couple minutes it takes to pull the classifieds.

All in all, the Sunday paper is probably a total waste of my limited cash supply. I get all the news I need every week in this wonderful paper and from Channel 12. Plus, I'm tired of the same'thing every week: "Joe, clean up that mess, you bought it!"

Guest Commentary

by Dr. Jay Buchanon

A very interesting article on shyness appeared recently in anarea newspaper. Since the seriousness and magnitude of the problem are perhaps far greater than many realize, a brief discussion of shyness is presented.

According to researchers at the Institute for Social Competence at Stanford University, shyness can be so intense that many who suffer from it choose to live in almost total isolation.

What causes shyness? Some experts argue that it is hereditary while others support the notion that it is a learned behavior. Fortunately, regardless of its etiology, something can be done about shyness.

Psychology Professor William O'Neill describes shyness as a three-part problem. First of all, shy people lack many of the social skills that their less-shy counterparts possess. They feel less comfortable in social situations and, because of this lack of social skills, they tend not to be risk takers. Lack of risk taking behaviors leads potentially to further isolation.

Secondly, shy people tend to subscribe to irrational beliefs about themselves and others. Examples such as "I could never get her to like me" and "I failed at it once therefore I'll probably fail again".

Finally, according to O'Neill, shy people face the problem of feelings of fear and apprehension. They fear that others will evaluate them negatively and assume others are thinking negatively about them.

Shirley Radl, author of "The Shy Child", says that shyness causes individuals to be ". . . extremely concerned about the social evaluation of them by others."

In our next article, we'll continue our discussion of shyness, present some myths surrounding it, and proffer some techniques to overcome it.

Mrs. Price Promoted

by Lauralee Snyder

In case you have not noticed, there is a misplaced face on campus. Linda Price, former secretary for Housing, has climbed a notch in her Juniata College career to College Center Secretary – in other words, the Information Desk.

Linda filled the position due to Joan Amato's resignation. She decided to complete her education studies and to get her degree form Penn State.

Mrs. Price has been employed at the college for five and a half years. She started as a secretary at the Physical Plant, moved to Housing, and is now at her new position.

Linda had this to say about her new job: "I am enjoying meeting a broader range of students- not just those who have complaints and problems. I also get to deal with faculty and staff, as well as the community. This job requires me to be more aware of and active in events at Juniata."

The Juniatian would like to extend its congratulations to Linda in the new job and wish her good luck.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

I have long felt that the most distinctive characteristic of Juniata College has been the "class" students we attract and retain. Recent experiences with revising policies relating to alcoholic beverages reinforce that impression. The reception by students can only be characterized as mature and responsible. Thanks for proving once again that you are a "class act."

Sincerely,
Arnold J. Tilden, Jr.
Vice President and Dean of Student Services

Dear Editor,

I never thought it would happen so fast. When I came from oh-so-far-away Germany, I never expected to become a part of the American society so soon. But so is life and I won't complain about it. Yes, it's true, I discovered a Bulk Rate junk mail letter with my correctly spelled address in my P.O. Box which was until then only filled with - what I now know -

Conference Considers Academic Advising

By Jodie Monger

Juniata College's Retention Committee met January 16 in Williamsburg, Penna. at JC's Conference Center. The Committee has been designed to develop strategies to improve the student persistence at Juniata College and to monitor the programs. Members of the Retention Committee and attendents at the conference include Chairman Arnie Tilden, Julie Keener (Assistant Dean of Student Services and Residential Life), Joseph Stewart (Dean of Academic Affairs), Dr. Elizabeth Cherry, Dr. Duane Stoman, Bob Yanckello, and Amy Clark. Larry Bock and Dr. Jay Buchanan act as resource contacts for the Retention Committee.

The Retention Committee has many topics of discussion for the year including career planning, underachievers, co-curricular experiences, decline of projected satisfaction, decline as first choice college, the Baldridge Reading program, and the overall retention plan.

The Planning Committee, which is coordinating the change to semesters, asked the Retention Committee to consider the academic advising at Juniata. With the change to semesters occuring next year, the time seemed to be appropriate to consider advising. A proposal will be drafted by the Retention Committee to be submitted to the Planning Committee of the faculty and upon approval will be voted on by the faculty at large. The final approval of their proposal is expected to take several months.

At the Conference Center, the Retention Committee spent the morning discussing academic advising. Dr. Duane Stroman had drafted a paper of reactions by the committee. For three and a half hours, ideas on advising were discussed that were prompted by Stroman's paper. Among the points of discussion were the role definitions of advisors, training for academic advisors, and the responsibility of all advisors.

In the afternoon, the Retention Committee examined data from the Cooperative Institute Research Program. Special consideration was given to the Astin Study which gathers data on attitudes and prior behavior statistics of college students. Juniata College student's attitudes are considered comparatively to the norm group of other colleges similar to Juniata in selectivity and size, such as Washington and Jefferson, Albright, Wilkes, and Allegheny. These schools, including Juniata and others, are medium to high SAT selectivity for four year colleges.

Comparisons by sex indicated that different attitudes on Juniata's campus may be related to retention. As an example, in the Fall 48.8% of Juniata men predicted satisfaction as compared to 61.4% of women (as freshmen). Also, Juniata College students are more vocationally oriented than the norm of other similar schools.

Nationwide, there is a 50% persistence rate to graduation. Juniata has been as high as 69% which has dropped over the past several years to the mid 60's. Juniata is dependent upon enrollment which encompasses recruitment for admission and retention. Dean Tilden comments, "we do retain students well at Juniata in comparison to other colleges, but we are always looking for improvement." In the Fall of 1984, 80% of the students eligible to return did so. In 1985, over 90% of the eligible students returned.

Dean Tilden comments on the Retention Committee's conference, "the committee did a good job with excellent ideas to improve retention."

Accomplishments of the Retention Committee in 1984-85 include:

1. Reading Skills Inventory to new students to enable the faculty to understand academic problems.
2. Special advisors with training were provided for conditional students.
3. Financial aid strategies were put into place which increased wages to $3.70 per hour and raised work limits.
4. Notice of Concern Program which provided faculty members with a form to express concern about a student.
5. Initiated a newsletter to the parents upperclassmen called Inner-View to help remind parents that Juniata is a good college.
6. Developed strategies to demonstrae that students in the allied health field may remain at Juniata for more than the expected two or three years.

Film Review

By Laura Mumaw

Leave it to Dan Ackroyd to create a movie that turns America's worst nightmares into unbelievably funny and entertaining creatures. Ghostbusters takes the ghosts out of the haunted house and into the streets of the Big Apple. Bill Murray and Ackroyd are brilliant as the dedicated pursuers of the menaces that are unleashed on thier city and find themselves in one "sticky" situation after another.

Ghostbusters has all the ingredients for a fantastic motion picture: the beautiful damsel in destress, the identifiable bad guys, awesome special effects and some very funny moments. The end of the movie is packed with plenty of laughs and surprises, and it is almost sad to see it end.

Go. If not for the laughs or the best special effects, then just to see Dan Ackroyd and Bill Murray together, armed to the teeth with nuclear weapons, scaring themselves, and each other, while the fate and sanity of the world lie in their hands.

Eating Disorders Discussed

Eating disorders such as Anorexia Nervosa (self starvation) and Bulimia (binging and purging) will be the topic of a panel discussion at Juniata College Wednesday, Jan. 29 at 7 p.m.

Society's emphasis on leanness and increased media attention to eating disorder problems have prompted speculation that the number of people experiencing these disorders has reached epidemic proportions, noted Jane H. Brown, college nurse. "This panel discussion will address the psychological complexities, nutritional relationships and personal implications of eating disorders," Mrs. Brown said.

Participating in the panel discussion, to be held in Alumni Hall in the Brumbaugh Science Center, will be Frederick E. Wawrose, M.D.; Barbara Herrington, registered dietician at J.C. Blair Memorial Hospital and Crickett J. Julius, a Juniata freshman and cured anorexic.

The public is cordially invited to attend this free program sponsored as a public service by the Juniata College Health Center and the Student Health Advisory Committee.

The English Department may be facing new courses, lost subjects and additional professors under the semester system.

English I (EN150) and English II (EN150) "will be required by all freshmen and will combine Essentials of Writing, Art of Literature and Freshman Composition," Joseph V. Stewart, Dean of Academic Affairs said last week. These two classes will not be open to upperclassmen.

Because of the new combination, Art of Literature will no longer be a prerequisite for upper level literature courses. Dr. Mark Hochberg, head of the English Department, explained further that the "emphasis (of English I and II) will be to use analytical reading skills to develop writing skills."

Professional Writing will combine Argumentative Writing, Journalistic Writing, and possibly Essay Writing. Topics in the new class will vary, "one year journalism, the next year technical writing," Hochberg elaborated.

Seniors who had planned to take Journalistic Writing next year could earn credit by exam, added Hochberg.

Writing For Business and Industry will be dropped by the English Department, Stewart and Hochberg said, but will hopefully be picked up by the Business Department.

Poetry and Fiction writing classes will be offered on an alternating basis.

Hochberg also mentioned the possibility of hiring a new English faculty member. "We have been promised that if demand warrants, the administration will hire another person," Hochberg said.

"We will know more this spring, after preregistration, what problems there are and we will try to accommodate," Stewart added.

Men's Basketball Take 3

by Joe Scialabba

Picking up the tempo, that's what Juniata's men's basketball team has done in 1985-86 and last week it paid off with three straight victories.

The unbeaten stretch left Juniata 5-8 overall and 3-6 in the Middle Atlantic Conference with a tough MAC stretch beginning this weekend. The Indians are at Drew (Madison, NJ) tomorrow before a return visit to Albright on Saturday.

The road wasn't a bad place to be for the Tribe this past weekend. Juniata ambushed Alvernia 71-61 on Friday night before downing Delaware Valley 79-75 on Saturday. The Indians leveled Lebanon Valley 100-69 at home on Wednesday to start the streak.

"It was a very solid effort," said Juniata coach Dan Helm. "We found out we can pressure people and make them play our game. Our offense has responded well, and I think a lot of it has to do with the intensity we are getting defensively. Things are blending together – offense and defense, underclassmen and upperclassmen. We don't want to let things stop here, we want to continue to improve."

Juniata's improvement was evident last weekend. Freshman Les Squair had two 21-point efforts to go with 23 total rebounds. Sophomore Wayne Paul scored 24 and 18, including a six-for-six run against Delaware Valley. Freshman Duan Dise scored 16 points on Saturday while Brian Riggleman backed-up Senior captain John Hunter inside. Hunter was steady, and Riggleman had two thundering dunks on Saturday.

While the Tribe controlled the boards by a 41 rebound margin in the two wins, point guards Eric Lane and Darrow Murdock led an attack that produced 40 assists. junior Chris Frew and Tom Reese each added to the list of contributions for JC.

The weekend trip, which featured its usual hassles (same colored jerseys on Friday and no heat in the lockerroom), was sparked by Wednesday's destruction of Lebanon Valley.

The Dutchmen were run out of Memorial Gym by the entire Indians squad – as all players saw considerable playing time. Only injured senior Dick Moses (out 3-4 weeks with a foot injury) missed the chance to add to the century-mark effort.

"We are excited about what we can accomplish the rest of the way," added Helm.

The Tribe hosts MAC-rival Elizabethtown next Wednesday night in Memorial Gym, Kennedy Sports & Rec Center.

World News Update

by Mary McDougall

LAGOS, NIGERIA — After two days of artillery bombardment and heavy street fighting, rebels of the National Resistance Army have taken effective control of the Ugandan capitol of Kampala, according to reports from western diplomats in the city. Reports from Kampala said Saturday that several thousand government soldiers had fled the capital during the day, some of them killing civilians and looting as they went.

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The world is riding the oil price roller coaster again. This time, unlike in the 70's, it is plunging down, with the prospect that a $10-a-barrel drop could add as much as $85 billion to real incomes in the industrial nations over the next two years. Such a price drop would result in a lower inflation rate over the same period, analysts say, and it should lead to lower interest rates, as well.

MISURATA, LIBYA — Libyan leader Col. Muammar Quaddafi boarded a missile-bearing Navy patrol boat Sat. and sailed out into the Gulf of Didra, one day after the U.S. Sixth Fleet began maneuvers off the Libyan coast. "Libya cannot be patient forever to live under America's international terrorism," Quaddafi said in a shipboard news conference in the harbor of Misurata, 125 miles east of Tripoli.

PASADENA, CALIF. — Voyager 2, continuing its flawless operation, sent back to Earth pictures of a new ring around Uranus, the planet's 15th moon, detailed pictures of moon surfaces and a puzzling series of planet emissions that scientists do not understand. Scientists at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory said Sat. that they expected even more discoveries in the next few days.

Admissions Office Reorganizes Staff

By Mary McDougall

The staff of the Admissions Office will see some changes next year following the anticipated departure of Gayle W. Kreider, Dean of Admissions, and three staff members.

Kreider, who has been with the Juniata College admissions staff for the past 14 years, will leave her position as Director of Admissions in May. Kreider plans to marry in June and will be residing in Meadville. She has accepted a position with Allegheny College.

A Juniata alumnus, Kreider has served as Director of Admissions for the past six years and Dean for the past two years. She joined the staff originally as office manager.

"I have a real love for Juniata and will certainly miss the students, faculty and administration," said Kreider. "Juniata has been a big part of my life and I have thoroughly enjoyed my time here."

Also leaving the Juniata staff this spring is Robert Gielow, Assistant Director of Admissins. Gielow will be attending Michigan University for graduate studies in higher education administration. Admissions counselor Stacy Godnick is also considering graduate studies while counselor and recent graduate Robert Adamek has accepted a position in business.

Kreider stressed that this reorganization is not uncommon in the college admissions field. She indicated that the turnover rate is generally two to three years among counselors.

An advertisement has been placed in the Chronicle of Higher Education in the search for a new

Beverly Garland To Visit Juniata's Campus

Actress Beverly Garland, co-star of the hit television series "Scarecrow and Mrs. King," will be visiting the Juniata College campus sometime before the end of the winter term.

The exact date of Ms. Garland's visit has not yet been set due to the production schedule of her television series. As soon as a date has been arranged, it will be announced on campus.

Ms. Garland is coming to Juniata at the invitation of her close friend Nancy Kulp, Juniata's Artist-in-Residence, for the winter and spring terms. While on campus, Ms. Garland will lecture to Ms. Kulp's classes and also give a public lecture in the evening.

A native of California, Ms. Garland is well remembered for her role as Fred MacMurray's wife on the long-running series "My Three Sons." She made her motion picture debut in 1950 in the film "D.O.A." and has more than 200 television and film roles to her credit. Ms. Garland starred as television's first policewoman in the series "Decoy" and played Bing Crosby's wife in "The Bing Crosby Show." In addition, Ms. Garland has guest-starred in episodes of such shows as "Gunsmoke," "Trapper John, M.D." and "Magnum P.I."

For her role as a young mother stricken with leukemia on the series "Medic," Ms. Garland received an Emmy Award nominatin.

In 1983, Ms. Garland was honored by the Hollywood Chamber of Commerce for her work in film and television when she received a star in her name in the sidewalk of the world famous "Walk of Fame" on Hollywood Boulevard.

Ms. Garland serves as Honorary Mayor of North Hollywood and is on the Board of Directors of the California Tourism Corporation. She also serves on the Board of Advisors of Toys for Tots.

Married to a real estate developer and businessman Fillmore Crank, together the two own and operate hotels in North Hollywood and Sacramento. They have four children. Coincidentally, Ms. Garland's step-son is married to former actress Tina Cole, who portrayed her step-daughter-in-law on "My Three Sons," the role Tina now has in real life.

Slaves Raise Money

by Cinny Cooper

Slavery came back in style Tuesday night when the freshmen class held their annual Slave Auction. They raised $326 for future class projects.

Chris "Pud" Coller, Residence Hall Director of Sherwood auctioned the freshmen slaves and eight mystery slaves to the highest bidder. In the past, slaves hve cleaned dorm rooms and apartments, served as bartenders, and performed other less desirable tasks.

Professor/Actress Nancy Kulp, the first mystery slave, anonymously offered to take two students out to dinner. Seniors Darin Everhart and Ron "Spark"; Markey paid $10.50 for the honor.

Junior Sam Halsey spent $6.25 to buy lunch and an afternoon of horseback riding with an unknown professor whose last name meant "swift." His mystery slave was Rise Vanfleet, visiting instructor in the education department.

Other mystery slaves included Student Government President

Juniatian Policy

Sometimes, in order to understand, we must look closely at complicated entities. We must ask questions to clarify what we cannot understand by ourselves. And when no one asks about us, we must state our situation ourselves.

The Juniatian can be complicated. After all, journalism is not a cut and dry field. In the eyes of this editor this newspaper has three distinct parts.

News. This includes current happenings that affect or interest Juniata College. Most print media have the same goal — to present the news (from world affairs to sports) in an objective and unbiased manner (or as close as is humanly possible).

Features. Commonly known as soft news, feature stories are of human interest or do not have time restrictions. Again, reporters should be objective and unbiased but more freedom is permissable in this type of story.

Last and most controversial is opinion. Editorials are opinionated. Letters to the Editor and personal columns (Hot Wax, Along Muddy Run, Counselor's Corner) are opinionated. Cartoons are sometimes opinionated also. Nowhere else should opinion be blatantly visible in a newspaper.

The Juniatian does not use its editorial prerogative in letters to the editor, and only uses it in columns after the author has been consulted. Most editors, including members of The Juniatian staff, edit in order to clarify and present unbiased information to their readers, thus serving them better.

Hopefully, every reader now knows what base this newspaper works upon. We are not perfect and these ideas are not set in stone. We want and need to hear your point of view — now that you have heard ours.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

The Juniatian is short of staff and needs reporters.

When articles are written and time is spent on preparing them, it is expected that they will appear in print basically as they were reported. Maybe I am not taking into account the license of the Editor but "columns presented are the opinions of the individual writer and not necessarily those of The Juniatian."

The point I am trying to make is that the article on South Africa, published in last week's paper, reads slightly differently from its intended point. The lecture was not good, and the U.S. has not got a policy as such toward South Africa, and this overall feeling does not come over in the article, maybe partly because of the chopping and changing it underwent before printing.

I am not trying to undermine the editorship of The Juniatian because basically they do a good job, there being only a few of them doing most of the work. However, I feel that such a topic is of importance generally, and one person's view should not be altered although it was done unintentionally.

Sincerely,
Helen Bailey

Dear Juniata students and faculty,

Student Government's Residential Life Committee would like to take this opportunity to apologize to all those who were inconvenienced by last week's sudden cancellation of The Inner Circle. Due to circumstances beyond our control, last Saturday's Inner Circle was cancelled.

We hope all who had planned to attend together with all other students and faculty, will join us for The Inner Circle's special Valentine's Day dinner on Friday, February 14, at 6:00 pm in the Faculty Lounge. As always, there will be a choice of delicious entrees, a complementary non-alcoholic bar, and special entertainment. To make this Valentine's Day dinner extra special, Residential Life Committee will also be providing corsages for dates. We hope to see everyone there to enjoy Juniata's unique dining experience.

Again, we apologize for any inconvenience last week, and look forward to seeing everyone on Valentine's Day.

Sincerely,
Residential Life Committee

Dear Editor,

I am writing to encourage clubs and campus organizations to sponsor lounge parties. As many of us know, there have been no lounge parties in the last two weekends. If this pattern continues, Juniata may truly become a suitcase college.

I would like to inform clubs and organizations that even though the alcohol policy has changed, a lounge party can still be a profitable fund raiser. For instance, the ski team in early December held a party in Tussy-Terrace that was very successful. Center Board, through money from the administration, is currently assisting clubs sponsoring weekend social events. For more information concerning assistance, a club should see Mr. Wayne Justham Director of Programming. Finally, I realize that lounge parties may now require more work on the part of the club sponsoring the event. Although this may be true, clubs and organizations are not only earning a profit but providing much needed enter-

Dire Straits' "Brothers in Arms" album is a fantastic collection of music that any college student can mellow out to after a long day of studying. "Brothers in Arms" was recorded in 1985 at Air Studios in Montserrat, the West Indies, by the chariscourt Ltd., which is a branch of the Almo Music Corporation. The album was produced by Mark Knopfler and Neil Dorfsman for Warner Bros. Record Inc.

The group Dire Straits is made up of Mark Knopfler, lead vocals and guitar; Alan Clark on keyboards; Guy Fletcher on keyboards and vocals; John Illsley on bass and vocals; and Omar Hakin and Terry Williams on drums.

Side One starts out with So Far Away, about a guy who is "tired of being in love and being all alone" because his girlfriend lives "so far away." Money for Nothing is about how easy and rewarding it is for someone to play on MTV. After all, you "get your money for nothin' and your chicks for free." This song says that playing a musical instrument is so easy and yet rock musicians become millionaires off of it and have it all, unlike the typical person who works for a living. Walk of Life is about a guy who is a rock musician and who's "trying to make it pay." He's trying to get rich like so many other rock singers. Your Latest Trick is about a woman who tricked her guy into spending the night with her. "I don't know how it happened. It all took place so quick. . .my. . .security was laid back. Only my heart got broken. . ." because of "your latest trick." Why Worry concerns a guy who is trying to calm his girlfriend, because "some people can be bad" with all the things they say or do. The world has so many problems so "why woory" now.

Side Two includes Ride Across the River which is about an army soldier who is ready to pay with his life to win the war. "Death or glory - it's a killing game." The Man's Too Strong is about how war is torture and how long after the war is over soldiers can still feel its efffects. "I can hear his laughter. . .the man's too strong." Our World tells about a young man who is trying to figure out or understand his girlfriend's actions. I"can't find the reason for your actions. . .I don't like the reasoning you use. . .the plays we act." The title track of the album, "Brothers in Arms" is about wars raging between men. "We're fools to make war on our brothers in arms." The theme of Brothers in Arms is that it is stupid to kill one's own species when a disagreement can be solved rationally.

The album "Brothers in Arms" is tremendous and can be enjoyed by anyone who wants to lie back and just relax.

by John Kun

Super Bowl Sunday, An American Celebration? That's how NBC billed Sunday night's football fiasco. Festivities kicked off around 4:00 with the traditional toppings. In Cloister, we were treated to undercooked chicken in ketchup, potato salad ala glue and shredded hay. The only good thing about the food was the freshly steamed clams.

As kickoff approached the traditional chants of Patsys and Baby-Bears increased. Volume seemed directly proportional to the blood alcohol level The game itself was good for about 2 minutes. When Payton fumbled on the first play, I thought there really might be a game. Oh, well, I was wrong. As I'm sure we all know, the Patsies got their little pansy butts kicked. It was interesting to watch the steady tide of Patriot fans head for the door as the score increased. Being a native Chicagoan, I've watched the Bears lose season after season, so this one really felt good.

By half time, most of the Patriots' fans were gone. About this time, Julie and Arnie showed up to liven up the party. That's all that was left by now - a party. I don't think anybody really remembers the end of the game.

I a way, the game itself des/t seem to matter. All the hype seemed more in line for Christmas. I mean they had Ronnie talking about it for half an hour. Bob Hope does a special on it and probably doesn't even watch the game. I think that the game should be played on Saturday and Sunday should get all the hype and just show highlights from the game. As one previous Super Bowler puts it, "If it's such a big game, then why is it played every year?" Super Bowl Sunday, it is an American celebration. The Super Bowl? That's another story.

Dr. Jay Buchanan

Last week, we mentioned that shyness is misunderstood by many people. Consider the following myths regarding shyness:

* Shy adults were shy as children.
* More women than men are shy.
* Only a small percentage of the population is shy.
* Shyness is an inborn personality trait that can't be changed.
* Shyness is not really a serious problem.
* Shyness afflicts mainly children, and most will grow out of it.

Individuals do not have to allow shyness to control their lives. We can do something about it. Let's examine the three problems associated with shyness and make some suggestions toward intervention.

First of all, shy people have poor social skills. Shy individuals generally do not feel comfortable in social situations where they must interact with others. Participation in an assertiveness training experience might help a shy person gain confidence in his/her ability to deal with others.

Another possibility technique to combat shyness is observational learning or modeling. By tending to the behavior of others who are engaging in the behavior we would like to take on, we can learn those behaviors. In other words, by observing someone with good social skills, it is assumed that we can emulate or imitate those behaviors.

Yet another technique helpful in dealing with shyness is called behavioral rehearsal. Simply put, it is practicing the behavior that we want to take on. Part of this procedure might include the technique of role playing where we try on the role of a more assertive, confident person.

The second problem associated with shyness is that shy people tend to subscribe to irrational beliefs about themselves and others. Negative self-statements such as "I'll never be able to do it" and "She would never go out with me", are examples of irrational beliefs. What we need to do here is to refute these statements and change them to more positive statements.

The technique is called cognitive restructuring. It requires practice, that is, constantly refuting the negative statements and replacing them with more positive statements ("I will be able to do it" and "She probably will go out with me but I have to ask"). Most importantly, we have to believe in what we are telling ourselves. The internal dialogue (covert behavior) that we carry on with ourselves plays a vital role in our overt behavior.

Finally, shy people fear that others will evaluate them negatively. They are extremely concerned about the social evaluation of them by others.

Almost every student on campus is a member of one or two clubs. If you are a member of a club, I encourage you to persuade your organization to sponsor a lounge party. If you do not, then you have no reason to complain in future weekends when there is "nothing to do."

"Stun Guns" Increasing on College Campuses

Increasing numbers of women on the Ohio State campus reportly are arming themselves with weapons called "stun guns" to defend themselves.

And despite some uncertainty over the safety of the weapons —which are about the size of calculators and fire electric currents of up to 50,000 volts — women on other campuses also are carrying them.

In fact, college women are expressing an increasing interest in stun guns, reports Greg Pollack, a salesman for Nova Technologies, which manufactures the devices.

Although Nova, based in Austin, Texas, has no specific demographic data about who is buying its guns, the return of warranty slips indicates a trend toward student interest in the devices, which sell for $70 to $90.

Nova has been manfucturing its stun-gun for about three years, and has sold about 175,000, Pollack notes.

To use one, a person presses a button. A test arc of electricity is then visible from the two rods that stick out from the gun.

"The test arc is frequently an adequate deterrent," Pollack maintains, adding "electricity, by its very nature, is ominous."

If the arc does not scare an asssilant, then the user touches the attacker, giving him a two-to-five second zap.

Pollack says that the XR 5000 —Nova's main stun gun model — is safe in that its current will not stun the user.

Furthermore, research at the universities of Wisconsin and Nebraska prove Nova's gun will not permanently hurt the victim, Pollack says.

Although California's state government allows teachers and school staffers to carry stun guns at school, some college officials don't like them.

At Grossmont Community College in El Cajon, Ca., where a student sold about 20 of the weapons about two years ago, students now are banned from toting the weapons.

"We certainly don't recommend students to carry them," says Dan Keller, executive director of Campus Crime Prevention Programs in Louisville, Ky.

If people are not trained to handle weapons, they can get hurt, Keller maintains. "Policing is best left up to law enforcement officials."

Feminists also have varying opinions on whether women should carry stun guns.

"Anything that can make women feel safer, that's okay with me, but it's not our program's first choice," contends Linda Markle of the Women's Services Center at Ohio State. The center provides courses in self defense.

Judicial and Academic Committees in Cloister

by Laura Mumaw

The residents of Cloister Hall have developed two student assistance committees available to all students at Juniata College. The Cloister Judicial Committee and the Cloister Academic Committee were designed to help students through the experience and insight of the upper-classmen within Cloister.

The Cloister Judicial Committee was created to inform students of the procedures and regulations concerning student write-ups. The minimal knowledge given to the students regarding this area consists of a reference to the Pathfinder, and what knowledge the Resident Assistant can offer. The committee hopes that through it, students may receive a better perspective of their rights and alternatives. They have received many inquiries and hope to have more campus inquiries in the future.

The Cloister Academic Committee is still in the process of being organized, but chances for availability in the spring is hopeful. This committee will provide students ith the opportunity to examine old testspand notes offered by the students of Cloister in order to assist them in their studies. Students have also made themselves available to assist other students with the same Program of Emphasis. It is hopeful that this committee will be helpful with questions concerning pre-registration as well as preparing for exams and papers.

References can be made to the following concerning these committees: Laura Mumaw, 204; Lynn Basham, 104; Bill Huston, Cloister Resident Director; Richelle Garver, 201.

Career Alternatives

by Ann Tinsman

Editor's Note: Career Alternatives will be a bi-weekly column focusing on the relationships between academic degrees and occupations.

If you graduate from Juniata with a degree in biology, you may not want to go into the "typical" careers that a degree in biology offers (i.e. going on to a medical school, ecoming a vet, or going into biological reseach.) Biology degrees can lead to other, often unthought of, careers.

One of the job opportunities suggested by William Martin, Director of Career Planning and Placement, is quality control. Companies such as Ralston Purina or Proctor and Gamble need people to make sure that their pet food is nutitionally complete, or their soap is free of harmful chemicals. Other manfacturing companies, such as Coca-Cola, need people to check on the production of beverages and other consumer goods.

A degree in biology can also lead to a job in a pharmaceutical company. A sales agent for this type of company would need a background in biology to understand the medicine or equipment he is selling. One could also be a purchasing agent. The purchasing agent would have to understand the composition of various drugs in order to buy what his company needs.

A health inspector would need a degree in biology. Governments and private agencies hire health inspectors check the sanitary conditions of resturants as well as other public service establishments.

These, as well as other career opportunities in the field of biology may be researched at the Career Planning and Placement Office.

Job prospects Dim for Grads

Spring grads job prospects may not be quite as positive as previous reports predicted, the latest testing of American business hiring plans indicates.

The previous reports, moreover, suggested only slightly better job prospects than students had last year, when the job market was at a nadir.

"I expect it to be flat, maybe plus or minus one percent compared to last year," observes Victor Lindquist, supervisor of Northwestern University's Endicott Report, the most recent of the three major surveys on job prospects for graduating students.

And previously "hot" engineering, computer, and chemistry grads are going to have a much harder time finding jobs than their counterparts of the last few years.

"Students are going to have to commit to a longer job search and be satisfied with fewer choices," Lindquist says.

In late November, the College Placement Council(CPC) projected firms will make two percent more job offers than they did last spring, while in December Michigan State's national survey of business hiring plans predicted a 1.4

Alder Named Juniata Food Service Director

by Mike Barnett

Have you noticed the changes in our food service? If not, you will very shortly. Jim Alder has been transferred by Hallmark Management Service from Wittenberg University to serve as Juniata's new Food Service Director. Changes as trivial as sponges underneath the milk dispenser to catch the drippings, to the complexity of a complete renovation of the Totem Inn menu, are all being undertaken by Alder.

The Totem Inn, as we know it, will soon be a thing of the past. Replacing it will be a "new" Totem Inn that feaures a new menu with selection and prices that can't be beat. The menu will feature sundaes, all fruit juice drinks, herbal teas, frozen yogurt and a wide selection of other desserts, all one-third off list price after 6 p.m. Grilled sandwiches, deli combos and pizza all come in different sizes to suit your appetite. One of the biggest bargains in Tote will be the daily luncheon buffet. For $2.95 the buffet will offer a daily carved item (e.g. Londo broil, prime rib, French dip, ham, turkey.) Also offered will be omelets to order, raw and cooked vegetables, casseroles, cold cuts, soup, salad, desserts and fresh fruit.

Breakfast can be orderd any time during the expanded Tote hours, which have not been determined yet. All menu items will be available for take out or free campus delivery, seven days a week. The "new" Tote will open mid-February, or as soon as equipment modifications are made.

In Baker Refectory, a new ice cream cabinet has been ordered. It will contian at least eight flavors at every meal and will be dipped for the student by a cafeteria worker. Later this term the food service will conduct a survey of the students to find out what meals they like and what they don't like.

Jim is interested in starting a food service committee to find out further student interests, possibly organized through the Residential Life Committee. Also, he encourages students to leave comments on the south line suggestion board. If the question is signed, the student will receive a coupon for an item on the Tote menu.

The Inner Circle will re-open Feb. 14 with a new menu and revised sign-up procedures. For student convenience, reservations will be taken at the number checkers stand and the $3 per person fee will not need to be paid until after the meal. Entrees include prime rib, salmon steak, chicken Kiev, shrimp scampi, and New York strip steak. Diners will also choose from the list of appetizers, potatoes, vegetables, salads, and desserts. Alder feels that, "the dollar value in terms of food is a bargain."

In other food service news, Evelyn "Mom" Weld is no longer taking meal sticker numbers in the south line. She has been promoted to "special events supervisor." She will spend all of her time planning special functions for students and faculty.

If you don't like something about the food service, Alder urges students to come in to talk to him or leave a message on the suggestion board.

Art Gallery Trip

by Helen Bailey

By all accounts the trip to Washington D.C. went well on Thursday. Students from the Decadence to Disaster class visited the National Art Gallery as part of the course.

The class has recently been studying the influence of art as an expression of the changing culture with emphasis on the Impressionist style. The purpose of the trip according to Paul Bernhardt was to see the pictures, and according to one female student, to give meaning to recently studied theory.

The day began at 7:30 when two buses left Juniata arriving in Washington D.C. around 11:30. Paul spent time looking at the Impressionist paintings, by such artists as Monet and Degas. He then went to the different nationality sections, including the Dutch, the British and the American. One group of paintings that were really impressive, he says, were painted by Cole, an American artist who did four paintings as an analogy of human life. The pictures were of childhood, youth, middle age and old age.

Valori Wins In "Blizzard of Bucks"

by Dorene Duncan

S.N.A.P. sponsored the first ever "Blizzard of Bucks" Saturday, January 25 in Oller Hall. About 75 students participated in the event. The set up for the game began with each student placing his name in a drawing to see if he would be told to "come on down."

A total of 12 students were chosen, four students each time a round of games began. From the three rounds, the finalists emerged. Chris Savage, Chris Coover and Jon Valori continued into the finals. These winners had competed in games varying from carrying ping pong balls on spoons to trying to squirt out lit candles with a water pistol.

Jon won a total of $84 amidst the cheers of friends and judges. Second prize was $10 and third prize was $5. The judges for the evening were senior Ginny Krall, Prof. Elizabeth Cherry, and Dr. Jay Buchanon.

Karen D'Angelo gives blood at last week's Bloodmobile, sponsored by the Johnstown Regional Blood Center and the Huntingdon Chapter of the Red Cross.

Bloodmobile cruises across JC campus

by Helen Bailey

Thursday was a day of the triannual Bloodmobil, giving Juniata students their chance to donate blood.

The Johnstown Regional Blood Center supplied five nurses and two other staff members, backed up by 17 representatives from the Huntingdon chapter of the Red Cross. Several Juniata students helped out with the taking of tempatures, the first stage in the process, and also with walking the donors to a seat after they had donated blood.

Robin, the executive director of the Huntingdon chapter, said that the day was very slow in regard to the number of donors. The quota for this immediate area is 100 and it was obvious, for various reasons, that this goal was not reached. Approximately 80 people gave during the six hours. The last time the Bloodmobile was at Juniata, the turnout was much better.

Robin said that blood is always needed and that there has been a shortage of donated blood ever since the AIDS scare. She stressed that it is simply not possible to aquire the disease by giving blood because the needles are sterilized, used once and then thrown away. All entering donors must answer a series of questions before giving blood in order to elimate any chances of passing a disease onto the eventual receiver.

Any normal, healthy person who feels well on the day of the blood drive will have their blood accepted. The only after-affect is possible fatigue which soon disappears.

The next Bloodmobile is scheduled for April 2, 1986.

Intramural Volleyball Action

By Andy Hiscock

The Winter Intramural program is in full swing. The four Intramural Volleyball leagues make up the bulk of the activity this term. There are two CoRecreational leagues (competitive, fun), as well as an all men's and all women's league.

In Co-Rec Volleyball A-League action last Tuesday, 'No Name' defeated 'Fubar' 15-2, 15-4. 'Still No Respect' beat 'The Guppies' in two close games 16-14 and 15-11. 'W-A' also picked up a hard fought victory over 'International Team' in three games 15-11, 4-15, 11-8. Anna Kiraly and Dave Reed were solid for 'W-A.' Also victors in A-League last week were 'Mutual Exclusion,' as they squeezed by 'Thankews II' 16-4, 4-15, 11-8. Sue Gelston set up the front row well for mutual.

In Co-Rec League B action last Saturday, 'The Darrylects' defeated 'South of the Border' 15-6 and 15-13. Karen Morton had a good fensive game for the Darrylects. 'Vegetarian Cows' also picked up a win as they beat 'Mix-n-Match' 15-7, 15-8. Sue Saleski had a solid game for the cows.

One Men's match was scheduled last week when 'Cletivits' defeated 'Nads' 15-1, 15-7. Larry Hillman and Andy Rhinehart displayed some of their volleyball prowess for clets.

Two Women's Volleyball matches were also played last week. 'Bumbling Idiots' defeated 'Special Features' 15-12, 15-0. Lori Evans had a good string of serves and Sue Headley played well at the net for the idiots. 'Whiplash' also came away with a victory over 'Drunken Stupor' 16-14, 15-9.

Junior Polly Oliver (left) leads Juniata men and women in aerobic exercise. The aerobics classes are led by Juniata students, Sunday through Thursday, at 9 p.m.

Men's Volleyball Club Update

by Larry Hillman

The Juniata Men's Volleyball Club has been steadily improving since their formation last year. Last year's premier season consisted of various USVBA (United States Volleyball Association), sanctioned events as well as several intercollegiate scrimmages. Their record in these encounters was less than desirable. This year they hope to make amends when they compete in the newly formed Middle Atlantic Conference Intercollegiate Men's Volleyball league. The league currently consists of Juniata, Elizabethtown, Haverford, Swarthmore, Messiah, and Dickinson. The season will conclude with a league championship tournament at Messiah College on April 11th and 12th. Hopefully this organization will blossom into an Intercollegiate Varsity Sport. Your support would be greatly appreciated.

Lady Indians Basketball 3-0 for Week – 10-2 Indians Ranked 10th In Nation and #1 In Northwest M.A.C.

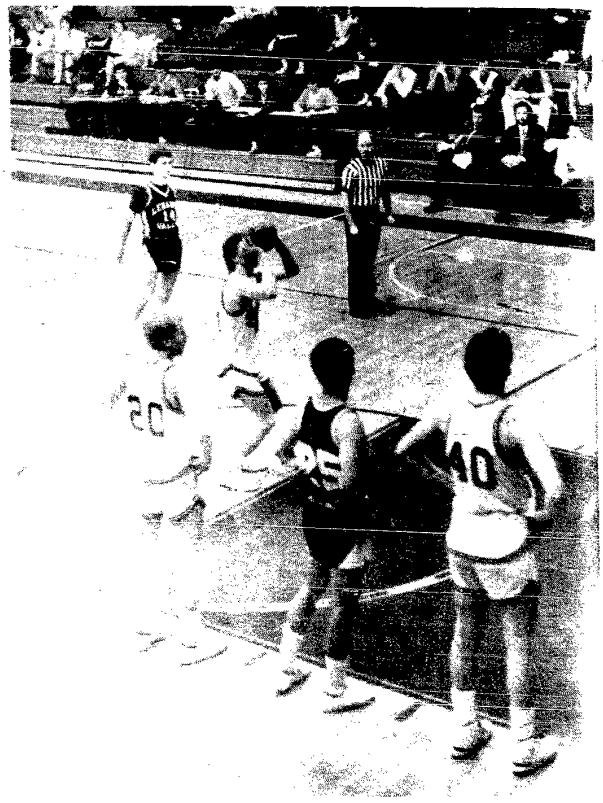
by Tracy DeBlase

The Juniata Women's Basketball team is taking the chill off of the winter months on College Hill. Thw 10-2 Indians, ranked tenth in the nation, are one of the hottest teams in the Middle Atlantic Conference.

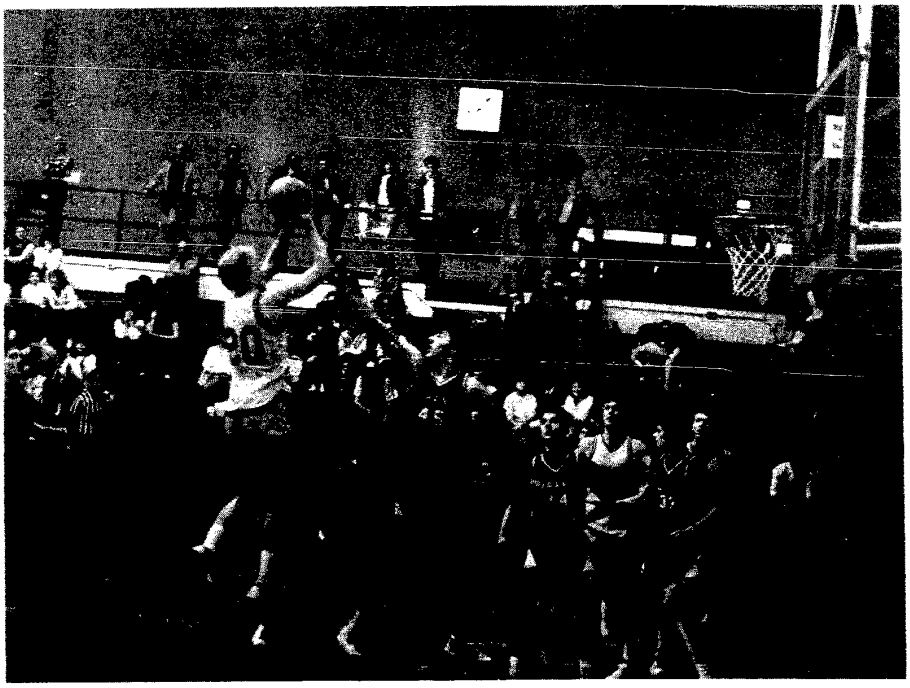
The Indian cagers breezed by Lebanon Valley 60-51, Wilkes 79-50 and Lycoming 65-39 in a three game home stint. "The team is gaining confidence with every game and each win, but they realize that there is still room for improvement. I am pleased with the maturity that this young team is showing. They are handling their success well," said head coach Nancy Latimore.

Janet Robinson, on of the Middle Atlantic Conference leaders in virtually every category collected 18 points in the Lebanon Valley and Lycoming outings and 21 against Wilkes.

Susan Grubb aided the ladies' cause with 12 points in the Lebanon Valley and Lycoming games and 18 in the Wilkes match up. Darella Fortson added 10 points against the Warriors while Karen Ramm went 8 for 8 at the charity stripe and bagged five shots from the floor.



The total team effort that went into the strong victory displayed in this game versus Lebanon Valley faultered last week as the Indians went 1-3. A week ending victory may point to the team's recovery.



Sophomore Wayne Paul 'pops' from the lane vs Lebanon Valley. The Indians crushed Lebanon Valley 100-69 but fell upon hard times this past week as they managed only one win out of three attempts.

Men's Basketball For Week – Look Ahead As Play-off Hopes Dim

Juniata's Men's Basketball road show continued last week and the results weren't as spectacular as the week before. The Indians lost three straight games last week before recovering with a win at Albright, 76-55.

Juniata is now 6-11 overall and 4-8 in the Middle Atlantic Conference. The Indians still have a slim chance at the MAC Northwest playoff berth.

The Tribe opened the week on Monday night at Dickinson, losing 71-67. Juniata led early in the game, but an eight minute dry spell late in the first half allowed the Devils to take command. A solid second half comeback effort fell short. The loss snapped a three-game winning streak for JC.

Wayne Paul had 22 points to lead the Tribe while Les Squair scored 19 and Duane Dise 16. Squair added 11 rebounds.

The week's lone home game was on Wednesday when Lycoming pulled out a 48-44 conference win. Juniata led by as many as five points in the second half but couldn't hold on. Poor shooting and costly turnovers hurt the Tribe in the low scoring affair.

Paul was once again the leading scorer with 16 points. John Hunter had nine rebounds.

"The Dickinson and Lycoming losses were tough to take," said Indian coach Dan Helm. "We played fairly well both games, but had some bad streaks that cost us. On Friday, we played one of our poorer games."

Helm was referring to an 80-61 loss at Drew, the first of another two game weekend road trip. The Tribe was never in the game, shooting just 35 percent while Drew shot over 50 percent. The Rangers led from start to finish.

Paul scored a game-high 24 points while Squair scored 16 points and grabbed 14 boards. Fortunately, the Tribe more than salvaged the week with a 21 point win at Allbright, a team that edged the Indians back in December. Juniata controlled the entire game, and dominated every statistical category. The most telling stats were JC's shooting 54 percent to the Lion's 36, and huge 49-26 advantage on the boards.

Hunter played perhaps the best game of his career, scoring 11 points and grabbing 22 rebounds. Paul had 16 points and Brian Riggleman, off the bench, added 10. Squair once again played a solid game, scoring a game high 19 points to go with nine boards.

"We regained our desire and intensity on Saturday," added Helm. "We had a very balanced team effort and played with confidence."

"I think the team realized that it can finish the year in an exciting way. We have a chance at a .500 record and can spoil playoff hopes for some of our opponents. We have some tough games left, but if we keep playing well we are going to be in them all."

V-Ball Club

The JC Women's Volleyball Club (off season varsity squad) took part in a round robin tournment at Shippensburg this past weekend as part of their USVBA season. Seven team members made the trip and came away with second place finish after they dropped a sudden death tiebreaker for first place. The ladies have no'off-season' as they use these matches to improve their play and stay sharp for next fall.

International Terrorism Presented By Alexander

By Tim Hoch

On Thursday Jan. 30th Yonah Alexander spoke at the Juniata World Affairs Lecture program on the issue of International Terrorism. Director of the Institute for the Study of International Terrorism at the State University of New York, Alexander presented his material in three parts: an overview of the academic work of the Institute, a video presentation of the present situation and its challenges and finally a description of the Nature scope and intensity of the problem, including a recommendation of "Ten Steps" of policy and public awareness priorities.

Alexander outlined four major threats which International Terrorism presents; threats to: individual security (witnessed in the increasing risk associated with international travel), state or government, economic development (i.e. threats to economic security) and the danger to Democratic forms of government. In respect to this last threat, Alexander identified terrorism as extralegal, illegal activity, equating terrorism with totalitarian action. It is in this sense that terrorism poses a special threat to democracy.

"We are only at the very beginning of study," noted Alexander as the structural root causes of terrorism are notoriously difficult to pinpoint. Similar to the methodology of the Peace and Conflict Studies program at Juniata, Alexander's program utilizes an interdisciplinary approach. No single discipline can wholly explain terrorism, as the motivations for such actions can stem from a broad range of knowledge domains including: sociological, psychological, historical, economic, or theological. Contributions must also be considered from the areas of medical preparedness and physics, in particular the applied physics utilized in their application in technological innovation in modern weaponry. This interdisciplinary approach demonstrates a change in attitude towards the study of terrorism, not as 20 years ago, as a criminal activity in isolation, but as a major strategic tool at the disposal of a minority as a means of carrying out a kind of "low-level warfare".

The video compared terrorism to "a virulent global disease" that is reaching epidemic proportions. Data collected by government and non-governmental organizations demonstrate a general increase within the last 12 years in both domestic and international terrorism. This trend in terrorist activities is complied of terrorist groups with divergent aims and ideologies, yet the crucial point for the Institute remains: It simply does not matter for the victim which ideological aim led to the violence, but merely that they have suffered on account of it.

With the increased sophistication of terrorist arms including chemical, biological, and within the advent of a plutonium economy, nuclear arms, Alexander called for an effective compromise between increased state surveilence and curbing CIA activities. How this compromise can be reached is largely up to the public sector.

The bad news can be seen in Alexander's 13 modern trends of terrorism:

1) Democratic societies unable to deal with the psychological impact of terrorism.
2) Emergence of spontaneous terrorism.
3) Emergence of random terrorism (no group claiming responsibility).
4) Rise of single issue party violence (domestic groups eg. animal rights, bombing of abortion clinics).
5) A loss of confidence in government to protect the citizen leading to vigilante groups.
6) Emergence of new terrorism groups (eg. Nordic Front in Netherlands).
7) Ability of terrorist groups to absorb punishment.
8) Increasing expression of religious fundamentalism; "Jihad".
9) Connections between terrorism and illegal activities (eg. narcotics).
10) Expansion of networks of terrorism, international recruitment.
11) Intensification of state-sponsored terrorism
12) Psychological violence i.e. leads to conflict between superpowers.
13) The substitution of short-term benefits for long-term interests, eg. willingness to trade with terrorist groups for national economic gain ("Oil is thicker than blood")

For all this analysis, the root causes of terrorism remain unresolved. An "inherent hostility towards the U.S. will continue", said Alexander as "the U.S. is perceived as the main obstacle to economic redress."

In closing his presentation, Alexander suggested ten steps needed to combat terrorism in the future:

1) Policy of terrorism must attain a high national priority, no longer seen as merely a "nusance".
2) A re-organization of structures for attacking terrorism.
3) Strengthen legal options and capabilities.
4) Upgrade intelligence (FBI and CIA).
5) Upgrade law enforcement.
6) Address political greivances as sources of terrorism.
7) Upgrade diplomacy.
8) Economic sanctions.
9) Covert military options.
10) Use of ideological State Aparatus; i.e. schools, churches, television.

In conclusion, Alexander's presentatation was long on analysis, but short on cohesion. In the "Ten Steps" he suggests it is difficult to see what critereon would be used to mitigate between options. In addition, his operational definition of terrorism allowed him to gloss

Psychiatrist Dr. Fredrick Warose looks on as Juniata freshman Crickett Julius explains her own experience with anorexia. During an "Eating Disorders" lecture last week a large audience heard these two individuals speak in addition to a local dietician. The Student Health Advisory Committee sponsored this program.

Lecture Explains Causes Of "Eating Disorders"

by Helen Bailey

"Eating Disorders" was the subject of last week's lecture presented by psychiatrist Dr. Fredrick Wawrose, Juniata freshman Crickett Julius and dietary director Barbara Harrington.

Dr. Wawrose began the lecture with background statistics on the subject. Eating disorders are becoming very prevelant (whether the problem be anorexia or bulimia), and a large percentage of women (much more so than men) consider themselves overweight. According to Dr. Wawrose, anorexia is characterized by a severe refusal to gain weight, which leads to a drop in body temperature, a slower heart beat and changes in hormonal patterns.

He then described the process people go through in becoming anorexic. Often it takes only a brief remark for a girl to begin dieting. She will resist attempts at help and deny the problem. Usually over half of those with anorexia will eventually recover, although 5-10% go on to die.

Bulimia Nervosa involves tremendous amounts of binging, as much as 10,000-15,000 calories per night. The expelling of food, often by vomiting, results in guilt. The disease is not well understood. However, approximately 80% of pure bulimics are helped by the use of antidepressants.

Freshman Crickett Julius spoke of her own experience with anorexia and how she intended losing only five or ten pounds at the beginning. However, it was on going - her weight dropped to 85 pounds last April. She was persuaded to see her family doctor and then an internist. She also went to a psychologist twice a week, because, as Crickett said the condition is as much an illness in the mind as anything else.

Barbara Harrington spoke only briefly, saying basically that a diet for the patient must be worked out - a diet to which the patient will agree.

In the question and answer session Dr. Wawrose virtually discounted the possibility that social pressures force girls to aspire to be thin. He obviously believes it is an individual thing.

Funding Methods Questioned

Juniata is losing its weekend entertainment. Lounge parties have practically become a thing of the past. Are clubs uncertain of student response to non-alcoholic parties? They can't be afraid of losing money; Center Board guarantees they will at least break even. More and more, it seems that organizations just do not want to put forth the time and effort.

One club on campus obviously thinks it is easier to beg for money than to earn it. Is it easier to confront individuals, asking for a buck or two, than to sponsor a party, sell hoagies, or raise money in some other way? Granted, begging takes less planning and less intellect, but just as much time and leg work.

Considering how badly this campus needs weekend activities, why did the Men's Volleyball Club, so desperately in need from secretaries in Founders and send letters of appeal to staff members and certain students instead of attempting to raise the money themselves? Many people find direct appeals for money offensive and lacking in tact.

In their written appeal the club states "Juniata has a faithful following of volleyball fans," therefore we should support them. Juniata faithfully follows its women's volleyball team; the men's team will have to earn its own name. They could begin by standing on their own feet.

Editor's Note: The following is a guest commentary on the issue of apartheid, as seen by a native South African.

by Llewellyn Xabanisa

In the last five months that I have been here at Juniata College, I have been much impressed by the faculty, the staff, the students, and the Huntingdon community concerning the South African issue. This concern was showed by the questions posed on me and the sympathy the community has with the oppressed people of South Africa.

Of these questions the two basic were: what will be the plight of black South Africans if investments were withdrawn, and could disinvestments bring about a change in South Africa? Today I would like to answer these questions based on the position taken by the black majority people of South Africa.

Three hundred and thirty years have passed since the arrival of the white settle colonialists in our country and in that time they have committed two crimes, (1) the appropriation of our fatherland and (2) the super-exploitation of our material and human resources. It was primarily around these two issues that wars of resistance were fought. Land wars were at the same time labour wars and these issues continue to constitute the pivot around which present struggles are waged.

In racist South Africa the policy and practice of apartheid constitute the ingredient of white domination and exploitation of the black population. There is a common consensus in the world today about much of what apartheid (apart hate, South Africa's policy of segregation) entails and while there is general agreement about apartheid as a threat to world peace and a crime against humanity, there is as yet no consensus as to the best method to be employed to end apartheid.

In so far as the black people of South Africa are concerned apartheid is not merely a set of laws in the South African Statute Book which diseminate on the basis of colour. It is much more than that. It is a policy devised to perpetuate white colonial supremacy and continued dispossession of the Africans. The total and complete elimination of apartheid in all its manifestations cannot be achieved by the mere removal of discriminatory laws from Statute Book because this is not an issue of civil rights but one of national liberation of a people whose Fatherland was forcibly seized by European settlers. Our position is fundamentally that the elimination and liquidation of apartheid must be coupled at every stage with the restoration of the inalienable rights of our people to their land and liberty. If the U.S. wants to build a true and genuine association of Africans and Americans it must do this together with us so that the association is not one in which some are more equal than others, which is the policy racist South Africa wants to perpetuate within and without the country. America must make the new discovery that Africa, according to American standards, has come of age and by this I mean that when Europe discovered the existence of rivers, lakes and waterfalls, that existence was long known to Africa. The U.S. has therefore to fully take into account the kind of association in which Africa wishes to take part.

The U.S. attitude towards racist South Africa is that apartheid may be abominable but it is also profitable. A conservative newspaper published in Washington, D.C. once stated that when Americans think of South Africa, they think of minerals in the bowels of its earth, its strategic position as an oil sealane and only then of apartheid. This grants the oppressed and exploited people of South Africa the right to see only apartheid.

In taking that factor into account we must also recall that U.S. investments in racist South Africa grew, in the past decade, from just under one billion U.S. dollars to 2.63 billion U.S. dollars which amounts to about 20% of all foreign investments in racist South Africa. Recent research studies have indicated that five western industrial powers hold about 80 percent of all foreign investment in South Africa.

These are Great Britain, U.S.A., West Germany, Switzerland and France. According to some research studies, between 1975 and 1981 fourteen new countries have invested capital in South Africa following up the 1976-77 national uprising. In 1981, the year in which the international community declared sanctions against South Africa, there were 3040 transnational corporations investing in South Africa as against 1888 in 1978. As a matter of fact, the corporations are investing in our oppression, exploitation and dispossession. The cheap black labour is used to produce all that wealth.

At the same time, the gigantic profits drawn by the multinational corporations out of South Africa exist because of the slave-low wages, and inhuman conditions black Africans endure in South Africa. We are all witnessing South African economy hard-hit by worker's strikes in big industries demanding wage rise and better working conditions.

This brings us to the question: Who owns South Africa? When former President Woodrow Wilson was asked this in relation to the U.S.A., he answered that the U.S. and its government were owned by the kings of capital, the big bankers, the big manufacturers, the automobile kings, the oil kings, the railroad kings, in short, the big men who had a big stake in the industrial life of the country. Taking the above factors into account it is clear that the kings of capita in the U.S. also own most of racis South Africa today: That is th reason they have placed onl apartheid on the agenda and hav kept out of sight the real chang that must take place in the systen of property ownership in that cou try. They are only shouting at u the slogans of liberty, equality an fraternity, which we were told, a little boys in secondary schol meant that the rich and poor i France had an equal brotherl right to starve along the streets o Paris, and that, if the rich did no exercise that fraternal right, wh blame the situation of the poo upon them?

Our people, as peaceful people have peacefully demonstrate against segregation laws eve since the dispossesion of our lan but these peaceful means hav been heavily met with the brutalit of the State machinery (army an police). I myself, the victim o these means have been exiled fro my country of origin for the pa ten years, for peacefully demon strating against the segregation i education in 1976. The language o our enemy is that they won Sout Africa through the battle field an if we want to regain it, we must d so through the barrel of the gun.

Therefore, our people see fo themselves the role of bringin about real change in the system o property ownership in South Afric in order to make possible the d velopment of some national rela tions, and to that end, our peopl have taken the decision to take u arms to resolve the question. wish to say finally the U.S. polic of constructive engagement is, our view, geared to protect U investment as well as white su premacy in South Africa becaus we are satisfied that the whites o that country want continued pros perity and continued superiorit for which there can be no bette agents than the racists in Sout Africa.

In short, disinvestments can lea to a peaceful transformation power in South Africa if and only that power can be given to th rightfull owners of the land. Agai the step already taken by othe firms to divest and the move show by American workers, teacher students and other sectors of th population is highly appreciated b the people in South African.

Pheasant Speaks To Council On College Name Recognition

By Mary McDougall

"How Juniata promotes name recognition" was the topic discussed at Thursday's Student Government meeting. Dr. Clayton Pheasant, Vice President for College Advancement, and Tracy DeBlase, Assistant Director of Public Relations, spoke to the group on the role of their departments in promotion.

Senators spoke of Juniata's lack of name recognition outside of Pennsylvania as a concern often voiced by students. At the meeting, Pheasant expressed that the administration is also interested in making the name "Juniata College" more familiar outside the immediate area.

The problem, according to Pheasant, is twofold, involving both recruitment of college students and the placement of graduating seniors.

In the area of recruitment, Pheasant noted that the changing market has affected Juniata's admissions practices.

"In the past, Juniata has turned away great numbers of students. But because there are now fewer students to go around, we must actively recruit students to come here," Pheasant said.

On the subject of placement, Pheasant noted that the needs of the students have changed due to a shift in the compostions of the student body. Whereas 10 years ago there were only six to 10 business students at Juniata, business majors now make up approximately 25 percent of the students. Pheasant expressed that, although Juniata's reputation is firmly rooted with graduate schools, it hasn't yet been established in the business world.

"We feel that, as we send more and more students into the business world, Juniata's reputation will grow," said Pheasant. "Also, our expanding internship program should help establish contacts with businesses."

DeBlase informed the senators of tactics used by the Public Relations office to promote the college.

Among these is the extensive use of press releases sent to hometown newspapers on the activities of individual students. News releases are written on such occasions as a student being named to the Dean's List or receiving a scholarship. She also explained how news stories on such topics as Juniata's inclusion in the book "Best Buys in College Education" are sent to a wide range of media including newspapers, radio and television.

Another technique recently adopted by Juniata's admissions office has been video. According to Pheasant, Juniata is in the process of compiling a video library containing film footage of many aspects of college life.

"Hitchhiker's Guide" To Be Presented

"Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy," a science fiction comedy based on the radio series by Douglas Adams, will be presented by Juniata College's A.A.C.T. (All Aspects of College Theater) Thursday, Feb. 13, Friday, Feb. 14 and Saturday, Feb. 15 at 7:30 p.m. in Oller Hall.

Adapted for the stage by Jonathan Petherbridge, "Hitchhiker's Guide" has been a successful series of books, radio and television shows both in England and the United States.

The play is directed by Cheryl Kimbrough who is assisted by Sharon Dotts, Laura Dickinson and Eric Dannaway.

Appearing in the play will be the following Juniata students: Stephen Meyer as Arthur Dent; Tom Kochel as Ford Prefect; Sean Ruth as Zaphod Beeblebrox; Tanya Sandman as Trillian; Jani Lewis as narrator; and Margaret Gonglewski as Marvin.

Also appearing will be Rob Boyer, John Yelenic, Brian Kerr, Sue White, Patricia Stepp, Holly Morrells, Brad Newcomer, Jocelyn Fowler, Carol Carlisle, Jill Crouse, Rush Blady, Majorie Risser, Greg Pike, Tim McCarthy, Julie Williams, Maureen McElliott, Rebecca Abraham, Debbie Briihl, Emilie Ent, Jake Smith, and Beth Lewis.

The public is invited to attend the performance. An admission fee of one dollar will be charged to the general public. Juniata students and staff wil be admitted free of charge.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

A letter recently appeared in The Juniatian concerning the apartheid issue. We also feel that the problem deserves more attention than it has received on the Juniata campus. Apartheid as an official policy has existed for decades, which means that blacks in South Africa have been denied basic human rights in the interim. Most blacks are confined to settlements in which the living conditions are abominable. Working conditions and opportunities for employment are both fairly dismal. Political representation is almost nonexistant, making social change within this system extremely difficult. This is why large numbers of black South Africans have recently resorted to violent means. Their frustration is certainly understandable.

This hopefully concerns all of us, because Juniata has, since the 1979-1980 academic year, ceased to be the center of our Milky Way. We're living in a country that supports what's going on in South Africa, politically (by not doing much about the situation) and economically by making money from an oppressive system). The U.S. supports South Africa, Juniata supports South Africa (we have no evidence to the contrary as of yet—we're waiting) and so we support South Africa. This should bother us.

So what in the hell can we humble Juniata students do? Well, firstly, we can try to be aware of what's going on in South Africa, and the rest of the world, for that matter. Many millions of oppressed people at least deserve our attention. Secondly, it would be good to know what the administration thinks about the situation. A statement, as Tim Hoch suggested, is crucial to our knowing where we stand. The answer may necessitate a call to divest, who knows?? Larger colleges and universities with more at risk have taken that route.

At any rate, we think this is a problem that deserves everyone's attention, including our own. It's up to all of us, as individuals, to decide how we want to respond.

Good luck!

Thanks,
Alayne Unterberger
Jude Vachon

over real questions about structural sources of terrorism as a result of any U.S. foreign policy. He justifies the Reagan Administration's support of the contras (he uses the term 'freedom fighter') while condemning Soviet involvement in Afghanistan. His definition of terrorism, however, semantically permitted all such statements. For Alexander terrorism is an illegal activity breaking international or national law in order to achieve political aims.

What was your reaction to the tragedy of the Space Shuttle Challenger?

Laura Dickinson(sophomore): "I was shocked. You don't think that things like that will happen and it makes you think of the danger the astronauts are going through."

Chris Glover(freshman): "It was a huge tragedy but we have to continue the space shuttle program."

John Petrovic(sophomore): "It is a tragic inicident which has the potential of damaging the space program but I think we have to continue to try to master our progress in space."

Ladies Basketball In Log-Jam

By Joe Scialabba

The Northwest section of the Middle Atlantic Conference is tied-three ways. Juniata's Women's Basketball team fell into the tie after being upset at Elizabethtown on Wednesday, 75-52.

The Indians are joined at the top of the standings by the E-Town Blue Jays and Susquehanna Crusaders. All three teams have split their two games with each other this season.

The tie should remain until after the regular season, unless Wilkes, Lycoming and/or Messiah can pull a major upset over the front-runners.

The eighth-ranked Indians recovered from the MAC loss by clubbing King's 76-53 on Saturday. Janet Robison poured in 28 points. Sophomores Sue Grubb and Karen Ramm added 19 and 11 points, respectively.

The Tribe (11-3) finishes the home schedule next Wednesday, February 12th, hosting Dickinson.

Men's B-Ball

By Joe Scialabba

Juniata's Men's Basketball team met two Middle Atlantic Conference playoff contenders and dry spells in each contest cost the Tribe.

The Indians dropped a 71-61 home decision to Elizabethtown on Wednesday before losing at King's, 77-65.

E-Town took advantage of JC's cold shooting in the second half to pull away from a 33-28 halftime lead. Freshman Les Squair once again led the Tribe effort with 23 points and 10 rebounds. Wayne Paul added ten points.

At Wilkes-Barre, King's broke open a 26-25 game with 12 unanswered points in a four minute period around halftime. Squair and Paul each scored 14 points, while Duane Dise added 13 for the Indians. Brian Riggleman had seven rebounds.

Solid Showing For Ski Team's

The Men's and Women's Ski Teams left Juniata last Friday for their first race week-end of the 1986 season. Sharing home team duties at Blue Knob was the UPJ ski team. Visiting competitors included Penn State, Penn, Bucknell, West Virginia, IUP, Dickinson, Bloomsburg, Frostburg, Westchester, and Georgetown.

Saturday was the Giant Slalom. First place for both men and women went to Penn State. The men's best time was 88.33 seconds. The JC men put up a number of good runs. Tim Parnell placed 9th in a field of 55 with a time of 92.44; following Tim was Chris Kohout, 11th with a time of 94.88, Kurt Drumheller -14th with 97.41, Mark Kearn's -22nd with 102.91 and Jamie Van Buren -31st with 105.93. The JC men's team placed 3rd behind WVU. The best women's time posted was 96.65. Top finisher for Juniata was Cherie Byars, 18th in a field of 41. Beatrice Fondeur placed 32nd, followed by Jen Egger, 34th, and Kim Detwiler, 38th.

Sunday's race was the slalom. Men's first place overall went to Bucknell. Juniata's top finishers were Mark Kearns, 19th with 99.70, and Chris Kohout, 21st with 100.67. In the Women's Slalom, first place again went to Penn State. The top three Juniata finishers were Kim Detwiler, 7th with 110.27; Cherie Byars, 22nd with 133.25; and Laura Mann, 25th with 134.94.

J.C. ski team's next race weekend is February 1st and 2nd at Elk Mountain.

Grapplers 2-2 For Week

The Juniata wrestling team was busy last week, facing four opponents in six days. The Indians emerged from their action with a split, winning two and losing two.

On Monday evening Juniata hosted Washington and Jefferson. In a match closer than the final score indicated, the Presidents downed Juniata 33-11. Freshman John Swanson at 142 and Junior Dave Bates at 177 recorded major decisions and Freshman heavyweight Russ Tschopp won by a decision to account for the Indians' scoring. Also, Freshman Ed Hoffman (134), Tom Marte (158), and Larry Krizner (190) lost narrow decisions.

On Thursday, Juniata travelled south to tangle with Gettysburg; the Bullets prevailed over the Indians 38-12. Junior Paul Bernhardt (126) won by forfeit and Hoffman recorded a fall at 134. Freshman Rich Hoag (118), Junior Dave Cooper (150), and Bates (177) were all defeated in close bouts.

The Tribe's fortunes changed Saturday, as Juniata won both ends of a triangular meet with Messiah and Baptist Bible College. In the Messiah match, which Juniata won 39-15, the Indians won 2 bouts by fall and 4 by forfeit. Hoag, Swanson, Krizner, and Freshman Tim Crowley (167) received forfeits while Marte and Cooper decked their opponents. Bates won on a decision. In defeating Baptist Bible 43-9, Juniata received falls from Hoag, Hoffman, and Freshman Vance Varner (167). Cooper, Tschopp, and Crowley (177) received forfeits while Swanson won by major decision. Junior Erik Olson (158) also looked impressive, decisioning his adversary 8-1.

"Up With People" Visits Huntingdon

by Lisa Clapper

The 115 member cast of "Up With People" will present their two hour musical production at the Huntingdon Area High School tonight.

What is "Up With People"? It is an independent, non-profit, educational organization that was incorporated in 1968 to provide a positive channel for the idealism and energy seen in the student movement around the world.

The aim of the group is ". . . to help young people gain a new understanding of the world and begin to discover their own potential." The mission statement of the group is "to encourage understanding among people of all nations through an international educational program involving young men and women from many countries who travel for a year and learn from the people and places they visit while staging a musical show."

This goal is met during every performance, because the cast does everything involved with the production. They work on the stage with props and lighting, as well as the actual performing of music and dancing. Not only do these student performers learn from the production, but also from traveling all over the world.

Over the years, "Up with People" has seen over 6,500 cities in 48 countries by an estimated 14 million people.

Each year 10,000 college-age students apply to this organization, but only 675 are accepted. While there are no special talents needed to apply, there are several attributes that the group looks for when actually selecting members. They must be mature, motivated, interested in the world around them, able to communicate, willing to serve others, and have a good personality. A personal interview is the basis of the selection rather than a display of talent.

The students pay a program fee of $6,300 for their one year commitment, but there are some scholarships, fund raisers or endowment funds that help with this fee. The fee pays for the travel expenses for the 32,000 mile tour. This fee is kept low through donations by host families which provide lodging and foods.

Over the years, "Up With People" has performed at Radio City Music Hall (New York), Tivoli Gardens (Copenhagen), Royal Albert Hall (London), Olympic Games (Munich) and more recently at Super Bowl XX. Now, the Huntingdon Parent-Teacher Coordinating Council is bringing them to our community, with the help of Cultural Chairperson, Susan Parr, the Language Lab. Supervisor at Juniata College.

Tickets to the performance are available at the Ellis Hall Information Desk for $4.

Actress Beverly Garland, co-star of the hit CBS television series "Scarecrow and Mrs. King", recently visited Juniata's campus. Ms. Garland is a close friend of Nancy Kulp, former co-star of "The Beverly Hillbillies" and currently Juniata's Artist-in-Residence. For more on the story please turn to page 6.

World News Update

By Mary McDougall

MANILA, PHILIPPINES - Corazon A. Aquino demanded Sunday that President Ferdinand G. Marcos concede defeat in Friday's elections in the Philippines. Mr. Marcos said he had been considering the possibility of simply declaring the vote invalid. Mrs. Aquino was holding a slight early lead, according to sketchy returns published by the official commission on elections. During the election and the vote tabulation afterwards, election monitors were shot at, beaten, intimidated and derided, according to reports from observer teams. But Mr. Marcos said members of the election monitoring team were responsible for abuses at poling places.

PORT-AU-PRINCE, HAITI - Mobs clamored in Haiti's capitol after the fall of the Duvalier Government, and occasional violence was accompanied by many acts of vengeance. A special target were the Tontons Macoute, the secret police force of former President Jean-Claude Duvalier.

WASHINGTON, D.C. - A warning about shuttle flight safety was received by the space agency last year, according to documents from the agency's files. NASA engineers warned that seals on the shuttle's solid fuel booster rockets might break and cause a catastrophic accident. A NASA analyst warned in a memorandum last July that safety was "being compromised by potential failure of the seals."

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The minority teaching force is dwindling at a time when the percentage of black and Hispanic students in public schools is growing, according to estimates by education analysts. Education leaders fear that if the percentage of black and Hispanic teachers drops by half by the year 2000, poor and minority students will be deprived of important role models.

TRIVANDRUM, INDIA -Pope John Paul II, winding up his tour of India's Roman Catholic heartland, delivered a seaside sermon Sunday at a sacred Hindu beach and urged the church to fight for social justice.

Apartheid Petition Circulating Campus

by Mary McDougall

The issue of South African Apartheid is receiving increasing attention on the Juniata campus. A student petition is currently being circulated regarding the possible existence of college financial investments in South Africa.

The petition, circulated by an informal group of concerned students led by senior Tim Hoch, requests a formal statement by the administration either confirming or denying the existence of such investments.

The petition reads: "In November, 1985 a request was made by two Juniata students that the Juniata investment porfolio be reviewed in order to discern Juniata College's investment interests in relation to South Africa. As of yet, the administration has not made public its position with regarrd to investments in South Africa. We feel that the college should clearly state its policy and procedures regarding divestment."

Hoch reported that the completed petitions will be presented to the Student Government representative to the investment committee as a statement of student concerns. The Student Government representative will then report to the Board of Trustees.

The petition, currently circulating, is a revised version of an earlier petition according to Hoch.

"The way the first petition read implied that we wanted access to the investment portfolio," said Hoch. "This was a misunderstanding. We understand the college policy on this and why the portfolio

Volleyball Funding Follow-up

Last week's editorial was written in the wrong way - fault of the editor and not The Juniatian. In the face of a deadline and other pressures, I forgot to look at both sides, ignoring the other point of view. The situation could have been investigated more closely.

Hindsight is a wonderful thing; so if second chances are a part of this game, I will take mine now.

To present some facts that were ashamedly omitted, the Men's Volleyball Club did sponsor two raffles last fall in an attempt to raise money. According to a club member, the team has not sponsored a lounge party this term because a party would interfere with practices and scrimmages. Also, financial supporters receive credit on the club's program.

Since The Juniatian failed to get the facts last week, we have laid them out this week. Still, The Juniatian does not condone asking for financial patronage desk-to-desk in Founders Hall. If one group can do it, every other organization should have the same right. Solicitors for any cause do not belong in public buildings — especially during business hours.

Secondly, if lounge parties are not possible, there are still other ways to raise money. There must be some activity that won't cut into practice and game times.

Finally, The Juniatian admits to wrongful methods, but stands by its first basic conclusion.

"After the Snow" by Modern English is a collection of subdued ballads which calm the student after an impossible day. "After the Snow" was produced by Hugh Jones in association with Modern English for Sire Records Company - Warner Brothers Record Inc. in 1983. The group Modern English is composed of Robbie Grey on vocals, Gary McDowell on guitar, Michael Conroy on bass and violin, Richard Brown on drums and percussion, and Stephen Walker on keyboards.

Side one starts out with "Someone's calling" which is about a guy who must confront the fact that his girlfriend is still getting over a breakup with her old boyfriend, "I sense your breakup like a knife. . .tension mounting someone's calling in the night" and that her ex is still on her mind. "Life in the Gladhouse" is a great song with a fantastic drum solo in the beginning and great sound effects all through the song. The song is about how life is always exciting and challenging. "Life in the Gladhouse is never dull." "Fare of Wood" is a fantastic song which really moves the listener - another song with great sound effects. This song is about remembering the good times in one's life, "reaching out with tenderness" because the road ahead has "darkened shadows" and the future holds many mysteries some of which may be dangerous. "Dawn Chorus" has a beautiful keyboard and percussion accompaniement. This song is about dawn bringing in a new day, a new life. "When summer returns to these . . . green fields . . . the sun fading hostile in the breeze." Dawn, the start of a new day, is an "opening of windows" of one's life. When dawn comes the world starts breathing and living again.

Side 2 starts out with the incredible song "I Melt With You." This song is about a guy who will do anything for his girl. He tells her "I'll stop the world and melt with you" because he really loves her. He wants to melt their two lives into one life. "There's nothing you and I cannot do," so even stopping the world is possible. In my opinion "I Melt with You" is the best song on the album. "After the Snow", the title cut from the album is about how beautiful the world is when all the dirt and grim is covered with clean, white snow - "after the snow there's something more." "I can see its beauty after the snow." "Carry me down" is about the fear of silence and hating having to wait "on the ledge of time" for something to happen because "there's something in the air" which tells that "the coming scene holds mysteries," and the future holds the unknown. "Tables Turning" is about how the world is constantly changing. The guy in the song is having problems with his girlfriend. "The walls are falling for me and my love . . . the walls are falling around my ears." The guy is asking for help. "Cannot you tell me what to do" to get her back, "I always put my trust in you."

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

Recently The Juniatian published an editorial criticizing the Men's Volleyball Club for asking members of the college community for support. The Juniatian deems this practice "begging" and chastises the Club for not resorting to other means (i.e. hoagie sales, parties, etc.) to raise funds. As members of the club we feel that we must respond to the accusations contained within the February 6 issue of The Juniatian.

First, our charter cites as purpose, "to foster volleyball in the college community." No where does it say that we are to provide weekend entertainment for the college community as a whole. It was our understanding that this was the purpose of Center Board. If The Juniatian, in at adamant search for the truth would have done more research, they would have discovered some very interesting facts: a)Fall term was completely booked with Lounge Parties, so, even though we wanted to stage one we could not for lack of space. Instead we held a raffle at two women's tournaments during their season. b)This term we are in the midst of our first season in the newly formed MAC mens' league. With two games a week and practice, not to mention classes, we have almost no time to do anything, much less plan a party. c)After our season is over in April, we have every intention of having a party. In fact, a Spring term party is already in the planning stages.

Second, if The Juniatian would have continued to analyze our written appeal, they would have noticed that it was not an appeal for outright charity. Our purpose was to compile a list of patrons to be published in our home programs. This practice is employed by countless organizations in high schools and colleges. The money raised would be used to defray the immediate costs of travel and game expenses as well as publishing the program. In the past other organizations on campus have used similar means to raise funds (the Alfarata, Artist Series, and The Juniatian all run patron lists or ads of some sort) and they were never criticized for it. Although our listing does not have the circulation of the others, it actually does carry ads for businesses along side of the patrons.

Finally one must examine our prime source of funds. As stated in our appeal, we are just a club sport; thi means that we receive no funding at all from the athletic department. Student Government has allocated $200 to our organization and, while this helps, it covers just a fraction of our total expenses. The general concensus of the club was that the best way to accomplish this end was through the direct patron appeal. We sincerely apologize to all those who we may have offended in any way with our appeal, however it must be noted that the vast majority of our patrons, both on campus and off, have direct connections with the Men's Club or the sport of volleyball itself.

The final paragraph mentioned words to the effect that we were attempting to ride the coattails of the ultra-successful Women's program. The only connection we have with the Women's team, besides friendship and love of a common sport, is "Juniata" in our title. In all our publications and on all our uniforms we are the Juniata Men's Volleyball Club. This is a deliberate distinction for the purpose of establishing our own name. We do not demand anybody's respect or support; we simply want the chance to earn it, not by pirating the Women's reputation, but by our own hard work, practice and performance.

(P.S. In our first match this past weekend, the Juniata Men's Volleyball Club defeated Swarthmore College 3-0. We feel that this is only the first step in building a reputation and a very successful attempt at standing on our own feet.)

Looking for fun at Hoo-Ne-Ta State (a psuedonym).

It was a tough assignment, but we were determined to have fun this weekend without consuming mind-altering beverages. For it seems that almost every weekend of our short but glamorous college career in central Pa. has been spent under the foggy cloud of distilled refreshment. The time had come to see how the other half lives.

Friday, after class, the time was ripe to begin our experiment. We knew that we had to escape from the corrupting influences of college dorm life. Seeking to achieve a harmonious and healthy karma, we struck out into the rural Pennsylvania countryside to commune with nature. After a long and perilous journey past miles of cows, rusting farm equipment and rotting corn, adventure came in the form of an abandoned sand quarry. Its ominous palisades made Huntingdon's cliffs look like cracks in the sidewalk. In our avid quest for enlightenment, one of us slid 150 feet down a near vertical mudslide. Interesting, but not quite matching our definition of fun.

That evening was spent in a stimulating contest of Trivial Pursuit, followed by a lengthy debate over the merits of the metric system. Sleep was a welcome friend at 11 p.m.

Saturday morning brought with it a new hope, perhaps this would be the day we had fun. After another lunch of standard quality at the Baker Trough, we trudged mile after mile through the tundra to Tussey, only to find that our friends had gone home for the weekend. Undaunted, you fearless reporters passed the afternoon reading aloud from the Norton Reader and reflecting upon the nature of slush.

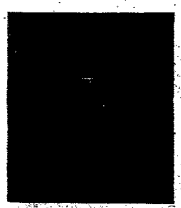
Night was soon upon us bringing with it promise for action and adventure. One of us had to work, though, and received an interesting education in the quirks of shuttle van handling on ice covered roads. Back at the ranch, his partner pondered important world issues, like why he never gets mail and how come his dorm-mates are annoyed at his playing his rediddion of the Star Spangled Banner ala-Jimi Hendrex. We later regrouped, and consoled ourselves with hot chocolate and old car magazines. About that time a strange din made itself apparent down the hall. Frolicking students, dressed in togas passed by the open door. It begged for further investigation, but our experiment was more important than any frivolty.

So here we sit, Sunday afternoon, pausing to look back at this weekend's events. We're only hours away from achieving our virtue. What's that? Can it be done? Of course. By the way, pass me a cold one, willya?

Student Speak

Question: What did you think of Jello wrestling and would you like to see it held annually?

Jack Giblin (Senior): I thought it was a lot of fun and it was good to see the whole campus turn out and it should be held annually.



Mark Heinly (Sophomore): It was a lot of fun and it's an excellent way to raise a lot of money for a good cause. Certainly everyone involved had a great time.

Sue Gulla (Sophomore): I loved it. It was great and it should be held annually.

Mary Lou Miller and Amy Smith (Sophomores): Jello wrestling was an excellent time. It provided a lot of cohesion in the Huntingdon Community.

Counselor's Corner

Dr. Jay Buchanan

by Jay Buchanon

As you read this, the ninth week of the term will be coming to an end. With the usual end-of-term work piling up and thoughts of final exams on the minds of most students, it becomes important to sit down and assess how one plans to accomplish all that needs to be done over the next two week period.

It would appear, then, that a critical task facing many students is how to best use the time available between now and the end of the final exam period. Anxiety and feelings of being overwhelmed come about as a result of thinking that we have too much to do and too little time in which to do it.

Time management is one of the most valuable tools in the reduction and control of stress. Proper use of time can go a long way in reducing stress, the anxiety, and the sense of being overwhelmed so much associated with preparing for and taking final exams.

A key to proper time management has to do with differenciating between quantity and quality. Putting in time (quantity) does not always equate to productivity (quality).

One way to insure that we realize quality study time is to control the study environment. Remembering that behaviors occur in the presence of certain stimuli, we want to insure that the place where we choose to study is conducive to that behavior. Controlling the distractions, the noise and other disruptions help to achieve quality study time.

Parkinson's Law states that work expands to fill the time available for it. In other words, if we have two hours to complete a project, in most cases it will take us two hours. If we have all afternoon, in all probability it will take us that long. Set time limits as to when you want to have something accomplished or completed.

Most students are going to experience some form of anxiety and some degree of tension leading up to and during finals. It is helpful, therefore, to keep things in perspective. In nearly 80% of all situations the stress we experience is self-induced, that is, we bring it on ourselves.

Finally, to keep things in perspective, work on maintaining some semblance of normality within your lifespace. Proper rest, attention to aspects of the Wellness Triad (Relaxation, Exercise and Diet), and socializing with friends when appropriate, will help to get you through final exams.

New Staff Chosen

The Juniatian is proud to announce the selection of the 1986-87 editorial staff. JIF Sponsors Suicide Lecture

By Cinny Cooper

Psychiatrist Dr. Frederick E. Wawrose spoke on suicide and adolescence last week in Lesher's carpeted lounge. The talk was sponsored by JIF, Juniata Instructors of the Future.

Depression is the main cause of suicide, he said. Symptoms of depressed behavior include loss of appetite and weight, erratic crying spells, sleep disturbances (falling asleep easily, waking up, trouble falling asleep again; dreaming early in the evening instead of the normal time, 60-90 minutes after falling asleep) and inability to study.

Depression, Dr. Wawrose pointed out, is a biochemical condition that can be "easily and effectively treated" with medicine and cognitive therapy. Anti-depressant drugs are one form of treatment.

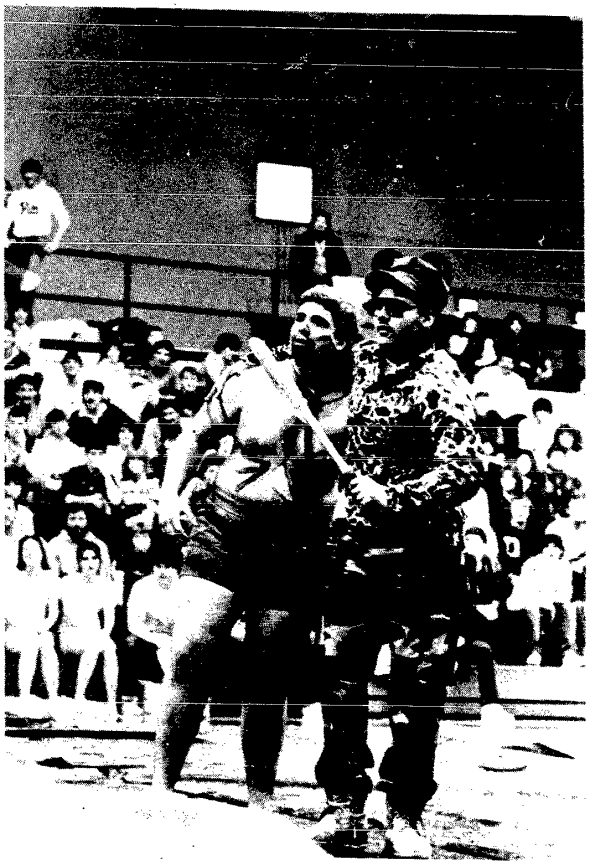
Dr. Wawrose outlined how to detect potential suicides. An expressed desire to end one's life is a major sign and should not be ignored or held in confidence, Dr. Wawrose emphasized. A usually neat person may dress more sloppily, no longer caring about his appearance. The outgoing person may turn shy. People contemplating suicide my give away their prized possessions, and those who have made a definite decision to take their life will exhibit an upswing in attitude, stemming from their relief from indecision.

Dr. Wawrose offered some statistics on suicide: Women attempt suicide more often than men. Men are more successful at suicide than women. Suicide is the third most common cause of death in young adults between the ages of 15 and 24.

A suicide prevention service wouldn't work in Huntingdon County, Dr. Wawrose said. A hotline service may reduce the number of attempts, but does not reduce the number of successful suicides.

Dr. Wawrose works in Huntingdon and recently gave a lecture on eating disorders for Juniata's Student Health Advisory Committee.

Cubbo the Dragon Steamboat (Cubby Davis) delivers a flying double clotheline to his opponents. Their falls are broken by the mat under the Jello in the ring designed by the MDA.



Rondo the Animal Steel (Ron Hersh) receives last minute instructions from the Mouth of the South Ronny Hart (Ron Pergolini). The Animal and Team (Beverly Johnson, Lisa Clapper) won best over all and received trophies.

Nature Boy Andy Flair (Andy Rhinehart) prepares a vicious reverse suplex on his opponent as he fights off his second adversary. All matches were handicapped 2 girls versu 1 guy.

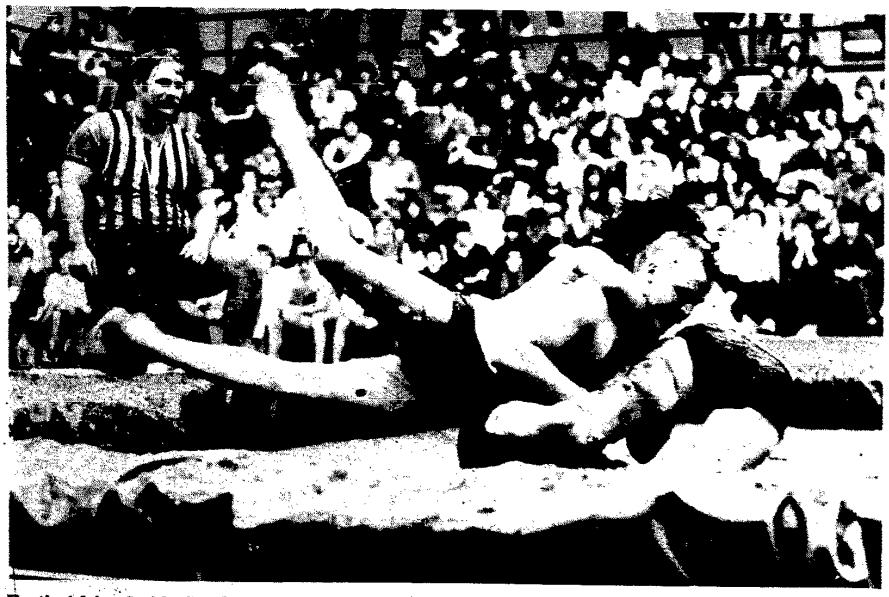
MDA representative and special ring announcer Richard Merrick greets the audience, as emcee Vinnie McHuston (RD Bill Huston) and special commentator Julie the Body Ventura (RD Julie Keehner) look on. Over $1800 was raised for the Muscular Dystrophy Association.



Exotic Adrian Smith (Randy Smith) is caught from behind off the top rope. Smith pledged his match to Julie Keehner.

Actress Garland Speaks On Career

by Cinny Cooper

Actress Beverly Garland, co-star of the hit CBS television series "Scarecrow and Mrs. King," related tales of her career in movies and television during a two day visit to Juniata College, Feb. 2 and 3.

Ms. Garland visited the college upon the invitation of her close friend, Nancy Kulp, former co-star of "The Beverly Hillbillies" and currently Juniata's Artist in Residence.

At a public lecture Sunday evening, Ms. Garland pointed out why she was not a professor like her friend, Ms. Kulp. She came to this conclusion after trying to explain to her 8 year old daughter why brides wear white. Following the facts of life discussion, her daughter replied, "Mommy, I'm not a virgin. I'm an Aquarius."

The audience of approximately 50 faculty, staff and area residents was entertained by such stories throughout the evening, effectively told with Ms. Garland's charm and humor.

Many of her anecdotes showed the funny and sometimes trying times of show biz: breaking her nose while attempting to ride a horse (she lost the part because of the injury); shouldering a giant boa constrictor, unaware of its lethal characteristics.

Ms. Garland spoke of her role as Fred MacMurray's wife on the long-running series "My Three Sons." Unlike most television shows, scenes from "My Three Sons" were shot erratically. Scene one from the third episode of the season might be shot the same day as scene three from the 21st episode. Consequentially, Ms. Garland explained, her character said "Yes" to Fred MacMurray's marriage proposal two months after the marriage proposal scene was shot.

At a short presentation to Ms. Kulp's History of Television class, Ms. Garland described a typical day on the set of "Scarecrow and Mrs. King," where she plays Amanda King's mother.

Semester Status

by Cinny Cooper and Danielle Rupp

The Business Department will see only one major change under the semester system.

Principles of Accounting will be taught over two semesters instead of one term. According to Prof. James Lakso, chairperson of the Economics and Business Administration Department, this change would have occured regardless of the conversion to semesters.

The Business Department will redo its curriculum in '87-'88 when the college is set to renovate its overall curriculum requirements.

Business classes next year will be evenly split between three and four credit courses.

"This department was not originally in favor of the semester conversion because we have worked so hard to adapt our curriculum to a three term system," said Lakso. "However, the department will make the transition to semesters rather smoothly. It is working out much better than we originally anticipated."

Education Department

The Education Department will juggle a few courses under the semester system, but in the end a few topics will be added and none will be eliminated.

Issues and Studies,currently required of Elementary and Early Childhood Education majors, will become a series of one credit courses. The Education major will have to take three credits worth of the course, choosing from five to six topics announced about one year ahead of time. Two classes will be offered every fall and one in the spring.

Language Arts and Children's Literature, now two separate classes, will be one, five semester hour class next year.

The Human Development series, previously taught in three level (prenatal to 5 years; 6 to 12 years; and 13 to 20 years), will become two classes and change its name. Human Development II (HD II) will be integrated into HD I and HD III. HD I will teach birth until age 9, and change its name to Child Development. HD III will teach age 10 through 20, and become Adolescent Development. Both new courses will be required of secondary education majors.

Dr. Brad Small will be teaching a new course, Health Awareness, through the Education Department this spring and next year.

Student teaching will become known as the Professional Semester, combining student teaching and a methods course. Elementary and Early Childhood majors will take Curriculum and Methods in the spring. Secondary Education majors will take Theories and Methods in the fall. Students will teach for 12 of the 15 weeks during the semester.

Each education course will be offered every year, except Humanistic Psychology which will be taught alternate years.

Basic Foundations of Education and Child Development will be offered every term; if necessary, two sections of Child Development will be offered.

"The Education Department must continue with its past curriculum because state standards must be met", said Dr. Howard H. Crouch, chairperson of the Education Department. "There could be a few changes coming in the near future because the state has set forth a new set of standards that will soon take effect."

must remain confidential. All we are asking for is a general statement regarding investments in South Africa."

The issue was raised at last Tuesday's Student Government meeting. Lynn Basham and Mike Wojcik have been designated to prepare a letter to the Board of Trustees outlining Student Government's official position on the subject of divestment in South Africa. The entire senate will vote on the letter before it is sent to the Board.

"We've only just begun looking into the subject. It is an issue that Student Government should be involved in, but we have not made any decisions as to what kind of stance we will take in the letter," said Wojcik.

La Tuna Celebrates Spanish Tradition

"La Tuna," a group of student musicians from the University of Cadiz in Spain, will perform a variety of Spanish traditional and folk songs when they appear in concert Monday, Feb. 17 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium.

The group's heritage dates back to 16th century Spain, when groups of love-sick university students would gather to serenade young ladies. The costumes worn by the troupe reflect the original outfits of black velvet doublets, short, puffed breeches, black hose and buckled shoes. A black cape completes the outfit, with ribbons from female admirers attached, and a sash denoting the academic major of the students.

The origin of the word "Tuna" is unclear, but may come from the Latin word "tonus" meaning tune. Members of the "Tuna" are called "tunos," which in common Spanish means someone always ready for pranks or laughter. A complete "Tuna" usually consists of 20-25 young men, but when touring, the group size is reduced to six or seven.

A variety of string instruments are used to accompany the singers. The ensemble includes a lute, mandolin, guitars and tambourines. The music will include century old serenades, comical love ballads and popular Spanish songs.

The Feb. 17 concert is being sponsored by the Juniata foreign language department and the Ellis College Center Board. Admission is free of charge.

Have The "Time Of Your Life"

Open auditions will be held Monday and Tuesday, Feb. 17 and 18, for the spring play, "The Time of Your Life" by William Saroyan.

The production is being directed by actress Nancy Kulp, artist-in-residence at Juniata for the winter and spring terms. According to Ms. Kulp, the auditions are open to all interested Juniata students and staff, and will be conducted from 3 to 5 p.m. in Alumni Hall. Callbacks will be scheduled for Wednesday, Feb. 19 and the cast will be posted on Thursday, Feb. 20. There are approximately 25 parts that need to be cast for the play.

"The Time of Your Life," a comedy which won the Pulitzer Prize in 1940, takes place in a tavern and deals with the interaction betwen the various people who patronize the establishment.

Ms. Kulp stated that no prior acting experience is necessary to audition for a role in the play. The production will be staged in Oller Hall on April 17, 18, and 19.

Swigart To Be Enlarged

By Mike Barnett

President Frederick M. Binder recently approved a $400,000 budget for a 1500 square foot addition to the back of the music building, Swigart Hall.

Although it is still in the planning stages, physical plant director Jack Linetty said, "The proposed changes are to provide the Juniata music department with a rehearsal area, instrument storage and updated music library."

An architect has been hired but a date has not been set for groundbreaking or completion. When the renovations are completed, Swigart Hall will meet labor and industry standards. The construction is being paid for in part by a grant from the Swigart Foundation.

Alard Quartet Featured In Artists Series

By Carol M. Connell

Oller Hall was the setting of seasoned virtuosity and artful musicianship on Monday, February 3, with the presentation of the Alard Quartet. Sponsored by the Center Board Fine Arts Committee, this string ensemble was the third program of the 1985-86 Artist Series.

The Alard Quartet is composed of Joanne Zagst, violin; Donald Hopkins, violin; Raymond Page, viola; and Leonard Feldman, cello. The evening opened with Haydn's Quartet in E-flat Major, o.p. 33 no. 2. This light-hearted work, nicknamed "The Joke," featured a lyrical first violin in the first movement and humorous scale-like passages in the second movement. A rising trill line in the cello marked the slower third movement, displaying the Quartet's ability to phrase accurately, as if breathing together. A lively folk-like theme in diminution and augmentation rounded out the work in the fourth movement.

Flutist Diane Gold, a member of the Juniata faculty for eleven years, joined the first violin, viola and cello for Divertimento for Flute and Strings by Katherine Hoover. An American contemporary composition in two movements, it began with themes traveling to and from the four parts in syncopated rhythms. Employing modern harmonies, an impressive glissando passage for flute and a percussive section where the back of the viola was struck by hand, this piece closed the first half of the concert.

After a brief intermission, the entire Quartet regrouped, once again joined by Diane Gold, to present another American work, A Night Piece by Arthur Foote.

Cellist Leonard Feldman prefaced the ensemble's final work, Tchaikovsky's Quartet in D major, op. 11 with a brief explanation of its history. Comparing its purpose with the modern day Live Aid concert, this piece was commissioned for a benefit concert to save the near bankrupt Moscow Conservatory. Beginning with a lyrical theme, contrasted by a more rythmic theme in the first movement. A Russian theme characterized by a dotted rhythm marked the third movement and the final movement featured a theme which was tossed from instrument to instrument in a circular progression. When Tchaikovsky first premiered this Quartet, it was successful in saving the Conservatory; when performed last week, it was successful once more. It was a closing to an enjoyable evening of music for strings and flute by the Alard Quartet.

Lady Indians Basketball Rolls On – 2-0 For Week 1

Look Torward Northwest MAC Title

By Joe Scialabba

Juniata's Women's Basketball team should be playing for the Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest Section championship on Sunday when they meet Elizabethtown in a special playoff at Dickinson College in Carlisle.

The only way the Tribe will not square off against the Blue Jays is if Juniata loses to Wilkes on Saturday night. Juniata handled the Colonels easily earlier this season.

Coach Nancy Latimore's Indians won two more games last week to climb to 13-3 and remain ranked at least #11 in the NCAA Division III national poll.

Juniata pounded York in a non-conference game on Wednesday, 82-43, before beating MAC opponent Messiah 74-55 on Saturday.

Juniata continues to get fine performances up and down the bench.

Leading scorer Janet Robison continues on an All-American pace with help from backcourt mates Karen Fonner and Paula Hillegass.

Sue Grubb, Karen Ramm and Darella Fortson have been the power behind the inside game, with reserve help from Sue Lockawich, Becky Hostetter, Andrea Zavod, and Lisa Gray.

The Indians find themselves in the playoff position thanks to a three-way tie atop the section standings. Susquehanna, the third teamm in the log jam, has officially finished second.

The winner of Sunday's special playoff will win the section title and move to the intersectional MAC playoffs starting on Tuesday. The loser will miss the MAC playoffs, but most likely receive an NCAA Division III playoff at-large berth.

Men's Basketball Squad Defeats York 88-79

By Joe Scialabba

Juniata Men's Basketball team went 2-1 last week with a victory over York at home on Wednesday before a dissapointing loss at Messiah on Saturday night. The Indians added a forfeit victory over PSU-Capitol earlier in the week.

After last week, the Indians were 8-14 overall and 4-11 in the Middle Atlantic Conference. Tuesday's home finale with Western Maryland and Saturday night's trip to Wilkes will end the season for the Tribe.

Three Juniata players hit double figures in the 71-63 win over visiting York. Wayne paul, Dick Moses and Les Squair scored 14,13 and 12 points respectively.

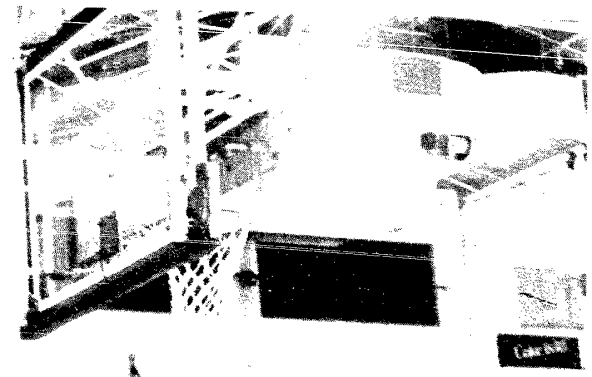
Squair added ten rebounds and ten assists to record a "triple double."

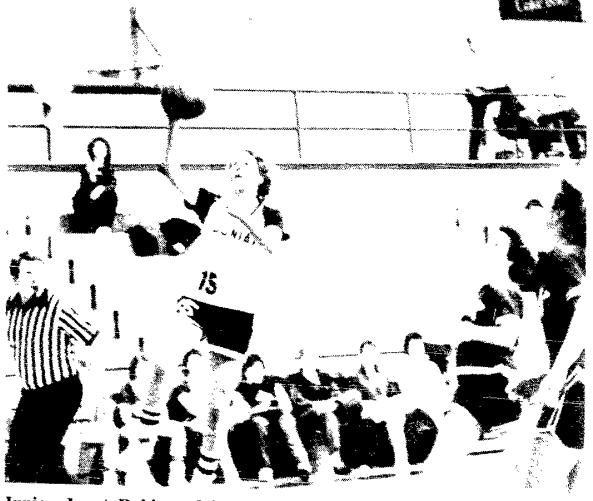
The York win looked to lead to better things, but hot-shooting Messiah beat the Tribe, 88-79, on Saturday.

The most questionable officiating of the season, by far, helped the hosting Falcons parade to the foul line 38 times (26 in the second half) to Juniata's 20 (only eight in the final 20 minutes). Messiah hit 30 charity tosses to JC's 13, and shot 63 percent from the floor. The numbers were just to much to overcome.

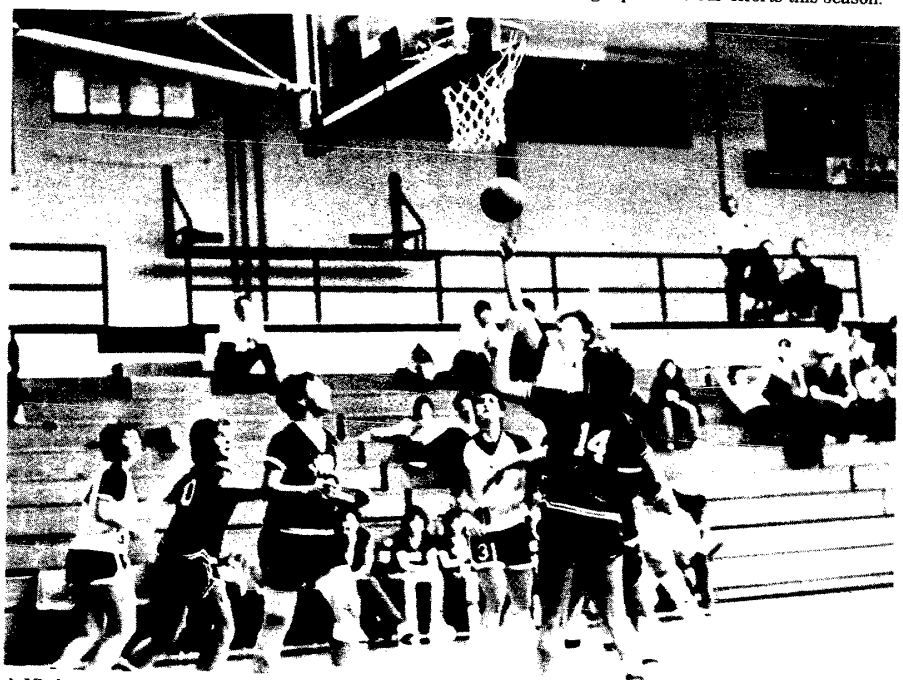
Paul scored 24 points to lead Juniata, followed by Moses with 14 and Squair with 10. Squair also pulled in 11 rebounds.

"Once again we showed too much inconsistency," said Coach Dan Helm. "We played a very good game, only to lose some intensity in our next game. Hopefully, we can play well this final week and achieve a win-loss record appropriate to our efforts this season."





Junior Janet Robison drives the lane uncontested to add to her All-American scoring pace versus York this past week. The Indians scalped York 82-43.



A JC player puts one up as teamates postion for the rebound. The Lady Indians continue to roll as they picked up two more victories last week. The Indians are looking ahead to a special playoff game vs. Dickinson for the Middle Atlantic Conference Northwest section title.

Men's V-Ball Debut In MAC With Victory

By Tom Hunt

In its first ever MAC league match, the Juniata College Men's Volleyball Club team chalked up victory number one over visiting Swarthmore College from Philadelphia.

The JC men recorded a 15-3 win in the first game of the match. Pinpoint passing from Kevin Krause and Chris Hester allowed setters Andy Rhinehart and Larry Hillman to run a precision offense. Hillman was the serving star of the 1st game with six points. In the second game JC battled Swarthmore to a 5-5 tie until JC ran off ten consecutive points to take the game 15-5. Keith Hall ignited the rally with well-placed kills and good defensive passing. Terry Sieple recorded five points on his serve including an ace. All twelve players saw action in the third game, a 15-9 Juniata victory. The game was tight until Dan Berger stepped up to the service line. He preceded to run off five points, including two aces and complete the three game sweep.

Coach Jessica Fox was pleased with the effort and hopes that the team will improve with each match.

This week will be a key one in the men's season. After facing Dickinson College Wednesday afternoon, the team has consecutive matches this weekend. Saturday afternoon's match brings Haverford College to Huntingdon for a 2:00 meeting. Haverford is thought to be the class of the league this year. On Sunday Juniata travels to Elizabethtown College to take on the Bluejays. The team would like to thank the students and faculty who attended the Swarthmore match and hope that they will come out again this week.

RA Selection Process Begins

by Jennifer Nicholson

Applications for the position of Resident Assistant became available on Monday, February 17. The applications are four pages long and include essay questions such as "Why do you want to be an RA?", and "What experiences have you had that you feel would be helpful to being an RA?" These applications will be due by noon on March 12.

The RA selection process will begin with an informative meeting which will be offered on March 12 and March 13. It will be mandatory that all Resident Assistant candidates attend one of the informative meetings.

All candidates will go through a group process on Sunday, March 16. They will also be evaluated by their present RA, any other RA wishing to submit an evaluation, and approximately one-third of their hall memebers. Each applicant will then have a group interview with one Resident Director and three senior Resident Assistants. These interviews are scheduled for March 19-24. After these interviews, initial cuts will be made.

Those who are still eligible will be notified on March 26. One on one interviews with either Julie Keehner, Assistant Dean of Students and Director of Residential Life, or Randy Deike, Director of Housing, will take place March 31—April 4.

Each of these candidates will submit a five minute videopresentation on why they wish to be an RA, along with their personal background and experiences. The purpose of the video is not for evaluation but rather to see how creative the candidate can be and to learn more about the person in general. The final staff (31 Resident Assistants) will be announced in April 8.

Everyone is encouraged to apply because the selection process itself often proves to be a valuable learning experience. Applications are available in the Residential Life office, 106 Founders.

Actor/Comedian Michael Winslow, co-star of the movie, "Police Academy," will perform at Juniata College in Oller Auditorium on Thursday, March 13 at 8:15 p.m.

Medical Ethics Symposium Scheduled at Juniata

A two-day Medical Ethics Symposium will be held at Juniata College March 10-11, sponsored by the college's J. Omar Good Lecture Series.

The symposium will feature presentations by Dr. James F. Childress, Commonwealth Professor of Religious Studies and professor of medical education at the University of Virginia, and Dr. Robert M. Veatch, professor of medical ethics and professor of philosophy at Georgetown University.

Dr. Childress will open the symposium at 3:30 p.m. March 10 with a lecture on medical ethics issues. Following a responce by Dr. Veatch, questions will be taken from the audience. At 8:15 p.m., Dr. Veatch will make his presentation with Dr. Childress responding. There will be another opportunity for questions following this session.

On March 11, both men will have a breakfast meeting with physicians at J.C. Blair Memorial Hospital, then return to the Juniata campus to address classes. Dr. Veatch will discuss "My Personal Ethical System" with SVS classes at 9 a.m. while Dr. Childress discusses the same topic with SVS classes at 11 a.m. Also at 11 a.m., Dr. Veatch will meet with Dr. Stroman's Sociology of Medicine class, discussing "The Rationing of Medical Care Under Medicare and Medicaid: The Politics, Economics, and Effects of DRGs."

A graduate of Guilford College, Dr. Childress holds B.D., M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Yale University. He has been a member of the University of Virginia faculty from 1968 to 1975 and from 1979 to present. From 1975-79, he was the Joseph P. Kennedy, Sr. Professor of Christian Ethics at Georgetown University. He also has been a

Michael Winslow To Perform

When actor/comedian Michael Winslow opens his mouth, everyone listens, because you never konw what will come out.

Winslow, co-star of the hit movie, "Police Academy," will perform at Juniata College Thursday, March 13 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium. The astonishing impressionist is well-known for his vocal sound effects. In "Police Academy," Winslow's amazing voice created machine gun fire, squeaky shoes, assorted animal noises and his masterpiece — a complete video game with all the arcade noises in place.

After winning $500 on "The Gong Show" in 1978, Winslow settled in California and shared concert bills with the late Count Basie. He made his movie debut in "Cheech and Chong's Next Movie," delivering a no-hands redition of Jimi Hendrix's famous "Purple Haze." Next came the role of Monsignor Larvell Jones, M.D. in "Police Academy" which focused attention to Winslow's unique style of "vocalvision," blending acting with the creation of background sounds.

Though laughter has become a language for Michael Winslow, the actor traded humor for drama in his next film, "Alphabet City," where he played a drug runner on Manhattan's Lower East Side. It was back to comedy for the motion picture "Grandview USA" and the soon to be released "Lovelines."

Michael Winslow's performance is being sponsored by the Center Board/Student Government Joint Lecture Committee. Students and staff may purchase tickets in advance at the information desk for $3. All tickets sold at the door March 13 will cost $5.

Board Increases Tuition

by Jack Thomas

A meeting of the Board of Trustees' Executive Committee met on Monday, February 17, in Washington, D.C. to discuss, most importantly, tuition for the 1986-87 academic year. Tuition will increase by 9.1% thus bringing the total cost for tuition, room and board to $10,800. This increase represents the average cost for colleges similar to Juniata's size and calibur. With the 9.1% hike, student aid will be increased to help compensate. Next year's budget also has plans for increased capital expenditures, such as scientific equipment, and additional publications to improve the college's name recognition.

In other business, the Executive Committee was presented with recent Juniatian articles discussing the campus' concern with the South Africa Apartheid issue. The Executive Committee was also informed of the petition circulating the campus and Student Government's intent of writing a letter to the Board asking whether the college has investments in South Africa. This issue will be investigated by the Finance Committee and discussed in depth at the May Board of Trustees meeting.

Editorial

Thanks

This is it. My last issue of The Juniatian. My last editorial. Now I can say all the things that didn't get said enough in these last two terms.

Serving as editor of this newspaper has been a dream (well, sometimes a nightmare) that I will never forget. I have learned a lot about people - our staff had so many unique characters. I learned more about journalism than any class could have ever taught me. Sometimes I learned the lesson the hard way, but it will be a long time before I ever forget it. I discovered what an effective tool a newspaper can be if used properly.

Everyone on this staff should be proud of their work, but some people in particular deserve to be mentioned. Mary and Ginny were incredible, always pulling through when I needed them most. Andy should get a medal for helping me understand our computer. And how would we have ever made it through those long Monday night layout sessions without his humor? The whole staff was great, thankfully knowing their jobs when I was still a little green.

I wish I could send thank you notes to everyone outside of the paper - Student Government, V103, Men's Volleyball Club, my roommates - who were such important parts of my editorship. I have learned a lot from working with professionals.

The biggest thank you goes to our advisor, Bob Howden, the man who called me two days before classes started last fall and offered me this position. He is also the man who guided but didn't lead me, who let me succeed and let me make mistakes.

Right down to the Blue Army man who empties our trash, Thanks for a dream come true.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

The following letter was delivered to Congressman Bud Shuster during his visit to Huntingdon, Monday, February 17. Signers of the letter urged Mr. Shuster to rise to the challenge being offered for a nuclear test ban. We invite other concerned students who share our support for a test ban to join us by writing letters to the Congressman in support of legislation outlined in the following letter.

Sincerely,

Susan Kipp, Member, Huntingdon Friends Meeting

Dear Congressman Shuster,

We are writing to express our hope that the United States —through the President and Congress — will respond positively to Soviet leader Gorbachev's recent proposals to eliminate nuclear weapons by 2000, and to join the USSR's halt to all nuclear weapons testing.

We believe these recent Soviet initiatives offer an unprecedented and historic opportunity to stop the arms race in its tracks. We are concerned that this opportunity is slipping away and may not come again.

On January 1, 1986, the Soviet Union extended for three months its moratorium on nuclear weapons testing which it began in August, 1985. It will not do further testing until April, 1986.

This temporary unilateral moratorium can become permanent if the US joins it, opening the door for the two superpowers to complete the long-awaited Comprehensive Test Ban agreement, pursued by every President since Eisenhower. A test ban would break the momentum of the arms race by halting its most dangerous aspects — the technical developments — which have always driven the US-Soviet competition.

Without a test ban, even a 50% cut in all Soviet and US weapons would not significantly reduce the risks of nuclear war because such cuts would not prevent the testing and production of new first-strike weapons designed to fight — not deter — a nuclear war. The superpowers could simply scrap old outdated inaccurate weapons in favor of newer more deadly ones resting on a hair-trigger. Reductions are meaningless unless there is a preceding or simultaneous agreement to freeze — and a test ban would be the first step.

Since August, the US has argued against joining the Soviet testing halt saying such an agreement could not be verified without on-site inspection. This has been an enormous stumbling block. In December, the Soviets offered a major concession: on-site inspection "to remove any possible doubts about compliance." (Gorbachev letter to Reagan, Dec 19, 1985, Washington Post.) The administration should have jumped at the opportunity and tested the Soviet's seriousness. If it was all propoganda, their bluff could have been called. There was nothing to lose and everything to gain. Verification was no longer an issue.

Instead, a myriad of other arguments were mustered to justify continued US testing, including: the need to "catch up with the Soviet's testing," the need to "maintain the integrity of the present arsenal," and finally, the need to develop new weapons for the future.

The fact is that since 1945, the US has conducted 769 nuclear warhead tests, the Soviet Union 564 - 205 tests fewer than the US, according to the US Department of Energy, in charge of testing. This testing has produced a combined arsenal of 50,000 nuclear bombs —30,000 for the US and 20,000 for the Soviets — the equivalent of 1.5 million Hiroshimas.

The alleged need to continue testing to "maintain the reliabiltiy of the US arsenal" has been challenged by distinguished scientists for over a decade. In a May 14, 1985 letter to Congess signed by 8 renowned Nobel-winning scientists, some of whom had been instrumental in developing our present arsenal, it was stated: "Continued testing is not necessary in order to insure the reliabilty of our stockpile. In no case was the discovery of a reliabilty problem dependent on a nuclear test and in no case would it have been necessary to conduct a nuclear test to remedy the problem."

The reality is that in a world of 50,000 nuclear weapons, the use of less than 1% of these weapons would bring on a nuclear winter. This means even a failure rate of 99% would still leave the world an uninhabitable planet. Such facts stand in stark contrast to the final argument on behalf of continued testing: the need to develop new weapons, in particular, nuclear space weapons for the Strategic Defense Initiative, known as "Star Wars."

According to the New York Times, Reagan Administartion officials said nuclear warhead tests were needed to develop an X-ray

The Electric Light Orchestra recently put out a new album entitled "Balance of Power," the band's first album since their 1981 album "Time." The band consists of producer, composer, and lead singer Jeff Lynne, keyboardist Richard Tandy, bassist Kelly Groucutt, and drummer Bev Bevan.

"Balance of Power " is largely a collection of upbeat ballads in typical Electric Light Orchestra style. The band has always relied heavily on electronic effects and synthesizers. This characteristic sound is still prevalent on "Balance of Power," yet not as much as on previous albums. There is more of a reliance on guitar work and Lynne's dynamic vocals.

The first side begins with an upbeat song called "Heaven Only Knows" "Walking down the straight and lonely road - heaven only knows. . ." describes the singer's feelings concerning his future. "So Serious" has a strong danceable bass beat. Vocal harmony lines also characterize this song. "Getting to the Point" is a slow ballad also employing many vocal parts.

Side Two contains the first single released from the album "Calling to America." This song also has a strong dance beat and is the most characteristic of old ELO style. Another slow ballad, "Endless Lies" is a depressing song about a heart-sick man hurt by "Endless Lies."The album ends with "Send It," another upbeat song with almost a country western sound to it.

ELO has been in the studio a long time working on this album. The characteristic ELO sound is still there, yet it is refreshing to hear more guitar from the band. "Balance of Power" debuted high on the charts.

Acronyms play an important role in our lives. Recently CASE (Committee for Alcohol Study and Education) changed its name to SUDS (So You Drink Sensibly). The reported reason for this was to draw more students to join the organization. I'm sure this is a major concern of students joining an organization. "Gee, CASE - what a stupid name! Hey, SUDS! They must serve free beer at their meetings." I mean, really, what kind of brain cramps does the "powers that be" take us for? Little do you, the average struggling poor hungover Juniata student, know our lives are surrounded with acronyms.

We're all familiar with common acronyms like SCUBA or LASER. Lately another famous one NASA (Need Another Seven Astronauts) has been in the news. But even here at our dear rural college, we use acronyms. A couple of them are words which we often use to refer to our magnificent food service - PUKE (Please Use Ketchup on Everything) and BARF (Baker Ain't really Fun). Some of the words used for our favorite entertainments fit this bill. We all love to PARTY (Parties Are Really Tough this Year) and drink BEER (Best Entertainment EveR). A few prefer BONGS (Best Original Narcotic Going).

Academically speaking acronyms permeate our lives, PRE-REGISTRATION (Please Remember Everything - Rejected Examples Get It Swiftly Thrown Right At The Incinerator withOut Notice) is a real pain. We sign up for classes like CHEM (Courses' Hard Exams Misery) or BUSINESS (Being Underhanded is So Important in the New Executive Social Structure) and worry about our GRADES (Gut Renching Acid Drenched Exam Scores). Is it really worth it?

We are protected by SECURITY (Special Events Chauffers Used Rarely In The Year) and guided by FRED (Former Resident Executive - Departed) and escape to MAX'S (Most Attractive X-cuse against Sobriety), all in the name of a LIBERAL ARTS (Lots of Beer-drinking Ex-Radicals All Lost And Rejecting Total Sobriety) education. Well, that's enough of this. If I keep it up, I might get arrested for milking it. You gotta love JUNIATA (Just another Undergraduate Nitpickin' Inistitution Attempting To alter Attitudes!

laser for a strategic defense against nuclear missles and to find ways to fight a long nuclear war . . . Without such testing, there would be little confidence that the complex system of command and control would permit what Defense Secretary Weinberger has called "a protracted nuclear war in which the United States could prevail." (7/30/85). On January 1, 1986, the day the Soviets extended their testing moratorium for three more months, the US conducted a critical test in Nevada of an H-bomb used to power, the nuclear X-ray.

The Administration's insistence on going ahead with the new weapons is denying us the possiblity of a comprehensive arms control agreement. Are the new space weapons worth it? Should the US launch a race in space with its Star Wars plans? The Soviets have also proposed a ban on testing and development of space weapons. This is a useful clarification which would allow genuine research to continue. The administration has been using the term "research" to include testing. Now there is a chance to continue research and to reach a verifiable halt to testing and deployment.

We must choose between two very different routes to national security. Either we can seek security through technology and pursue the costly and destabilzing Strategic Defense Initiative – a program that cannot protect the population against nuclear weapons and will doom US-Soviet arms control as each side seeks to overwhelm the other's defenses by a buildup of offensive weapons. Or we can seek security through arms control and negotiations to freeze the nuclear arms race and move quickly to bilateral reductions.

A halt to nuclear testing is an essential part of reductions. It will block on both sides a new generation of first-strike weapons which are part of the fantasy that we can fight, control, and win a nuclear war. It will also check the militarization of space by stopping the nuclear explosions needed for the X-ray laser which are part of Star Wars. We are convinced that a comprehensive freeze – begun with a testing halt – is safer, quicker and cheaper than continuing the arms race on earth or in space.

We urge you, Mr. Shuster, to support two bills in Congress: House Resolution 3, calling on the President to resume negotiations for a Comprehensive Test Ban, which now has over 200 co-sponsors, and House Resolution 3442, a bill sponsored by Congresswoman Pat Schroeder, which would cut off funds for nuclear weapons tests for six months contingent upon continued Soviet non-testing.

Congress has the means to stop nuclear testing: the power of the purse. The administration has had since August to respond to the testing and has failed to do so.

This is a critical moment. The time is now. The opportunity is here. We urge you to take advantage of it.

Sincerely,

Edna Eisenhart, Clerk for the Members of the Huntingdon Religious Society of Friends (Quakers).

Debbie Justham, Coordinator, Huntingdon County Campaign for a Nuclear Weapons Freeze.

Spring Break Trip

By Stephanie Cook

How would you like to spend your spring break sunbathing and partying on Daytona Beach? You can at the CarnivalInn, a beach front hotel located on the center of the strip, which features dancing at the "Twilight Zone" night club, pool deck parties, and the famous Exho Belly Flop contest. All it would cost you is $114, which features a quad occupancy, or $189, which features transportation to and from Juniata to Daytona as well as a quad occupancy.

Carnival Inn, one of the hottest hotels on the beach, is within shouting distance of the top bars, expos and free concerts. In the hotel itself, you can swim in one of their two pools, visit the pool bar, sun bathe on one of the best pool decks, and sleep in an air-conditioned room which also has a color TV.

Occasional excersions to Disney World, Epcot, Hawaiian luaus, and party boats will be avalable. And to save you money you will be given an entire list of bar and restaraunt disounts.

For the low price, you will receive round trip transportation from Juniata on luxury motor coaches and seven nights in the Carnival Inn. The buses will be leaving on Friday, Feb. 28 and returning on March 9. To sign up or for more information, call Ron at 643-5264 or Stephanie at 643-9908.

Have A Party

By Laura Mumaw

As a result of the change in the alcohol policy on campus, lounge parties have become less attractive as a fundraiser to certain clubs. However, in an attempt to regain their appeal, Center Board has offered assistance, as well as alternatives to this problem.

Center Board already provides a guaranteed profit with all lounge parties. This relieves the problem of various clubs taking a loss, resulting from the lack of student response to the new lounge parties. Now Center Board has proposed the promotion of live entertainment. This entertainment will be provided by numerous live bands performing at Juniata College.

X-L Rock and the Insiders have both successfully drawn crowds to their lounge parties. According to Wayne Justham, this contracting of bands will continue. Mainstream is the next band scheduled to perform on campus, in an attempt to promote this new policy.

Students Speak

by Patricia Schofield

What are your plans for Spring Break?

Brent Flickinger (freshman) — "I think I'm going home."

Vince Anselmo (junior) — "I'm going down South with the baseball team."

Joey Bard (sophomore) — "I'm going to Texas and Mexico."

Paul Peditto (senior) — "Bow hunting elk in Colorado"

Stephanie Seidle (junior) — "I'm packing elk quarters on horseback in Colorado."

AMERICA'S ENERGY IS MINDPOWER

The Spanish Musical Group La Tuna performed Monday evening in Oller Hall. They treated Juniata students and Huntingdon residents to an evening of traditional Spanish and European songs.

The evening's performance was marked by the rambunctious kidding of La Tuna. The players seemed to genuinely enjoy performing for Juniata's campus.

Juniata Students Attend Arms Control Seminar

By Helen Bailey

The recent trip to Washington, D.C. was to consider United States foreign policy with an emphasis on the arms build-up and arms control. Twenty-four students participated, all members of either winter term's foreign policy class or the International Club. Arriving Wednesday, Feb. 5, the group stayed in the Harrington Hotel which is close to Capitol Hill.

Thursday began with a complicated and technical discussion at the Department of State, by Alvin Streeter of the Public Affairs Office of the Arms Control Agency.

Streeter stressed the point that the history of arms control is basically one of the continued arms build-up. Various Geneva summits have taken place in recent years, but one of the most significant occurances was the meeting between U.S. Secretary of State at the time and the Soviet Foreign Minister in January 1984. The U.S. claims that the system of deterrence (based on mutually assured destruction) has preserved the peace for the past 40 years, but this is now moving up to a higher level — "Star Wars", the Strategic Defense Initiative. Star Wars is a move from offensive deterrence to defensive deterrence. However, the American people must condescend to pay for the program. It is believed that the U.S.S.R. may be researching their own deensive weapons to counter the United States.

Streeter says the basic difference between the two superpowers is that the Soviets always prefer to sign an agreement and then to verify the actions of the other side, while the U.S. ensure verification before signing the document.

Concerning the future and arms control, he is basically pessimistic and this he attributes to the stalling of the Soviets.

The next briefing covered perspectives from the Soviet Desk where John Purrell spoke. Purrell appeared to be more objective and willing to consider both sides.

Basically he believes that U.S. - Soviet relations are improving. The Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev seems to be doing his best to get his nation back on its feet and the recent crises in leadership seem to be over.

Life in the Soviet Union is hard, with any resistance being repressed. Apparently there exists an independent group of intellectuals based in Moscow - the Independent Peace Community. This group manages to continue their work despite being frequently arrested and jailed for two week time periods.

The image that the Soviet people have of Americans comes from the government propaganda directed against the U.S. which inevitably leads to stereotypes.

In the afternoon Hajime Hayaski of the Japanese Embassy's press department spoke on U.S. - Japanese relations. Not a great deal of information was disclosed.

It seems that Japan has one of its best allies in the United States and American trade is very important to this country. Relations with the Soviet Union are strained however, due to events occuring at the end of World War II. Japan still does not have a peace treaty with the Soviets.

Under the new constitution, Article 9 totally commits the country to peace. The Peace and Friendship Treaty was also signed with China in 1978. This is helping relations in that respect.

Several years ago, the Japanese Foreign Minister introduced a step by step approach to achieve total disarmament. This is one of the main objectives of Japanese foriegn policy. It is believed, according to Hayaski, that there are currently no American nuclear weapons on Japanese soil.

The final briefing of the day, held at the Soviet Office of Information Studies, was by Mikhail Berdennikov. He began with an overview of the recent Geneva summit and the current Soviet proposals that seem to be both serious and concrete. The stumbling block is the Star Wars program. The Soviets say "we are not afraid of SDI," but will do whatever is necessary to counteract." It is denied that the Soviets are working on their own SDI because from an economic point of view the arms race would only hurt the U.S.S.R.

Arms control is the cornerstone of all relations between the two superpowers, but, as Berdennikov believes, the world will never be able to do away with nuclear weapons. "It is a dream that will never come true."

Berdennikov continued to speak of general Soviet life, saying that both sides receive one sided views of the other nation. "The U.S. concentrates its coverage on Soviet dissidents and the drawbacks in the Soviet economy."

He believes, however, that it may not be too difficult for our two societies to co-exist because people are the same everywhere and want peace and the "good life."

The second day, Friday, began a little slower due to night out in Georgetown, Thursday night, but the group headed to the House of Representatives for a discussion by Democrat David Barton of the Foreign Affairs Committee. He covered the democratic stand on arms control.

The majority of the House are Democrats, concerned with human rights issues and trade issues as well as arms control.

"There has been no major weapons system that has ever been rejected by Congress," said Barton, implying that Congress has the ultimate power. For the past four years they have been using this view to apply pressure to begin chemical weapon building. Although approved by the Senate, the House has continued to reject this concept of weaponry.

Very few individuals in the government go against the President, but it seems that many are starting to desire results. It is also believed that the Soviets are very interested in agreement although it is difficult it tell how much of this is propaganda.

The situation presently is grim, but Barton thinks progress definitely is possible. It will become apparent this week with the House vote on a comprehensive test ban resolution.

Later in the morning at the Washington Peace Center, Bob Guldin spoke on U.S. - Soviet relations from a liberal perspective.

The Soviets are complying with the current test ban treaty, but the U.S. is not. There is a strong desire for continued military build-up and an eight percent real growth is wanted which "shows the mentality of the defense department," says Guldin.

It was stressed that until recently the Soviets were full and willing participants in the arms race, but now it seems as if the U.S. is engaging in arms build-up with more vigor.

David Trachtenberg, from the Committee on Issues of Present Danger, briefed the group on the basic Republican point of view.

The committee is concerned with researching the military balance and arms control and education.

Trachtenberg says, "generally we all agree there is a threat from the U.S.S.R. due to the nature of Soviet society." Therefore, "the Soviets . . . compel us to spend money on defense." He went on to say that "as a society we do not like to build weapons," but he admitted that the U.S. must continue building in order to reach a balance. This, however, is not acceptable in the Soviet view.

Basically, according to Trachterberg, the scene is not optimistic because the Soviets do not have incentive to agree to the arms limitation. Trachterberg believes that it is "not the end of the world" if an arms control treaty is not reached.

The final briefing held in the Peace Center was led by a Juniata College graduate, David Hostter, the coordinator of the seminar.

He basically stressed the need to be heard, noting that less than half the electorate voted in the last election. The only success achieved in arms control was the Test Ban Treaty of 1963.

The first step, according to Hostter, is to stop threatening nuclear weapons, and it must be remembered that the U.S.S.R. has taken a no-first-use pledge. Non-violent actions must be taken because the arms race "won't stop if we continue to obey." Hostetter believes that "disarmament is the only way to peace."

Nancy Kulp Speaks To Lesher Residents

By Andrea Romano

Nancy Kulp spoke to the residents of Lesher Hall in the carpeted lounge Wednesday, Feb. 12. As is well known, Ms. Kulp teaches film and television classes at Juniata. Her subject that evening was Hollywood from her point of view.

Ms. Kulp had been in Hollywood for many years so she knows the territory well. When asked what Hollywood is like, she said it is more a state of mind than reality. For those of us who have never seen Sunset Blvd., there is an assumption that it is all glamour and beauty. Areas like Beverly Hills and Rodeo Drive are as we expect, but Hollywood in reality is not as beautiful.

Actually, it is quite dangerous at night. Mostly pimps and prostitutes roam the areas. The prostitutes are the shadows of Hollywood's failures. They are usually young and stay around the studio in hope of being discovered. They have not attended college and their only goal is to be a star at any cost. Ms Kulp said it is sad to see such beautiful girls ruining their lives.

When asked how she got started in the business, Ms. Kulp said that her husband tried to get her a job at Twentieth Century Fox as a walk-on, but instead she was cast as the lead in the movie. Later she received the role as Miss Jane Hathaway on "The Beverly Hillbillies" which lasted for eleven seasons. She admitted that being an actress is the most unsteady profession. It is scary not knowing day-to-day if you will be working. You can be a star one day and an unknown the next.

Plan For A Chem Career

By Ann Tinsman

There are several careers that require a degree in chemistry, some that few people consider. One such career would be a systems analyst. A person would obviously need a computer science background as well, but chemical companies do hire people with both backgrounds. These companies need people to make programs that require a knowledge of chemistry.

Another alternative in the field of chemistry is technical writing. Being a technical writer would involve writing for chemical journals. The same person may also write stock reports for the stock holders in a chemical company.

A final career opportunity in chemistry would be to work for an insurance firm. Allstate Insurance employs people with backgrounds in chemistry to analyze the chemical composition of different materials to test their flamability.

Please note that applications for permission to reside off-campus for the 1986-87 academic year are now being accepted at the Residential Life/Housing Office. Permission to reside off-campus will be granted only to students with senior standing as of txe end of Spring Term 1986.

Also, the room selection process will be held on April 10th (multiple occupancy), April 14th (Junior Class), and April 15th (Sophomore Class) and April 16th (Fresxman Class). Information concerning the room selection process will be forthcoming.

If you have any questions, please feel free to contact Randall C. Deike at 206 Founders Hall or call 643-4310 extension 260.

The "Still" To Open March 22

By Joe Scialabba

All Class Night becomes "ACN Weekend" in 1986 thanks to the opening of "The Moonshiner's Still" on Saturday, March 22, the day after All Class Night '86.

Center Board and SNAP will turn Tote into an on-campus nightclub, "The Moonshiner's Still," featuring live musical entertainment (an area band.)

"We hope to have the band play 40 minute sets and fill with a comedian or magician," said Dana Harriger, Center Board vice-chairperson. "Students, faculty and adminstrators will be serving as waiters and waitresses."

Non-alcoholic beer and other non-alcholic cocktails will be served at a minimal cost. There will be no cover charge and no minimum.

The opening of "The Moonshiner's Still" will replace the traditional Friday night ACN dance, and truly make All Class Night an entire weekend event.

Semester Status

MATH DEPARTMENT
by Meg Kistler

There will be no changes in the Math Department course offerings. Courses will be offered the same number of times per year. Courses that are offered each term now will be offered each semester. Courses that are offered every other year will remain that way. One of the few things the Math Department has had to do in the change to semesters was to decide whether a course was worth three or four credits (depending on the number of hours spent in class).

"For students coming in freshmen year (as Math majors) not much is going to change. The biggest difference will be in the ability of a student to decide on a POE in Math later." With the change to semesters, it is going to be more difficult to change to Math as a POE during the sophomore or junior year and still be able to take all of the course requirements, because the student can take only two sequential courses per year instead of three.

POLITICAL SCIENCE DEPARTMENT
by Jennifer Nicholson and Lauren Rogerson

The Political Science Department is in favor of the switch to semesters. Although there will be a slight decrease in the department's course offerings, some courses will be taught more effectively, having more time for research and better absorption of material with the change to semesters.

According to Dr. William Vocke, the change will not affect the course credit system. Some departmental changes to expect are the elimination of Introduction to Politics and the switching of American Government and International Politics from 200 level classes to 100 level classes. The department expects the semester system to help many department programs.

V103 Elects New Board Members

By Mike Barnett

Wednesday evening marked the date for the annual elections of board members for V103, the campus radio station. Next year's board will include five men and one woman, two of which have been re-elected.

Returning as station manager is junior Shelly Guest. Guest says she is, "really pleased with the election turnout. A really good group of people were elected and I'm looking forward to working with everyone next year." Guest's goals for next year are to promote better interaction among board members through long range planning seminars, goals seminars and working with job descriptions.

Also returning is sophomore Rob Troxell as program director. Troxell's goals are to keep innovating to make V103's format more solid and to get as many people as possible working in the programming and music departments.

Freshman Mike Barnett is replacing senior Steve Borza as news director. Among Barnett's goals are to begin broadcasting sporting events live, reinstate a national and international news source and increase participation in the news department.

Cape Cod Offers Many Jobs

Cape Cod, Massachusettes and the off-shore islands of Nantucket and Martha's Vineyard have more good paying jobs open to students and teachers this summer than ever before.

For generations businesses in these resort areas have been hiring college students from all over the country, including the New England, New York, and Pennsylvania areas.

According to Bonnie Basset, spokesperson for the Cape Cod Summer Job Bureau, "the recent explosive growth in tourism here has created unprecedented scrambling by businesses and resorts loooking for summer help. The seasonal job market has never been this good... the jobs are waiting, now we just need people to fill them. The opprtunities are exciting, the pay is good, and now is the time to act."

"Hiring goes on right through June," Ms. Basset added, "but the choice of jobs generally go to those who apply earliest. There are no employment fees."

For immediate information on the many kinds of jobs available and details on how to apply, send a LONG self-addressed STAMPED envelope to: Cape Cod Summer Job Bureau, Box 594, Room 8, Barnstable, Maryland 02630.

A Hitchhiker's Guide Proves Successful

The Juniata College stage production of Douglas Adam's, "Hitchhikers Guide to the Galaxy" was performed February 13, 14 and 15 in Oller Hall.

Not having any idea as to what this play was about, I went with an open mind. My British roomate was talking all week about how funny the play was, and that it would be an enjoyable evening. Before actually seeing the play I had forgotten how different the British sense of humor is.

At my first viewing of this production, I saw that the foreign students in the audience were getting all the jokes. The Americans, myself included, sat in the audience not catching on to the British humor. Many times, I caught myself laughing because my roommate was laughing—not because I understood the jokes.

I also paid close attention to the acting aspect and laughed at the actual performances rather than the jokes. Because I know some of the actors rather well, I laughed at the make-up and the actor's portrayed of characters (i.e. Tim McCarthy as Max Quordlepleen).

Some of the acting done in this play was as good as that which is seen in off-broadway productions. Sean Ruth as Zaphod Beeblebrox was suberb. I feel that he brought to life the British element of comedy for those who understood it, and for those of us who didn't, he used his voice and body gestures to appeal to the American sense of comedy.

The duo of Steve Meyer and Tom Kochel did equal justice to the comedy throughout their character portrayals of Author Dent and Ford Prefect. But perhaps the most appealing character was Marvin the robot played by Margaret Gonglewski, because it was the most humorous portrayal and the best work of acting I've seen in a college production. I feel that I need to congratulate Jani Lewis who played the narrator for her excellent memory. She rattled every sentence off with great ease, which is an important quality in good acting.

Winter I.M. Playoff Championships Tonight

By Andy Hiscock

Juniata' Winter Intramural program is nearing its close, with all of the leagues scheduled to hold their final league championship games tonight.

In the Men's Soccer league, the top three teams reached the playoffs. 'Eggs Benedict' (9-3) was the regular season leader and received a first round bye. 'J.I.S.M.' (6-6) met 'Skeeter's Biscuits' (5-1) on Monday with the winner to meet Eggs for the league championship tonight.

Regular season Co-Rec Soccer leaders, 'Blazers' (who received a first round bye) were waiting to meet the winner of the game between 2nd and 3rd place finishers 'Rat Race United' and 'Pleasures In' for the league championship tonight.

In Men's Basketball league 'A', 'Shamma Lamma Ding Dong' (7-5) met 'I Was Only Apping' (5-6) in the first round of the play-offs on Monday. The winner advanced to the championship game to be held tonight vs. regular season leader 'Hustlers Minus 1' (10-1), who received a first round bye.

In Men's Basketball B play-off action, 'No Name II' (6-6) met '9ah Commandos' (6-6) on Monday, with the winner meeting regular season league leader 'Running Rebels' (12-0). The winner of this game going on to the championship game. 'Phi Slamma Retards' (11-1) played 'Run and Gun' (7-5) and 'Rolling Thunder' (8-4) met 'Queefs' (8-4), with the winner of these two games meeting each other to decide who would get the other championship play-off berth. The Final Championship game will be played tonight.

Last Monday, 'Bock's Babies' (6-2) met 'Pink Thunder' (4-4) in the first round of the Women's Basketball play-offs. The winners will meet regular season leader 'The Has Beens' (6-2) tonight for the league championship.

The top five Co-Rec Volleyball Division A teams reached the play-offs, with 'Thankews II' (5-3) meeting 'Why Bother' (4-4)'; with the winner to play co-league leader 'No Name' (7-1) in the second round. The winner of this game reached the championship game to be held tonight versus the winner of the game between co-league leader 'Still No Respect' (7-1) and 'Mutual Exclusion' (5-3).

In the first round of the Co-Rec Volleyball B play-offs this past Sunday, 'Tryps In Cleavage' defeated 'White Russians'; 'Mission Impossible' beat 'Toxic Waste'; 'Druts' defeated 'Vegetarian Cows'; and 'Phase Nine' beat 'Tomer's Awesome Team'. The second round of the play-offs was held this past Tuesday with 'Tryps In Cleavage' (6-0) met 'Mission Impossible' (5-1) and 'Druts' (6-1) met 'Phase Nine' (5-2), with the winners of those two games meeting in the championship game tonight.

In the first round of the Women's Volleyball play-offs held this past Sunday, co-league leader 'Whiplash' (7-1) defeated 'The Dwarfs' (3-5) and co-league leader 'Drunken Stupor' (7-1) defeated 'Bumbling Idiots' (3-5). With both winners advancing to the championship game to be held tonight. Good luck to all those playing tonight.

Ladies B-Ball Drop Special MAC Game vs E-Town 73-62

Look For NCAA Playoff Berth

By Joe Scialabba

The waiting is the hardest part.

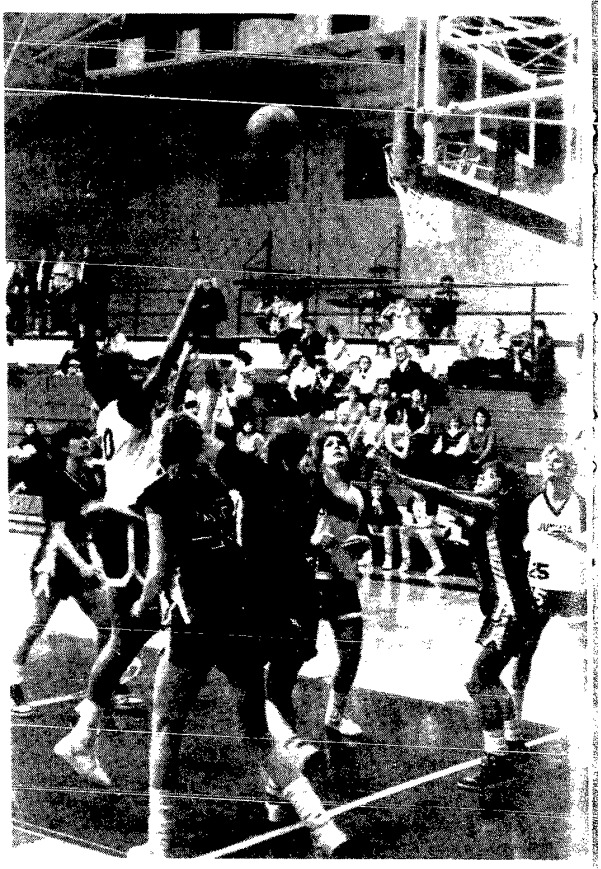
That saying fits the Juniata Women's Basketball team this week as they sit on a 15-5 record and remain hopeful of receiving a NCAA National playoff berth. The bids will be announced on Sunday.

Last weekend ended the regular season for the Tribe, Juniata beat hosting Wilkes 73-51 on Saturday, but lost a Middle Atlantic Conference special play-off on Sunday, 73-62 to Elizabethtown.

The Wilkes win gave the Indians an 8-2 MAC record, and set up Sunday's playoff at Dickinson. Janet Robison scored 21 points, followed by Sue Grubb's 20 and Karen Ramm's 13 in the victory over the Colonels.

In Carlisle, Elizabethtown jumped to a 34-24 halftime edge and held on in the second half. Robison, hobbled by an ankle injury, led the Indians with 22 points. Grubb added 10.

E-Town now reigns as MAC Northwest Champion with Susquehanna gaining the second playoff spot. Juniata had to settle for third place, despite the three teams identical league records. Despite a disappointing finish, last weekend still leaves postseason playoff hopes for Juniata. Also, departing head Coach Nancy Latimore won her 100th game with the Saturday victory.



The Lady Indians Basketball squad finished their season this past week with a 15-5 record. Action pictured here is from their last home game of the season vs. Dickinson. The Indians defeated Dickinson and Wilkes last week but lost a tough special MAC playoff game to E-Town.

Indian Grapplers Grab Victory

By Erik Olson

The Juniata Wrestling team finished its dual-meet season Saturday by winning one of three matches in a quadrangular meet at the University of Scranton. The Indians defeated Muhlenberg 32-22 before falling 31-21 to Elizabethtown and 46-6 to the host Royals.

Against Muhlenberg, the Indians jumped out to a quick lead and never looked back. Rich Hoag (118), Paul Berhardt (126), and John Swanson (142) won by forfeit and Erik Olson (150) polished off his opponent with a 12-3 major decision. Dave Bates (177) and Larry Krizner (190) then put the match out of reach, Bates recorded a 15-5 major decision and Krizner by forfeit.

Against Elizabethtown, the Indians fell behind early and never quite got back into the match. Swanson decisioned his opponent 6-4, Bates and Krizner won by forfeit, and heavyweight Russel Tschopp won by fall to acount for the Indians' scoring. In the last match against Scranton, Juniata could muster only a fall by Ed Hoffman at 134.

The Indians' final competition of the season is the MAC tournament, which will be held this weekend at Ursinus College.

Men's B-Ball Lose Two For Week

By Joe Scialabba

Juniata's Men's Basketball season ended on a down note last week with two losses.

The Indians dropped a heartbreaking 61-59 home finale to Western Maryland on Tuesday before a 97-72 defeat to Wilkes on Saturday night.

Freshman Darrow Murdock scored 16 points on Tuesday, while Wayne Paul added 13 and Duane Dise 10.

Paul scored 20 points and Les Squair 14 on Saturday, when hot-shooting Wilkes pulled away from only a 44-38 halftime advantage.

The Indians, who finished 8-16 and 4-12 in the Middle Atlantic Conference, lost seven games by four points or less this season.

Juniata graduates four senior players: Captain John Hunter, Dick Moses, Eric Lane, and Andy Zimmerman.

Paul led the Indians with a 16.8 points per game average while Squair pulled down a team-high 8.5 rebounds a game. Both are candidates for All-MAC team berths.

Action from Men's basketball game vs. Western Maryland. Freshman Darrow Murdock drives for two of his 20 points. Despite a solid effort, the Indians home finale slipped away to the visitore 61-59.

Consistent inside pressure during this game vs. Dickinson and later in the week vs. Wilkes led to two more JC victories this past week. A loss to E-Town in a special MAC playoff game has the ladies waiting to here if they will receive a bid for the NCAA post season play.

Artist Series To Conclude

Juniata College's 1985-86 Artist Series concludes Tuesday, March 25, with a concert by guitarist Christopher Berg. The 8:15 p.m. performance will be in Oller Auditorium.

Since his New York debut recital at Carnegie Hall in 1981, Berg has performed in most major U.S. cities including Washington, Boston, San Francisco, Chicago, Philadelphia, and St. Louis.

Berg received his training at the Peabody Conservatory of Music under Aaron Shearer and in masterclasses with Maestro Andres Segovia at the University of Southern California. In 1982, he received the prestigious Solo Artist Fellowship that is awarded annually by the South Carolina Arts Commission. Berg has presented numerous concerts under the sponsorship of the S.C. Arts Commission and the National Endowment for the Arts. While a student, he was the first guitarist ever to be awarded first prize at the MTNS Collegiate Artist Auditions.

Currently director of classic guitar studies and associate professor of music at the University of South Carolina, Berg is widely recognized as an outstanding artist-teacher.

Berg's March 25 concert at Juniata will feature selections by J.S. Bach, Johann Kaspar Mertz, Miguel Llobet and others. Tickets for the concert may be purchased at the door.

Wayne Justham Leaves Juniata

by Jennifer Nicholson

Wayne Justham, Assistant Dean of Student Services, Director of Programming, and Director of Conferences has resigned from his position at the college. He resigned, effective immediately, on Thursday, March 13, for personal reasons.

"Wayne was a valued colleague. He has made numerous long-standing contributions to the campus life," commented Dr. Arnold Tilden, Vice President and Dean of Student Services. A search will be conducted on a national level, including advertising in the Chronicle of Higher Education, to fill the position.

For the time being, temporary staff changes will be made to help the situation. Center Board will be participating in the application process by helping to screen and interview candidates.

Dr. Tilden hopes to find a replacement willing to begin working by July 1, 1986.

Murray Performs on Moller Organ

A concert of organ music performed on Juniata College's Moller organ will be presented in Oller Auditorium Sunday, March 23, at 8:15 p.m. Musician Terry Murray, instructional assistant in music at Juniata, will be the artist for the concert entitled "Organ Meditations for Lent." She will be playing selections by Bach, Brahms, Dupre and Messiaen.

A native of New York, Mrs. Murray received her B.S. degree in music education from Bridgewater College in Virginia and holds a Master of Music degree in organ performance from Westminster Choir College in New Jersey. She has studied under Joan Lippincott, Eugene Roan and Mark Brumbaugh of Westminster Choir College, Leonard Raver of the Juilliard School and the New York Philharmonic Orchestra, and Harold Vogel of the North German Organ Academy.

Along with her husband, the Rev. Dr. M. Andrew Murray, Juniata's campus minister, Mrs. Murray has performed throughout the country and is particularly well-known within the Church of the Brethen. She also served as organist of the Presbyterian Church in Huntingdon.

Juniata's historic Moller organ, which Mrs. Murray will be playing, was installed in Oller Auditorium in 1940, a gift to the college from Miss Rello Oller of Waynesboro. During the summer of 1981, the organ was removed from the building and sent to M.P. Moller, Inc. of Hagerstown, Md. for complete restoration. It was returned to the college in 1982 and rededicated that year with a series of special concerts, one of which featured Mrs. Murray.

The March 23 concert is being sponsored by the Visiting Artists and Scholars Committee at Juniata and is open to the public at no charge.

Shrum Chosen As Registrar

by Karen Walling

Since the week before Christmas, when Constance Collins emptied her office to pursue a new career, we have been without a registrar.

After a long search, the administration approved the appointment of Ms. Jill Shrum as the college's registrar. Ms. Shrum began her new position on Monday, March 17.

Juniata received responses from 65 applicants after advertising in the industry chronical. According to Dean Stewart, the college was looking for someone with experience, who could function in a supervisory role, was capable of working with our new computer system, and was appproachable by students. The applicants were narrowed down to two finalists, upon which time Ms. Shrum was selected.

After receiving her Bachelor's Degree from State University of New York, she worked at Boward's Community College in Ft. Lauderdale, Florida. She worked directly with a campus of 15,000 undergraduates. Most recently, she resided in Media, Pa. and worked in conjunction with the registrar's office of Widener University. It was at Widener that she became familiar with a computer system much like Juniata's present system.

This Is It

This is it. This is the shot I've been waiting for. All the ideas, wishes, dreams. Now is when I materialize them. The opportunity I've been preparing for.

I look around this office and I think, "I can't believe it's mine." I am so excited. I am also a little scared.

I have a lot of definite plans for this newspaper. I want to make it bigger and better in all ways. "But," I think to myself, "I can't do it without their help." My staff isn't cooperating? No, my staff is great. The best there is. I can see it already. It's you, the students. I need your help. I need you to work for me as reporters, I need you to bring your ideas to me, I need you to write me letters when something concerns you, I need you to care enough to respond when I ask you to.

I hope you believe in the power of the press. I certainly do. That's what my job is — power. The power to make my ideas, wishes, and dreams reality in print. Work with me and my power becomes your power — in print.

AMERICA'S ENERGY IS MINDPOWER

Letters to the Editor

Senator Addresses Students

Dear Editor,

A lot has happened recently in Washington regarding the future of education and student financial assistance. As your U.S. Senator from Pennsylvania, I appreciate this opportunity to report to you directly on these important issues of mutual concern.

The key to America's future is higher education. For this reason, I strongly supported the restoration of funding in the federal budget for key education programs which had been targeted for sharp cuts.

Although the U.S. Department of Education proposed a significant decrease in funding for student aid programs for fiscal year 1986, I fought to maintain this vital funding as a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee.

The effect of these cuts would have been severe for most students and disasterous for many. The American Council on Education reported that the Pell Grant Program would have been drastically reduced. The National Association of Independent Schools and Universities indicated that private educational institutions in Pennsylvania would have lost $2.94 million in federal grants. The Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency estimated that 4,263 students would have become ineligible for Guaranteed Student Loans, creating a loss of $10.8 million in income to colleges and universities. Students who would have been hit the hardest by these proposed cuts are from families with annual incomes between $10,000 and $30,000, representing 58.9 percent of all students affected.

In the Senate Appropriations Committee, I argued that federal student financial assistance, including guaranteed student loans, has contributed significantly to maintaining and increasing higher education enrollment. This important aid also has helped many students obtain an education they may otherwise not be able to afford.

I am pleased to report that the Appropriations Committee added $3 billion to the Education Department's proposed fiscal year 1986 budget. This additional funding is desperately needed by students throughout Pennsylvania and the Nation.

On October 22, 1985, I voted in favor of the education appropriations bill, which passed the Senate by a vote of 83 to 15. This legislation makes additional funding available immediately for Pell Grants and preserves the Guaranteed Student Loan Program, limiting reductions to administrative costs of the program.

When the Senate and House of Representatives met in conference on December 6, 1985, to resolve differences in the legislation, as a Senate conferee I felt that it was vital to protect essential education programs. Therefore, I strongly supported the restoration of cuts in these programs: the Senate proposal of $3.3 billion was adopted over the House proposal of $2.7 billion for Guaranteed Student Loans and $3.6 billion was allocated to the Pell Grant Program. President Reagan signed this important appropriations bill into law on December 12, 1985.

It is simply intolerable to have a $200 billion deficit. Even during this time when we critically need fiscal restraint, however, I remain convinced that adequate federal funding for student financial aid, scholarships, and research grants to colleges and universities is essential. While immediate steps must be taken to reduce the federal deficit, we must bear in mind that our investment in the education of future generations of American leaders and workers is and investment in the future strength of our country.

Higher education has long been one of my top priorities in the Senate. I have met with students and spoken at numerous campuses throughout the Commonwealth. Be assured that I will continue to strongly support education and fight for student financial assistance.

Since the days of the Continental Congress in Philadelphia, education has been the foundation upon which our great Nation has been built. We in Congress have the responsibility and the obligation to preserve that foundation. Those students, professors, and administrators who have shared their views with me have indeed challenged us to meet our responsibility.

We must never compromise America's committment to excellence in education and the opportunity for all young Americans to contribute to that excellence.

Sincerely,
Arlen Specter

P.S. I hope to have the opportunity to visit with you on your campus soon. In order to better represent the views of students in the Senate, I need to hear from you. Please feel free to write me at: 331 Senate Hart Office Building, Washington, D.C. 20510

Senior Bids Farewell

Dear Editor,

I am writing in order to say farewell and thanks to my classmates, cellmates, professors, and friends. Having finished my time at Juniata, I can look back and see that it was only through a miraculous combination of all of you, plus multi-vitamins, coffee and snickers bars that has enabled me to survive the last four years. This time has been good in almost all regards. I remember a lot of positive experiences and the people I shared them with; storming the arch as a freshman, taking L & L (?), caving, climbing, skiing, maple sugaring, and the verpebrate trips to Florida. A lot of bizarre and crazy things have happened too, like the mysterious appearance of a piece of red webbing on a certain building and the discovery of the bunsen burner water fountain. Time has a way of getting past us and before mine is totally gone here, I want just to say good luck and peace to all my crazy and/or understanding friends. Thanks for everything.

Peace,
Paul Wagner

P.S. If anyone needs a bike, mine is behind the potshop, but it has a flat.

Team Thanks Patrons

Dear Editor,

On behalf of the varsity baseball team, we would like to thank all who helped in our fund raising efforts for our recent Southern trip.

Through the selling of candy bars and soda and a hit-a-thon, we were able to help pay our way without any additional expense to the college.

Thank you very much for your support and we hope to see you at Langdon Field in the coming weeks.

by Joe Scialabba

We all have fond memories of events that have touched our lives in some significant way. They may deal with a vacation, a sporting event, a holiday or personal milestone. It's nice to remember these special times in our lives.

Often, though, there are times we probably should (and would like to) remember, but can't. The one date that comes (or should come) to mind is one's 21st birthday.

Why is it that we all seem to try to make it a day (night) we should never forget? But, we always seem to forget it in a hurry, except the hangover.

I recently spent a Saturday night in State College with some Juniata people to celebrate the 21 year-old milestone of a friend. I made several observations.

When you first turn 21, you can:
-be the center of attention
-drink large amounts without spending much money
-do and say almost anything and get a laugh
-do and say almost anything and get away with it
-visit more establishments than you ever thought about
-visit more restrooms than you believed existed
-see more toilets up close and personal
-act close and personal with everything and everybody, including toilets, etc.

On your 21st birthday you are definitely everybody's friend and you believe everybody's yours. It's a time to celebrate, and we certainly do try our best.

Totem Inn Reopens Boasting New Image

by Patricia Schofield

Perrier in Huntingdon? Yes, it's true! Totem Inn has taken a new turn. Instead of it being a place to just study and grab a milkshake, it has expanded its menu to tantalize all tastebuds.

Under the guidance of Don Stauffer, the menu now boasts: a fresh salad bar, sparkling waters and juices, non-alcoholic sparkling wines (served with complementary wine glasses), blended fresh fruit juices, Colombo frozen yogurt with the flavor being changed daily, ice cream, bakery fresh pastries, lean deli meats for sandwiches, onion rings, french fries, different types of burgers, chicken nuggets, and many other selections. Breakfast is not limited to only the morning hours. You can order such things as an omelette. hashbrowns, or sausage patties at any time.

Every Monday through Friday from 11:45 am to 1:00 pm; a luncheon buffet is served for $2.95. Hot entrees,soup du jour and chili are available daily. All prices are reasonable and there is now free delivery anywhere on campus.

Current newspapers from major cities are available to read while dining. The Inn itself has had a few changes. It has been remodeled to include a new cash register and a crushed ice bin among other things. The Blue Army is to be commended for the time and effort they put in to installing the new machinery on schedule.

Terry Murry will perform on the Moller organ in Oller Hall Sunday, March 23 at 8:15 p.m.

Fight Hunger With CROP

Spring is coming soon, and along with it, comes the annual Meal for CROP. CROP is an organization that operates through Church World Service to fight hunger around the world. Its programs for finding relief for hunger and self help projects are targeted mainly to help in third world countries as well as in the United States. CROP also sends emergency supplies to disaster areas around the world.

Each year the Campus Ministry Board asks students to give up their evening meal in Baker Refectory. This meal is then sold to the residents of Huntingdon. Seventy-five percent of the money collected from ticket sales will be donated to the Huntingdon Food Bank to help local people who are in need.

Students can donate their meals by signing their name and meal sticker number on the sign up sheets which will be posted in the residence halls after Easter break. Deadline for sign ups will be April 11. The goal for this year's Meal for CROP, scheduled for Tuesday April 15, is $3,500.

There will be an organizational meeting on Tuesday, March 25, at 9:00 p.m. in Tote for anyone willing to help out in any way.

SHAC's Day Went Well

by Lisa Clapper

Wellness Day was observed on Wednesday, March 12, at the college's Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center Mezzanine between 11 a.m. and 5 p.m. Wellness Day was brought to Juniata with the cooperation of the Student Health Advisory Committee and Mrs. Jane Brown, the school nurse.

There were 250 people that signed up, but there were many more people that attended without participating in the sign-ups or the free testing. There were approximately 11 different tests which would have cost almost $224 at a professional doctor's office.

Some of the tests were: Oral screenings by the Huntingdon County Dental Society, Pelvic exams by Womens Health Services, Blood Sugar tests by Huntingdon Unit of the American Diabetes Association, Facials by Ann Yarnell, Blood typing by J.C. Blair Hospital, Pregnancy tests by Precious Life, Inc., Eye screening by Huntingdon County Optometrical Society and Blood Pressure testing given by PA Department of Health.

There were other area agencies that covered health related topics like health and nutrition by the Nutrition department of J.C. Blair Memorial Hospital, Alcohol and drug information, information about pregnancy and pro-life situations. These agencies didn't give testing, but they were on hand to distribute pamphlets and to answer questions.

The Huntingdon County Unit of the American Cancer Society had films and posters and a special lung demonstrating machine. This machine had three lung types—one that was normal, one that was infected with emphysema and one lung that was cancer ridden.

Another agency, the Central PA Lung and Health Scrvices had a slide show on the effects of smoking pot and tobacco. They gave out pamphlets and pins while conducting Tine tests for tuberculosis.

Door prizes donated by local merchants were awarded to Juniata students. The college bookstore donated a sweatshirt won by Karen Morton as well as a pair of shorts won by Heather Seager. Other winners were Dave Hecht who got dumbbells, German foreign exchange student Rolf Tolle received a jump rope, Sarah Crocket received vitamins, Jill Witmer got ankle weights, Curtis Benner was awarded a batting glove, Hilda Hearn won tennis balls, Nancy Briggs won racquetballs and Ron Wippel got a free haircut.

All test results may be received at Mrs. Jane Brown's office, located in Lesher. Because of the success of this year's Wellness Day, they plan to sponsor a Wellness Day every other year.

Application Deadline

Please note that the deadline for submitting an application for permission to reside off-campus is Friday, March 21. Applications are available at the Residential Life-/Housing Office, 206 Founders Hall.

ACN Focuses Soap Operas

By Laura Mumaw

With All Class Night fast approaching, the individual classes on campus have been buzy practicing, organizing and making final adjustments on their skits. The theme chosen for this year's All Class Night is soap operas. Each class has decided on both prime time and daytime soap operas.

The Senior Class is presenting their version of "Dynasty" complete with Krystle and Blake, with promises of other original characters both of Juniata and Denver.

The Junior Class has selected "More Street Blues" to perform. Their cast of cops and bad guys is appropriately cast with Juniata Students and characters.

The sophomores are working on their version of "Dallas", and the freshmen have chosen a daytime soap, "General Hospital", to apply to life here at Juniata College.

All Class Night is among many of the traditional activities Juniata College has promoted in the past. It has provided an oppoetunity for students to voice their opinions and views concerning life on campus. This year's All Class Night promises much attention focused on the new alcohol policy, the new president and the new artist in residence. Please Attend!!!

Choir Plans "Homecoming" Concert

Following a highly successful winter tour through the south, the Juniata College Concert Choir will hold a "Homecoming" concert Monday, March 24 at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Auditorium.

The 44-voice Concert Choir traveled to Virginia, Florida, North Carolina and Maryland Feb. 27 through March 8, presenting seven concerts and receiving standing ovations after each performance.

Conducted by Joseph W. Figg, assistant professor of music, the concert will feature a wide variety of sacred and secular music including "Hodie Christus Natus Est" by J.P. Sweelinck, "Ave Maria" by Thomas Luis de Victoria, choral dances from "Gloryana" by Benjamin Britten and a medley from the broadway musical "Forty-Second Street."

Juniata College choirs have been touring since 1920, when separate glee clubs for men and women completed their first tours. In 1932, the forerunner of the present Concert Choir — the A Capella Choir, a combination of the two glee clubs —made its first tour. With the exception of the three years during World War II,the Juniata choir has toured every year.

Always well received for its talent and enthusiasm, the Juniata College Concert Choir has toured as far as Maine, Florida, and Illinois. It has performed on radio and television, ant before the Pennsylvania House of Representatives. In addition, it has staged many costumed productions of operas, operettas, and Broadway musicals. On May 1, 2, and 3, the group will present the musical "Kiss Me Kate."

The public is cordially invited to attend the March 24 Concert Choir Program. There is no admission charge.

Semester Status

Chemistry Department
by Danielle Rupp and Jennifer Nicholson

With the switch to semesters, the major change in the Chemistry Department is the addition of a new Freshman Seminar class. Dr. Ochiai, Department Chairman, feels this new course "will give the individual the attention that is the hallmark of the small liberal arts undergraduate institution."

Specific changes in courses are as follows:

Freshman Year: The Freshman Seminar course which will meet on Tuesdays and Thursdays with 15-20 students in a class. The course will cover descriptive inorganic chemistry and basic concepts. This type of course, suggested by the American Chemistry Society, is designed to familiarize students with the properties of elements and compounds. This course does have one problem - it will drain the faculty manpower. This will thin the upper-level offerings for fall term and could cause scheduling problems for upperclassmen.

Principles of Chemistry will be offered in the second semester. Basic Chemistry Lab Tech will be more quantitative with a few analytical techniques added and it will become a sophomore year course.

Sophomore Year: A new course, Analytical Chemistry, will be offered. This course is geared to science POE's with some type of Chemistry and will cover analytical techniques removed from Basic Lab Tech and the easier portions of the present Chemical Analysis.

The present Chemical Analysis will become Advanced Analytical Chemistry which will make use of computer interfacing and will be a junior year course. Organic Chemistry I and II will remain the same while a new course in Organic Lab will be initiated.

Junior Year: Synthesis of Chemical Compounds will be a Junior year course and will cover inorganic compounds in addition organic compounds. Physical Chemistry I and II will remain the same with Physical Chemistry Lab being offered in the Spring of junior year, including the use of the computer. Instrumentation Design and Control, a lab course, has been dropped. Inorganic Chemistry will be offered junior year and will include a lab.

Senior Year: Polymer Chemistry will become a special topics course. A course in Industrial Chemistry will be offered. Bioorganic and Interpretative Spectroscopy will be offered every other year. A new coursel Molecular Biology, will be initiated. Research courses include Introduction to Chemistry Research offered the first semester and Advanced Chemical Research offered the second semester. It is suggested that seniors take both research courses.

Music Department
by Sue Gulla

The courses in Applied Music have been approved. Two hours of credit will be given for each of the courses in Applied Music. A grade will be given at the end of each course (each semester). A student can take a course in Applied Music beginning in the second semester regardless as to whether he or she has taken an Applied Music course for the first semester.

Applied music lessons will be forty-five minutes in length. For beginners, it will probably mean that there will be two lessons a week. The first one would be a private lesson of twenty-five minutes. For the second lesson, the student would share an hour period with two other students.

Biology Department
by Kathy Guerin and Jennifer Nicholson

Under the semester system, Biology Labs will be listed separately even though they must be taken with the lecture class. One grade will be given for the lab and lecture combined. This is being done so that students will have a list of the lab work that they have completed for medical school applications and resumes.

Biology I, being geared to non-science majors, will have no lab. Biology II will remain the same. These two courses will equal six credits. Because Biology majors will need eight credits, these students will have to take more upper-level Biology classes.

There is the possibility of difficulty in obtaining enough rooms for labs and lectures as more courses will be taught each semester. Special topic classes will be offered as one or two credit courses on a short term basis.

Overally according to Dr. Kenneth Rockwell, "the Biology program under semesters will include the same courses as under the term system, with only slight changes such as alterations in titles."

Artist To Visit

Mary Barringer, potter and sculpter from Hartford, CT, will be a Visiting Artist at Juniata College on Monday, March 24. During the day she will be working on a series of her one-of-a-kind hand-built stoneware forms in the Ceramics Studio, and will present a slide talk entitled "Sources of Inspiration" in Shoemaker Galleries at 8:15, when a group of her pieces will be on exhibit. All are welcome to visit the studio from 9-12, and 1-4 to meet Ms. Barringer and to watch her construct her unique and personally expressive forms. Refreshments will follow the slide talk in the evening.

Mary Barringer is a graduate of Bennington College and studied further at Pratt Institute. She established Park Street Potters in Hartford, and has been an artist in residence at Artpark in Lewiston, NY, in addition to being potter in residence at Farmington Valley Arts Center, Avon, CT. In 1979, she received an Individual Artist's GRant from the Connecticut Commission for the Arts. Her work is in the Southern Connecticut State College Ceramics Collection, and in private collections. Currently, she is Instructor in Ceramics at Greater Hartford Community College, in addition to operating her own studio in Hartford.

Nieto Presents Lectures

Dr. Jose C. Nieto, professor of religion and history, was invited to the Pittsburgh Theological Seminary March 17 and 18 to present three lectures and adress two classes.

On Monday, Dr. Nieto presented a lecture entitled "Christian Spirituality: Mystical and Non-Mystical." In addition, Nieto was the featured speaker at the Tuesday morning chapel service, where he spoke on the subject "The Word as the Ground of Liturgy and Art."

Also on Tuesday, Nieto addressed students in classes on spiritual formation and historical studies.

V103 Elections Held

by Mike Barnett

Editor's note—The following article was printed incompletely in the February 20 issue. The completed article is as follows.

V103 recently held their election for the Management Board. Next year's board will include five men and one woman, two of which have been re-elected.

Returning as Station Manager is Junior Shelly Guest. Guest says, "I'm really pleased with the election turnout. A really good group of people were elected and I'm looking forward to working with everyone next year". Guest's goals for next year are to promote better interaction among Board Members through long range planning seminars, goals seminars, and working with job descriptions.

Also returning is Program Directcor Rob Troxell. Troxell's goals are to keep inovating to make V103's format more solid and to get as many people as possible working in the Programming and Music departmgnts.

Freshman Mike Barnett is replacing Senior Steve Borza as News Director. Barnett wants to begin broadcasting sporting events live, reinstate a national and international news source and increase participation and enthusiasm in the News Department.

Junior Greg Pawlikowski has been elected Chief Engineer. Following Greg Molchany, Pawlikowski wants to improve conditions at V103 and keep the station in working order.

Joe Newhart will take the top DJ spot as Chief Announcer. Newhart's goals are to keep the V103 DJ staff at top notch quality by the extensive use of the DJ Evaluation Committee in training DJ's.

Replacing retiring Business Manager Ann Cameron is Sophomore Matt Sherbine. Sherbine would like to increase activities in promotion and sponsorship by keeping an active business staff.

Congratulations to all the new Board Members. With their completed goals V103 will be an even better station as well as The One That Rocks.

Apartheid Awareness Week

by Laura Mumaw

In an attempt to make the students of Juniata College more aware of the situation in South Africa a group of concerned students have organized an Apartheid Awareness Week. Several educational films, a guest speaker and a viewing of the Sun City video have been scheduled for this week. The goal of these students, who are supported by the Peace and Conflict Department of Juniata College, is to provide an educational opportunity for students to become aware of the situations which surround the issue of apartheid.

The group would like to see an increase of interest on campus as a result of this effort. They feel that less fear will surround the idea of involvement if people are given the opportuity to decide for themselves.

Student Government is now drawing up a letter which will express student concern on the investments of Juniata College in South Africa. They would like to be able to present both the petition and the letter on the same agenda for the Board of Trustees meeting scheduled for May.

Herman Gives Apartheid Lecture

by Laura Mumaw

Jerry Herman, director of the American Friends Service Committee's Peace Division, will visit Juniata College on Thursday to give an educational lecture concerning apartheid. Herman has been active in the struggle to end apartheid. He has made himself available to colleges and universities in an attempt to provide educational programs to these institutions.

Herman is prepared to speak on many issues concerning apartheid. Among them are divestment, the history of apartheid and the student movement. Herman will be speaking at 8:30 in the Faculty Lounge on Thursday. Mr. Herman was as a part of the apartheid awareness week at Juniata College.

PSU's Concern For Apartheid

by Laura Mumaw

The concern for the situation in South Africa has reached several colleges and universities throughout the United States. One result of this concern in many areas has been the construction of a "shantytown." Penn State is one such institution.

As a demonstration of their concern the students of Penn State have constructed their own "shantytown." It consists of three shacks built of wood and tar. These shacks are covered with graffiti and statements concerning apartheid and the issues concerning it. Students live and eat in these shacks 24 hours a day, as well as participate in the educational programs that are being offered.

There are two major student organizations which have formed around the movement at Penn State. The Black Student Coalition Against Racism (BSCAR) (a coalition of fifteen black student organizations) and the Community for Justice in South Africa have been the major factors in the construction of this "shantytown."

There has been little reaction from the administration concerning the "shantytown." However, certain racist groups have sprung up against the demonstration. There have been certain threats of burning the "shantytown" and a police guard has surrounded the area. The "shantytown," originally intended to remain up for one week, will remain until some beneficial result has occurred.

"The Still" Comes To Juniata

by Joe Scialabba

Center Board has finalized plans for Saturday's opening of the Moonshiner's Still" in Tote.

Entertainment includes the band "219" and a stand-up comedian from New York City. There will be no admission charge for the evening, from 9:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m.

Along with the entertainment, students can enjoy the new wide menu at Tote, including non-alcoholic wines, beers and cocktails. Students, faculty and administrators will serve as waiters for the special evening.

Help Juniata extend All Class Night into another great weekend by trying a night at "The Still."

New Coaches Set Season Goals

By Mike Antenucci

Spring is heading towards Juniata, bringing with it warm weather, spring sports, and a few new faces. This year there will be three new coaches for the spring season, all of whom will be coaching girls sports. Coaches Dick Scialabba, Carol Mercer, and Dr. Ray Pfrogner will be at the helm of the girls Softball, Track, and Tennis teams respectively.

Coach Scialabba, a Huntingdon area resident and father of Juniata student Joe Scialabba, is experiencing his first major coaching job. Scialabba told the girls they were starting a new season with a new coach and stressed the fact that the teams success will rely on the players attitudes, level of emotional play, and most importantly, team work. "Janet Robinson and Cindy Corle will be the team leaders," said Scialabba, who also spoke highly of his freshmen talent. "I feel the schedule is in our favor," replied Scialabba, "We have 8 home games to our 4 road trips. I feel we can do well in the MAC's this year." The softball season opens this Saturday when the Indians play host to Elizabethtown.

This years girls track team is being coached by Carol Mercer, who is also the girls Field Hockey coach at Juniata. Mercer a graduate of Frostburg State, and a four year three sport letter winner in college, now resides in Williamsburg. Her two years as a high school Track and Cross Country coach should help base the experience needed for a successful season. Coach Mercer plans to do well this year in hopes that a successful season will draw more girls to next years squad. Mercer is reling on senior Sue Occiano and distance runner Sue Gulla to lead the way for the Indians. "Our major setback this year will be the lack of bodies and experience," stated Mercer, "But we do have some strong and natrual athletes." The girls first meet is on College Hill, Wednesday, March 26, against Lycoming.

On the courts this year the head position will be assigned to Dr. Ray Pfrogner, a graduate of Juniata, who played four varsity seasons during his college days. Pfrogner noted, "We have a lot of girls out for the team, but only two returning starters, Leanne Igolf and Laura Beck. We are looking for a winning season but our major goal is to be competitive." Pfrogner, who hails from Summerset, was pleased with the turnout for the team and hopes it can continue in the future. The first match for the Lady Indians is Tuesday, March 25, at Juniata.

The Winter Intramural season has come to a close. The competition for the play-off spots in most leagues came right down to the wire. "Hustlers Minus 1" beat "Shamma Lamma Ding Dongs" for the Men's Basketball A-League title.

Hoops Tourney Begins

By Mike Antenucci

What does the month of March mean to college basketball fans? One does not have to search long and hard to find the answer to this question, for your average sports fan knows that March means the NCAA Division I basketball tournament, which this year has been expanded to a 64 team field. However, one might find difficulty in answering questions of this sort: Who will be crowned 1986 National Champions? Will there be another 70:1 shot, as Villanova was a year ago, taking home the title? What players will standout and what coaches will be in Dallas,Texas, the site of this years final four.

Only time and a lot of basketball can answer these questions. This years tournament promises to be as exciting as last years, but there is a major difference from a year ago. There is not one dominant team, anyone can win, and after two rounds of play many upsets have already occurred. Michigan, Syracuse, Notre Dame, Georgetown, Indiana, Oklahoma, Memphis State, St.John's, and defending champion Villanova all have made early exits.

As of now this years tournament should be labeled "The Tournament of Unsung Heros". Navy's David Robinson, Alabama's Buck Johnson, Michigan State's Scott Skiles, and several players from Cleveland State have led their squads over top seeded teams in reaching the Regional semi-finals, which begins tonight in Houston and Atlanta, concluding March 23 in East Rutherford and Kansas City. From there it's on to Dallas and the Final Four.

Among the other schools that were not expected to make it through to third round play are Louisiana State, Auburn, Depaul, and Iowa State. The rest of the sixteen team field consist of Kentucky, Georgia Tech, U. of Nevada-Las Vegas, North Carolina, Louisville, Duke, Kansas, and North Carolina State. The 1986 NCAA Division I basketball tournament is great basketball, very exciting, but most of all, unpredictable.

ction from the Winter I.M. Men's Indoor Soccer League. "Rat Race United" and "Skeeter's Big Biscuits" won e Co-Rec and Men's Soccer Titles respectively. "Mutual Exclusion" and "Druts" won league A and B Co-Rec olleyball titles while "Whiplash" grabbed the Women's Volleyball Championship.

Indian Tennis Squad Looks Ahead

The men's tennis team returns four letterwinners from last year's 3-5 season. Leading the group of returnees is Sophomore Dan Corazzi. He finished last year with a 4-6 record in the number one singles spot. In the MAC tournament, Corazzi won his first match before losing 3-6, 7-6, 5-7 to defending conference singles champion Steve Pistrow. Senior Chris Savage chalked up a 5-3 mark last year and may challenge Corazzi for the number one spot. Junior Dan Berger and sophomore Dave Acker will also return to the indian lineup.

Head coach Rob Ash looks for upperclassmen Brad Horton and Ben Bridenbaugh and Freshman Rich Gottschall to aid the Indians this Spring.

"Doug Yokoyama will be off campus this spring. That will hurt us, but I think the addition of Bridenbaugh, Horton, and Gottschall should make up the difference," said Ash.

The Indians opened their season yesterday versus Western Maryland. The men's first home match is scheduled for 1:00 this Saturday March 22nd versus Wilkes. "Our dual meet record will depend on the performance of newcomers and on how well the doubles teams perform, Ash concluded.

The men's first home match is scheduled for 1 p.m. this Saturday March 22 versus Wilkes.

Women's Basketball Wrap Up

Season Ends In Regionals

By Tracy DeBlase

The Winter months on College Hill proved to be a lot warmer as a result of Juniata's hot women's basketball team.

The Lady Indians finished their 1985-86 season with a 16-6 record and a 66-50 victory over Moravian in the NCAA Division III Mid-Atlantic Regional consolation game. The Tribe dropped a 70-53 decision to the University of Scranton, defending national champions in the opening round of the NCAA playoffs.

"We are disappointed that we did not advance further in the MAC and NCAA championships, but we are proud of what we did accomplish during the season. We played some good basketball and had wins over some of the top-ranked Division III teams. We simply peaked too early in the season," Coach Nancy latimore said.

Senior guard Janet Robison sparked the Indians on offense this year, with an average of 18.3 points per game. Her performance in the NCAA playoff games earned her a spot on the NCAA All-Tournament team. Robison, an All-American, was deadly from the perimeter shooting 50 percent and a torrid 84 percent from the charity stripe. Both figures topped records set by Nancy Zinkham during the 1979-80 season. Robison also dished out a record 120 assists in 22 games. Accumulating 412 total points this year, she surpassed Patty Ryan's 1985 record of 359 points in her senior year.

"It will be no easy task filling Janet Robison's shoes. She is one of the best Division III point guards in the country," Latimore said.

Sophomore Sue Grubb led the team in rebounds averaging 10.0 a game. She added an average of 13.5 points per game to follow Robison in scoring. Sophomore center Karen Ramm averaged 9.2 points per game while freshman Darella Fortson (8.1 ppg) grabbed 9.2 rebounds a game.

Karen Fonner a senior guard, rounded out the starting five. Fonner, counted on heavily for her defensive play, collected 28 steals, 71 assists and 115 points in 22 games.

Coach Latimore had strong performances off the bench from freshman Sue Lockawich and junior Paula Hillegass.

Lockawich was extremely strong in her starting debut against the University of Scranton in the NCAA playoffs. Ramm, sidelined with a sprained ankle, was unable to play. Lockawich stepped in and scored 16 points, shooting 88 percent from the field. The 5'11" freshman collected 117 points and 77 rebounds in 21 outings.

Hillegass sparked the Indians on numerous occasions with her threatening outside shot. She collected 73 total points in 22 appearances.

Sophomores Lisa Grey and Andrea Zavod and junior Becky Hostetter also saw action this year.

"Our veterans played very well for us, and the freshmen stepped in and contributed immediately," Latimore said.

A number of team records were shattered as well. Juniata shot 90 percent (19-21) from the free throw line against Dickinson. The old record was 86 percent (25-29) versus Widener in 1980. The Indians shot 44 percent from the floor this season to break the old record of 40 percent from the floor this season to break the old record of 40 percent set during the 1979-80 season.

The Tribe, ranked as high as eighth in NCAA Division III during the regular season, made their first appearance in the playoffs since the 1979-1980 team was eliminated by the University of Scranton 77-69 in the AIAW quarterfinals in 1980. They have a 13 game winning streak going at home. Next year look for the Tribe to extend that streak.

"Our successful season was a real team effort. It was a joy coaching such a talented group," said Latimore as she concluded nine years of coaching at Juniata. She has been named assistant director of championships for the NCAA.

Juniata Spikers Surprise No. 1 Elizabethtown

By Tom Hunt

Volleyball fans witnessed a long and grueling match Sunday afternoon when our men's volleyball club toppled the MAC leading Bluejays from Elizabethtown College. Juniata's spikers brought their record to 3 wins and 3 losses for the season, while handing Elizabethton only its second loss.

Each of the three games won by JC were in 'overtime' scores. In the opening game the score was tied seven times before two final serves by Dan Stambaugh brought a 16-14 victory.

In the second game, E-Town jumped out to a quick 0-4 lead before coach Jessica Fox called the first time out. The strategy paid off as the next play resulted in a side out for JC, followed by our first point. But when E-Town next got the serve, they rolled off seven more points to take a 1-11 lead. Time out again! Some strong advice from the coach and alert play sparked a slow but steady comeback. Chipping away one point at a time, and behind six serves of Keith Hall, the lead was cut to 11-14. JC had to play through three side-outs to tie at 14 all, only to slip behind 14-15. Bob Davies served the last three points for JC to top the Bluejays at 17-15.

It appeared that the new strategy of using the bench talent was paying dividends. Starters-Davies,Stambaugh, Andy Rhinehart, Tom Hunt, and Mark Heinly all got well deserved breaks. Mike Wojcik, Larry Hillman, Wes Harpold, and Kevin Krause all saw considerable playing action.

Juniata pulled to a 10-8 lead in game three, but could not hold down the determined offense from E-Town, eventually losing at 10-15. Our team dug itself a similar hole in game four, falling behind 2-8 and then never got closer than 5-12, before finally folding at 6-15.

With the match on the line in the fifth and deciding game, there were five side-outs before Juniata put the first points on the board behind the serving of Kevin Krause. Elizabethtown responded quickly and tied the game at 5 all. The game was see-sawing back and forth with ties at 8 all and 10 all, when E-Town pulled ahead to 10-13. The turn around came when Mark Heinly crunched a perfect Tom Hunt set to the floor. JC fought back to a 14-14 tie. Elizabethtown managed a 15-15 tie, before our spikers put the match on ice with a 17-15 win.

Coach Fox said,"The key to the victory was our ability to overcome mental lapses and maintain a good team attitude. We didn't beat ourselves, we showed our skills."

The remainder of the men's club schedule will be played on the road. Our spikers will travel to Messiah, Haverford and Swathmore for matches, then end the season with an MAC Tournament April 12th at Messiah College.

Winter I.M. Basketball (B-League) action. The Intramural competition last term once again came down to the wire, with a number of of the regular season league leaders being upset in the play-offs. "Running Rebels" defeated "Rolling Thunder" for the B-League title. "Bock's Babies" won the Women's basketball title.

Baseball Hopes High With Veteran Leadership

By Tracy DeBlase

The Indian baseball team returns to the diamond this spring with an abundance of talent and 14 letterwinners.

Coming off a 12-8 season and a fourth place finish in the Northwest League of the Middle Atlantic Conference, the diamond boys are hungry to avenge some disappointing losses suffered in 1985.

Leading the feast will be four seniors who have started since their freshman debut. Scott Cole, the Indians second baseman, batted .352 last year and was second leading hitter on the squad. Dave Crane, deemed by head coach Bill Berrier, "the best defensive catcher to ever play at Juniata," also returns. He batted .321 in 1985 and led the Indian robbery department with five stolen bases. Rich Howey, the Indian's pitching ace, has a 30-5 record over three years. He batted .413 in 1985 and collected 10 RBI's. Howey and Crane were both M.A.C. All-Stars as a result of their '85 performances.

Steve Poska, The Indian's sparkplug, will be in the lineup again this spring. Poska, selected twice to the M.A.C. All-Star Team, led Juniata in hitting last year. He collected 25 RBI's and batted .439.

"My seniors will be the solid foundation for this team. We should be very competitive this year," said head coach Bill Berrier.

The return of junior Frank Briner will also be an asset. Briner was 4-1 as a pitcher in 1984, but went down with an injury. He's back stronger than ever according to Berrier.

Top freshman that enter the program include pitcher Paul Hayduk, infielder Jim Tomassetti and swith hitting infielder George Zaric.

The Indians had the chance to get outside and scrimmage some other squads during their recent trip south during break. Everyone making the trip got some valuable playing time and the team made a good showing.

"We have a number of upperclassmen returning to our team. Even though they haven't had the oportunity to get outside much they have been working very hard inside," said coach Berrier. Hopefully the weather wil break and allow the team to get outside. The Tribe opens their 1986 season today at Western Maryland.

All Class Night 1986 Wrap-up

by Laura Mumaw

With the theme of "soap operas", this year's All Class Night was filled with the usual rumors, secrets and very colorful characters. Master of Ceremonies, Joe Scialabba opened the evening with a few attempted jokes followed by the announcement of the judges. Performing to a full house, the individual classes awaited the first curtain call.

The seniors were first on the prime time line-up presenting "Down and Dirty with Dynasty." Their play centered around the new alcohol policy and the attraction of the Dynasty cast to Juniata College. Amid the action and mayhem Arnie Tilden lives out Juniata's worst nightmare and becomes the first alcohol related casualty to hit Juniata College. The seniors efforts won the evening for them as they remain defending champions of All Class Night.

The sophomores came in second when asking the notorious question "Who Shot F.M.?" And as they transplanted the characters of Dallas into the fast-paced metropolis of "Huntingdon" everything from adultery to murder takes place. The colorful characters among the cast included an excellent Miss Jane and the fire and brimstone evangelist Reverend Neff.

The juniors placed third when they hit the streets in an attempt to reconstruct the fast deteriorating Juniata College in their version of "Moore Street Blues." A guest appearance by the ever popular and entertaining Dr. Ruth highlighted the juniors presentation.

The freshman met with the usual abuse when they presented "Huntingdon Hospital." However, they did have the opportunity to express how they, and I am sure all other incoming Freshmen, have felt when touring Huntingdon with their song "This is a Boring Town."

A long awaited appearance by the faculty opened with Nancy Kulp as President Binder's secretarty which met with a roar of appreciation from the audience. The faculty's skit "Search for Tomorrow . . . President" included most of our popular and not so popular faculty and administration.

Moonshiner's Successful

by Joe Scialabba

An overflow crowd enjoyed the debut of "The Moonshiner's Still" Saturday night in Totem Inn. The event was sponsored by Center Board, and replaced the traditional All Class Night dance.

The band "219" and New York comedian George Friedhoffer entertained the crowd throughout the evening while student volunteers waited on tables. Students enjoyed a variety of drinks and food items from the new Tote menu.

"We were pleased with the turnout," said Center Board chairperson, Ginny Krall. "We appreciate all the work from the volunteers, and hope that we can have similar events in the future."

Tote was filled to the brim several times throughout the evening, with students standing in the doorways because of the crowd.

The band played a variety of poplar hits, including songs by John Cougar Mellencamp, Glenn Frey and Bruce Springsteen.

Although a little more crude than expected, comedian Friedhoffer performed a variety of sets combining magic, jokes and general comedy.

Center Board hopes to present the "Still" at least one more time this term, if not more. Don't miss out on the next chance to visit Juniata's "Moonshiner's Still."

Career Fair Coming

Career Fair will be held Wednesday, April 9th between 11:00 and 2:00 in Baker Refectory for Juniata students.

William Martin, Director of Career Planning and Placement, expects it to be a big benefit to the students. When asked what the students should know about Career Fair, he said, "They can ask these people, informally over lunch, what their job entails. Since careers are constantly in change, these people can give a current report."

There are 90 alumni invited and approximately 40 will attend Career Fair. It is held in Baker in a convention-like setting with signs designating different career fields. Students simply come in with their trays and sit with the alumni of their field. One major advantage to the students is that he or she can get their foot in the door of that particular company or organization.

Secondly, students can table hop by going from one table to another. As Martin said, "The students have nothing to lose, everything to gain." They can ask questions like what the job market should be like in that field in the future. They can also ask what kind of classes they should take at Juniata to prepare them for a particular field.

What fields will be represented? There will be: Public Relations, Marketing, Medicine of several types, Social Work, Geology, Transportation, Entertainment, Computer Science, Accounting, and Education as well as many others. Martin hopes many will attend and that it will be successful.

An Impressive Evening

I left this year's All Class Night feeling a sense of warmth, security, and specialness. Why did All Class Night of 1986 have more of an effect on me than last year's All Class Night? I think there are two reasons.

First, I was very proud to be a sophomore that evening. My class did a great job and deserve to be congratulated. After seeing "Huntingdon," I wished I could have been a part of it. Unfortunately, my "position of power" kept me a little too busy during the weeks of rehearsals. Congratulations, my fellow classmates, for a performance well done!

Secondly, I was very impressed with the faculty's skit. More important than their excellent performance is the fact that our faculty would put the time and energy into performing for us at all. I think it says a lot for how much they care. From many of the lines in the skit, it was evident that they are very much in touch with the students and how we view life at Juniata. (How did they find out about the embarrassed tour guides anyway?) It shows a bond between faculty and students I doubt you will find elsewhere.

From the moment I stepped foot on this campus, I knew this was where I belonged. It was nice to be reminded of that special feeling Friday night.

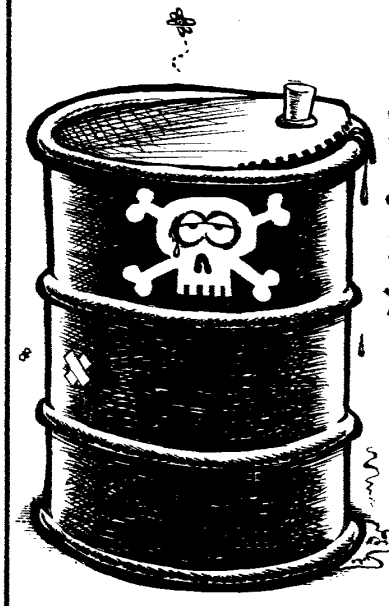
WON'T YOU HELP?



It seems that no matter how many people want nuclear power, no one wants nuclear waste. As a result, there are many homeless barrels out there waiting for a dumpsite. If you or your community have a few acres to spare, won't you fill out the form below? It's a gesture that you, your children, their children, and their children will be able to point to with pride forever.

Yes! I want to adopt ____ barrels of nuclear waste!

Student Support for Edgar

Editor,

We are writing to you as students concerned about the future of Pennsylvania and the future of our nation. We believe there needs to be a change in our government in order to serve the needs of educators, students, and the entire country, more responsibly and compassionately.

Bob Edgar, after 12 years in the U.S. House of Representatives, has the experience and commitment to make those necessary changes.

The past few years have seen a shift in government priorities from valuable domestic programs to wasteful military spending. Instead of wasting funds on nerve gas, MX missiles, and the duplication of other unnecessary weapons, Bob Edgar believes that this money could be better directed towards the education of America's youth. He has made education a priority, and he has consistently opposed cuts that would deny deserving Pennsylvania students post-secondary financial aid. We have enclosed several position papers which show Bob's concern over such important issues as education, defense, the environment, foreign policy, and human rights.

We are interested in generating support base for Bob among the faculty, students, and staffs on our campuses statewide. We are encouraging faculty and students to come together and join in our fight for Bob's Senate seat by forming "Edgar for Senate" groups. Through the help of our college coordinators, these groups would provide a grass-roots basis for Bob's candidacy. The groups would participate in a variety of activities and would be encouraged to develop creative means of assisting the campaign. They would hold informational meetings to get students and faculty involved, and would work with other groups in voter registration. They would also assist in canvassing, leafleting, and phoning voters, as well as planning and hosting local parties and events. Perhaps you could host a tea or a wine and cheese in your home.

If it is impossible for you to commit your time to this effort, we would appreciate your sending us the names of a few of your colleagues who would be interested in assisting us. However, we are certain that you share our enthusiasm for Bob, and we look forward to working with you to elect him to the United States Senate. The primary is May 20th, so please contact us as soon as possible (at 215-565-1166) so that we can help you establish an "Edgar for Senate" group on your campus!

Sincerely,

ACN Reaffirms JC Spirit

Dear Editor,

Once again, All Class Night was a highlight of my year at Juniata. But this year, thanks to the faculty and staff, All Class Night was even more special.

After their skit, I walked away with such a great feeling : this is what Juniata is all about - this is what makes it so wonderful. The faculty and staff care . . . care enough to memorize a few lines, act a little silly. They show they are in touch with the students. They can laugh at us. . . and themselves.

I would just like to thank the faculty and staff for reaffirming my belief that Juniata is special. We have people here who care!

I hope this spirit will continue next year and beyond.

Thanks,
Stephanie Seidle

Dr. Jay Buchanan

It is important for all of us from time to time to step back, take stock of ourselves and our situation and ask the question, "Are things really the way I want them to be?" Unfortunately, many people are so caught up in maintaining the status quo that they rarely, if ever, engage in any self-reflection or self-examination. Furthermore, many people do not perceive that they, and not others, are generally responsible when things do not go as expected or the way they wanted them to go.

Most of us are familiar with the psychological construct referred to as locus of control. Some individuals are externals while others are internals. Regarding the former, those with an external focus of control believe that they do not have much control over their lives.

Additionally, externals take the view that others, whom they perceive to be more powerful, have control. Chance forces and luck are critical characteristics of those with an esternal locus of control.

On the other hand, internals believe that they have control over their lives. They believe that what they do makes a difference. Chance forces or luck do not play a major role in what happens to them.

The difference, then, between internals and externals centers on control. Researchers contend that individuals who subscribe to the view that they are in control of what happens in their lives are in better mental health than their externally oriented colleagues.

There appears to be ample support that those who are internally oriented have a greater chance of success in leading a more healthy, self-managed life style.

The point of all this is that individuals can learn to shift their locus of control from an external orientation to an internal orientation. Next week we will discuss ways to do just that.

This college can be so . . . STUPIIID! There are so many cases where the college, or someone with power vested by the college, or some associate of the college displays STUPIIIDITY!

You want examples? I've got a million of 'em. Let's start with my personal favorite, FOOD SERVICE. It's the middle of the term, and suddenly they're checking I.D.'s. If you don't have yours, you walk. I'm sure there's just thousands of people who sneak into Baker everyday. Why, just last week, 3 townies tunnelled into Baker to "enjoy" a free meal. Everyday in line I see many shady looking characters in trench coats trying to blend into the crowed. Gee, I'm glad we're so protected. Hallmark must have lost, oh, at least $5.00 last term on people sneaking in; money which could be put to good use, like to buy some more pre-processed SLOP. I guess the school's so big, the line checkers can't recognize students. Why does this happen? Because they're STUPPIIID!

The campus is falling apart, literally. What is the college doing about it? Laying off the Blue Army. That's right, there's only one carpenter and one painter left. The ceiling is collapsing in the Ranch. The new Kennedy Sport and Rec. Center is already falling apart. The poor East House resident's sex life is taking a nose dive because they have to take cold showers every morning. So what should we do? Lay off the repair staff. STUPPIIID!

Last weekend was admission's Open House. The powers that be informed residents of 2nd Cloister that they must remove their Bud sign from the side of the building. Yes, all the parents came up thinking they were going to Messiah College. How naive do they think parents are? S-T-U-P-I-D!

Recently we were hitting practice golf balls around campus. Ram-Rocco got the drop on us and informed us we could hit any balls around campus (even his). According to that bible of the Juniata Judiciary, this action was illegal. Who's right? Who cares, it's STUPPIIID!

Wayne Justham was a good man. He "retired". Now we have to see Arnie by 3:00 to sign out lounges for the weekend. Who plans that far ahead? We rarely know what we're doing the next hour, never mind the next day. Whoever or whatever caused Wayne to leave, messed up a good system. Totally STUPPIIID!

I'll bet most of you can think of a hundred college stupidities. So write them down and send them to Fredrick M. Binder, Juniata College, Huntingdon, PA 16652. This reminds me of an army marching cadence; seven more weeks and we'll be through, I'll be glad, and so will you. Thank God!

Apartheid Awareness Week To Promote Understanding

by Helen Bailey

Juniata College devoted last week, March 16 through 20 to Apartheid Awareness. The idea came from a small group of students concerned about the issue of Appartheid in South Africa.

The main focus of the awareness program was the lecture by Jerry Herman of the American Friends Service Committee. The event was relatively well attended.

The week began Sunday at dinner in the lobby of Ellis Hall with the showing of the 'Sun City' video. 'Sun City' is an independant venture by artists of international fame known as "Artists United Against Apartheid," coming together to record an album. They stated that until the system of Apartheid is abolished, none of the artists involved will play at 'Sun City'. The showing of the forty-five minute video was to provide an impact for the beginning of the week's events.

A movie, "Generations of Resistance", was shown Sunday evening, tracing the history of South Africa and the Apartheid Regime. The film highlighted the 300 year struggle of the Apartheid rebels and illustrated the atrocities committed in repressing the black resistance. The movie was emotional as well as thought—provoking.

Monday evening the video "The Afrikaaner Experience" was shown. This focused on the historical context of the white Afrikaaner in South Africa. The whites seemingly condone the unjust situation that lies in their lands.

Tuesday night was devoted to the reading of three speaches. The first was an exerpt from South Africa's President Botha, from a speech delivered on August 15, 1985. Botha defended the position of his government and says, 'to destroy White South Africa and this country will drift into factions, strife, chaos and poverty. The emphasis of the speech was on the violence of a group of blacks, who are exceedingly frustrated at the continuing worsening of the situation. Botha stressed that in order for anything to get better, there must be no outside interference.

The second speech was taken from an interview in Time Magazine in 1979. The message was that blacks are allowed to be equals, but not if it threatens the lives of whites. South Africa is strong against outside pressure and will crush anyone attempting to overthrow the government, it was stated.

The third speech was that of the jailed African National Congress leader Nelson Mandela. This was his defense used in 1964 in front of the Pretoria Supreme Court when charged with sabotage.

The speech contained Mandela's international stance and the situation as he saw it in the country at the time. Mandela said that black Africans want to be part of the general population, being granted equal political rights—which they are still denied. The A.N.C. will continue fighting against racism until Apartheid is abolished and will continue beyond this.

Violence is only used because all lawful means of action are denied, and it is possible that nothing can be done sithout violence. Mandela concludes by admitting that the ideal is one for which, if need be, he is prepared to die.

What are the students reactions to Apartheid Awareness week and the issues involved?

—"I don't know, I don't care."

—"It was cool, but people got a little too happy about it."

—"Apartheid sucks."

—"I saw the signs but didn't participate in anything."

—"I think it is a good idea to let students be aware."

—"To tell you the truth I'm extremely indifferent to the subject."

—"It's a very primitive policy."

—"I don't know why they're making such a big deal out of it."

—"It's wrong but I don't have the time to go against it."

—"It's complex."

All comments taken from students in North Hall and Sherwood Hall between 8:45 and 9:30 on Sunday evening.

A new face has appeared on the rock-n-roll scene. His name is Charlie Sexton and his debut album, produced by MCA records is simply titled "Charlie Sexton."

His story is quite amazing. For starters, he's only seventeen years old. Receiving his first guitar at age fourteen, he's obviously been at it for many years. His first onstage performance was at age thirteen. He played clubs all through high school and was finally noticed by MCA records. He was immediately signed. It seems MCA made the right decision; his album has been a great success so far with the first single "Beat's So Lonely" climbing into the top ten on the charts.

Most of the songs are originals. The first side begins with "Impressed." This is an upbeat dance song with a strong drum line and Sexton's almost yearning vocals. The second song is the current hit single "Beat's So Lonely." The last song on the first side is a ballad called "Hold Me." Sexton's voice in this song is almost reminiscent of Elvis Presley. The song even has a fifties sound to it, but with Sexton's vocals and guitar work, it is definitely original and refreshing.

The second side to this song is more of the same impressive hard-hitting guitar work and deep distinctive vocals. The highlights on side two are definitely "Tell Me" and "Space."

Kim Ross and Cary Larrick (sophomores): "We like Tote's new atmosphere and food changes. This will probably attract more people."

Lisa Clapper (junior): "I think it is a great idea to have different sizes and new products. It was a needed change."

Ken Kramer (senior): "It's good to see creativity in the new foods they offer.

Students Polled

by Lisa Clapper

A study on how Juniata students use their time was conducted by Dr. Duane Stroman's Social Science Research class last term.

The student body was represented through a systematic random sample of one out of every fifteen students listed in the student directory which translates to seven percent of the Juniata College student population.

There were sixteen students in the class that conducted the study through interviews with students chosen to represent the student body. General questions concerning class, sex, POE, athletic activities, and campus employment were asked. Specific questions about time spent in class and labs, for meals, sleeping, studying and for leisure activities were included in the study.

Several interesting findings resulted from the gathered and analyzed information. Sophomores study the most of the four classes with an average of 22.9 hours a week. The Junior Class studies an average of 22.5 hours a week while the seniors average 18.6 hours a week and the freshmen average 18.3 hours per week.

Of the students surveyed, 85.7% were taking three classes while 7.1% were taking four classes. Only 1.4% were taking one class and 5.7% were taking two classes.

Students were asked to identify their classes' departments. The Social Science Department accounted for 34.8% of the courses with an almost equal amount of courses from the humanities while the remaining 29.5% of the courses were in the natural sciences.

Other general facts include: 51.1% of the surveyed students do not skip any class hours in a typical week and 21.4% skip one class hour per week; the average time spent studying outside of class was 20.7 hours; the average time spent personally ("goofing off") was 42.2 hours per week, 1.53 hours per day were spent for meals, and six hours per week were spent on exercising.

Misrepresentations of class (34.2% of surveyed students were freshmen) and sexes (42.9% of surveyed students were women) did slightly affect the study results.

A Week To Celebrate Language

by Laura Mumaw

Foreign Language Week began Monday and will continue throughout the rest of the week. This week is sponsored by the Foreign Language Department and its purpose is to make the students aware of the other nations of the world outside our own.

The colorful display of flags which are being flown outside of the Humanities Center represent each country that shares in a foreign exchange program with Juniata College, and are also meant to be a reminder of the Juniata students which are studying there now.

Give Blood

by Jennifer Nicholson

The final Residential Life Committee Bloodmobile of the year will be on Wednesday, April 2, on the Mezzanine of the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center.

Juniata competes with other small colleges in the northeastern area for the highest number of units of blood donated. In the past, Juniata's donations reached a peak at 110 units and usually average donations from only ten percent of the student body, according to Paul Peditto, Residential Life Committee member.

The Residential Life Committee plans to give the residence hall floor with the highest percentage of participation a free pizza party. Students are encouraged to sign up in their residence halls or to stop by the Mezzanine between 11 a.m. and 5 p.m. on Wednesday to give blood.

States Government. Several stabbings, rock-throwing and battles between pickets and American servicemen were reported soon after strikers set up barricades at entrances to several bases.

Rear Admiral Carroll to Speak on Proposed Moritorium

The Soviet Union's proposed moritorium on all nuclear weapons testing will be the topic of discussion when Rear Adm. Eugene J. Carroll, Jr., USN (Ret.) visits Juniata College Tuesday, April 1 to deliver the next World Affairs Lecture.

Carroll, who now serves as deputy director of the Center for Defense Information in Washington, D.C., has been very active in the negotiations which encouraged the Soviet Union to announce the nuclear weapons testing moritorium on Aug. 6. The moritorium was originally set to expire Jan. 1 but the Soviets extended it to April 1, the date of Carroll's lecture at Juniata. As a result, Carroll's comments on the moritorium will be very timely and newsworthy.

Commissioned as an Ensign in April 1945, Carroll served as a naval aviator during the Korean conflict, and served six years with units during the Vietnam War, commanding the amphibious assult ship USS Ogden and the aircraft carrier USS Midway.

Promoted to the rank of Rear Admiral in 1972, he served as commander of Task Force 60, the carrier striking force of the U.S. Sixth Fleet in the Mediterranean.

The admiral served on Gen. Alexander Haig's staff in Europe from 1977-79, and was the first naval officer to serve as director of U.S. military operations for all U.S. forces in Europe and the Middle East. His last assignments on active duty was in the Pentagon as Assistant Deputy Chief of Naval Operations for Plans, Policy and Operations. In this capacity, he was engaged in U.S. naval planning for conventional and nuclear war.

During his 37 years of active service, Carroll was awarded the Defense Superior Service Medal, the legion of Merit with three gold stars, the Bronze Star Medal with combat "V" and gold star, the Air Medal with four gold stars and numerous campaign ribbons for service in World War II, Korea and Vietnam.

A graduate of both the U.S. Navy and U.S. Army War Colleges, Carroll holds B.A. and M.A. degrees in international realations from George Washington University.

The World Affaris Lecture Series is sponsored by Juniata's political science department and the Peace and Conflict Studies Committee with support from the John C. and Elizabeth E. Baker Endowment, the Sedgely Thornbury Lectureship and the William G. and Mary A. Nyce Lectureship. The public is cordially invited to this free program which will begin at 8:15 p.m. in the Ellis College Center faculty lounge.

Apartheid Week Guest

by Avril Opinante

Jerry Herman spoke on the situation in South Africa last Thursday in the Faculty Lounge.

Herman is a director involved with the committee on South Africa within the American Friends Service Committee. Herman is an internationally known expert on South Africa.

Herman spoke about the increasing tide of violence which has been rising in South Africa over the past sixteen months. "The South African government, in its violence against blacks, breeds counter-violence," he said.

Herman argued that U.S. divestiture would have a tremendous influence upon the South African government. Herman explained that if the U.S. corporations were to withdraw from South Africa, then South Africa's Gross National Product would decrease significantly. Then the South Africa government would be under a lot of pressure, because South Africa's survival would be threatened.

If it is determined that Juniata does have investments in the country, Herman felt it would be an effective gesture for us to disinvest.

Men's Lacrosse Club Opens With Solid Performance

By Andy Hiscock

JC's mens Lacrosse club opened their 1986 season this past weekend with a strong performance vs. Lycoming. Despite a 0-3 loss, the team played one of their best games in three years.

In its short history here at Juniata, the men's Lacrosse club has gone from a team with promise to almost a memory. The team has always been struggling to scrape up enough interested players to field a team. This year it's a different story. The team is close to thirty strong, and combines both experienced players with beginners.

Senior Jamie VanBuren and Sophomore Mike Scott are sharing the coaching duties. The whole team was able to get in the match this past Saturday, and for many it was their first ever game play experience. A solid team effort led to the 0-1 halftime score. The team is at a point right now that they are usually striving for near the end of the season. The team is already working as a unit with each 'line' getting used to one another. The outlook is very promising, as the team's skills are improving with every practice.

A key to the stickers performance was the excellent first-time net minding play of sophomore Mark Harris. His ability not only to protect the goal but also to clear the ball took a lot of pressure off the defense. The defensive squad of Senior Mike Wojcik, Sophomore Larry Hillman, and Junior Frank Dorman combined to to frustrate the Lycoming attackers. I'm sure that some of the Lycoming attackers were still 'feeling' the frustration the next day.

Lacrosse is a quick sport with a lot of running. Allthough the team is still in the conditioning phase, the luxury of substitutions has already played an important role in the team's play. The more experienced players now can get a much needed rest while the other players get valuable playing experience.

Upcoming matches for the Indian stickers include home matches versus Penn State on Saturday, April 15th (2:00p.m.), Dickinson on Monday, April 7th (3:00p.m.), and Saturday, April 12th versus Bucknell (3:00p.m.)

Mens Tennis Sweeps Wilkes 9-0 In Opener

By Mike Antenucci

The Juniata Mens Tennis Team started their season on the right foot by sweeping Wilkes this past weekend 9-0. The match, which took place on the Juniata campus, was over rather quickly. The Indians closet set of the day took place in a doubles match. All together the Indian slammers managed to shut out Wilkes in six sets.

Dan Corazzi defeated John Patterson (6-1,6-0) in the first singles match, while Chris Savage upended Mark Faber (6-0,6-1). In the four following singles matches Rich Gottschall, Don Berger, Mark Kearns, and Dave Acker all defeated their opponents (6-3,6-4; 6-1,6-0; 6-0,6-0; and 6-4,6-1) respectively.

Wilkes, although, already out of the match, was hoping to win a match in the doubles. The Colonels almost managed to win their first and only set of the day but fell short to Gottschall and Berger (7-5,6-2). The Indians won the other two doubles matches quite easily, with Corazzi and Savage winning (6-2,6-2) and Kearns and Brad Horton finishing out the day (6-0,6-2).

The teams record is now 1-0, with the Wilkes match counting in the MAC standings. The next match is Saturday, April 5, at Elizabethtown.

Fruity Career In Store For Shipp

by John Doe

Mariane Shipp never thought she would be preparing to enter inspector trainee school for the Fruit of the Loom Company when she was dressing up for Halloween last fall as the Fruit of the Loom apple. However, that is exactly what she's doing.

Marianne Shipp had such a good time when she was testing the mens' briefs at Halloween, she decided to spply to inspector training school and pursue inspecting as a career.

Her future plans are to finish this year at Juniata, then start trainee school next fall where she will work one-on-one with the Inspector 12 of TV fame.

Her goal in life is to stretch, poke, and twist her way up the ladder of underwear testing into the soon-to-be-retired Inspector 12's position. "This position was made for me just as the presidency was made for Ronald Reagan," Marianne remarked.

Everyone at Juniata wishes Marianne the best of luck in her new vocation. We'll be watching for you on TV!

"Rondo"

by John Doe

Due to his performance in Jello Wrestling, Ron "Rondo" Hersh was asked to appear on The David Letterman Show on the Stupid Pet Tricks segment. Letterman requested Hersh appear on his show after seeing highlights of the Jello Wrestling match on the evening news. Letterman was quoted as saying. "Is this guy for real? I've got to have him for the show!"

Rondo was unable to utter a response but he could nod his head and groan when asked if he was excited. It was reported that when he received word on appearing on the television show, he became so excited, he jumped out of his chair, and ran, babbling noises down the hall of second Northwest.

A Tongue-in-Cheek Issue

All right, Juniata, I'm counting on your sense of humor with this one. I don't know what compelled us to do an April's Fools issue, perhaps the aura of All Class Night was still lingering in our minds. Regardless, we did it.

Most articles are under the byline of John Doe because we did this issue for fun. It was a joint effort and so we are taking joint responsibility for it. We tried our best to be amusing without offending anyone. If anyone does feel anything in this issue was done in poor taste, please let me or anyone of the staff members know why you feel this way. We are certainly open to criticisms and comments anytime we try something new.

I hope that you will enjoy reading this tongue-in-cheek look at Juniata as much as we enjoyed putting it together this week.

Muddy Run Newsflash

by Joe Scialabba

Huntingdon—The Juniata College Board of Trustees announced on Tuesday several changes for the 1986-87 academic year at the central Pennsylvania school.

Tuition for the new year will drop $900 while the academic calendar will remain in the three term system.

In other academic matters, the Business department plans to attempt to raise the average GPA, hoping to aid graduates in the job search process. Freshman Composition will remain in the hands of professors from all departments while the forgotten Logic & Language requirement will be bought back.

Alan Alda will follow Nancy Kulp to Juniata. Alda's class "M*A*S*H Moments" will require students to watch reruns at 5, 5:30 amd 11:30 p.m. daily. The regular class time will be Tuesday night's at 10:00 p.m. at Dave's.

Athletically, Juniata plans to admit all the players thrown off the Pitt Football squad and as many basketball players from Georgia's remedial program as possible. There are also reports that the Binder Natatorium will be blessed with imports from the West German swim team next year, as the Juniata swim club tries to move from bottom to top (National Champions) in one step.

Also, ground will be broken for Juniata's first outdoor pool on North Lawn, and new on campus nightclub behind Ellis Hall. Of course, there will be the normal stringent rules at both these establishments, but students should get limited access.

The office of the President will become Dr. Neff's at June's end, but only after President Binder moves his main office from Founder's Hall to Atlantic City. Dr. Binder hopes to raise the endowment in a hurry in an attempt to finish his reign completely in the black.

Black will be the new color of the library while Oller Hall will be redone in freshman bong-burn brown. The east Houses hot water system will be sold to finance these ground improvements.

Finally, Juniata students have decided to move to State College and commute, since "The Moonshiner's Still" moved from Tote to Pine Grove Mills, meaninng a mountain has mor social life than out hill.

Wehave truly made the town of Huntingdon look more exciting for our students," concluded one administrator. "It took us cuts in every phase of student life to accomplish this. Our goal was to hit this level on 'April First.'"

Students who failed to pay their matriculation fee will not be given a second chance—or whatever it's called at JC. Alternate on—campus housing (for underclassmen!) has been planned. A model is provided above.

WANTED

Ushers to help out during the week of graduation (May 24 and 25). Please stop by the office of the Athletic Director and submit your name if interested. Deadline for accepting names will be May 5.

iUP CONSIDER A MASTER OF ARTS IN ADULT AND COMMUNITY EDUCATION — IT HAS SOMETHING FOR YOU ...

The Master of Arts in Adult and Community Education (ACE) Program is a leadership training program which prepares students for work in educational settings in communities, schools, business and industry, and social, health and recreational agencies. It is designed to accommodate qualified professionals from a wide variety of backgrounds who seek knowledge and skills to work with adults in traditional as well as non-traditional educational situations. The ACE Program addresses the needs of the changing times and changing student population by providing a flexible yet intensive curriculum with a broad-based approach to contemporary learning. The program offers a proportionate balance of practical field experience, academic training and individual research. A minimum of 36 hours is required for the degree. These include 24 credits which can be individualized to allow students to pursue an area of special interest.

JC Security Force Honored

by John Doe

Juniata College's Security Force was recently honored at the annual Ret-A-Cop convention in Omaha, Nebraska this week.

The force was honored for safely transporting their 750th student from the railroad station without serious incident. Rocco's record was slightly tarnished with the death of a squirrel during the trip back in 1979.

JC's security car was taken to San Jose, New Mexico where it will be bronzed and put on display at the National Security Guard Shrine where it forever stand for the devotion of not only our security guards here at Juniata but for those around the world.

The security car not only acted as a visual reminder of our security force at work as we saw oits blur around campus and provided us with peace of mind, but at many times it proved to be functional (picking up students from the station, etc... (to numerous to name). "That car was great, we'll all miss it!," one security guard was quoted as saying.

Often times our security force goes about their duties without thanks and cooperation from the students. I'm glad that they were recognized nationally for their untiring devotion to Juniata. Their job is as, if not more important than the meal sticker checkers at dinner, and Juniata just wouldn't be the same without them.

Women Allowed In Men's Dorm

Editor's Note - The following article is from the Oct.7, 1955 issue of the Juniatian. I thought you might like to know how things used to be. . .

The Senate, Administration, and Men's House committee have approved a trial program whereby women will be allowed to visit in the lounge of the men's new dormitory from 2 to 5:30 p.m. and from 6 to 12 p.m. on Saturdays and from 2 to 5:30 and 6 to 10 p.m. on Sundays.

If, however, when the program is re-examined after Thanksgiving, it is found that the coeds have not been taking advantage of the lounge facilities, or other undesirable situations have arisen, the Senate, Administration, and Men's House committee have the option of revoking the privilege. The program will go into effect this weekend.

Jerry Richards presented to the Senate a petition, signed by 124 students, to have a committee formed to investigate the existing policy and practice for expressing affection in social relationships on campus.

WHERE ARE WE?! Can you guess where this picture was taken, and when. Yea??!! So could we, but we needed filler. Actually the story behind why this work was being done is more interesting but not reported in this issue.

Letter Sent To Trustees

by Mary McDougall

A letter addressing the possible existence of college investments in South Africa was approved at the Student Government meeting Tuesday, March 25 and will be sent to the Board of Trustess at their next meeting.

The Senate voted unanimously to approve the letter which requests a statement from the trustees regarding the issue of South African investments.

Part of the letter, composed by seniors Lynn Basham and Mike Wojcik and freshman Amy Coursen, reads, "A great deal of unanswered questions have been posed to the Student Government, and as a representative body of these students, we feel it is our obligation to make the Board of Trustees aware of this concern."

The issue of possible investments in South Africa was first raised at Juniata when a group of students circulated a petition calling for a statement from the college administration. Recently, an "Apartheid Awareness' group sponsored films and lectures on the South African situation.

Award Submissions Due

by Andrea Romano

Vice President and Dean of Academic Affairs Joseph Stewart has asked the faculty, administration and students to submit nominations for the Beachley Distinguished Professors Award by no later than April 18, 1986. It should be delievered to his office, written on paper with a supporting statement based on some criteria. Students should consider a professor's knowledge, understanding, interest and demonstration of the subject. Those who wish to participate are asked to consider the teacher's contributions to the college and his or hers participation in organizations and research.

Once the nominations come in, President Binder; Dr. Stewart; President of Student Government Danielle Rupp; and Dr. Zimmerer will select the winner.

Dr. Stewart has distributed information and added criteria through the mail. If more information is needed, students can go to his office to pick up another memorandum. Much participation is anticipated.

New Curriculum Proposed By Review Committee

by Jennifer Nicholson

A new curriculum has been proposed by the Curriculum Review Committee.

The Committee, headed by Dr. Joseph Stewart, Vice President and Dean of Academic Affairs, presented the final rough draft of the new curriculum to the faculty at a meeting on April 2.

Upon hearing faculty reactions and opinions, the Committee will present a final draft to the faculty to be voted on before the end of this month. If the proposed curriculum is accepted by a majority vote, it will be put into effect in the Fall Term of 1987 with the 1987 freshman being the first class expected to abide by the new curriculum.

The proposed curriculum includes a Liberal Arts requirement which requests students take at least one course in each of the following areas: Arts, Humanities, Social Sciences, Natural Sciences, and International Studies. There will be specified lists of which courses will fulfill these requirements. These required courses can also be applied to the student's POE.

Students will also be required to take one course in the study of ethical values and one course in the integrative examination of a culture, or a significant issue.

A Communications requirement of English I and II for freshmen and three approved courses to be taken thereafter has been proposed. Students will also be required to take one course that emphasizes computer usage before the end of their sophomore year.

Additionally, guidelines for the POE will be affected. These changes include a list of all Programs of Emphasis to be authorized by the designed by the departments and authorized by the Academic Planning Committee. A student may design an individual POE and present it to the Committee on Individual Programs to be evaluated for approval.

According to Dean Stewart, one of the reasons for the revision of the Liberal Arts requirement is that the current definition of Expressive, Analytical, and Historical/Cultural does not lend itself to "as broad a background in Liberal Arts" as much as the Committee feels it should. Although Dean Stewart noted that majority of Juniata students graduate with a good background in Liberal Arts, there are a few who are able to get through the system without that background.

Another major reason for the revised curriculum is a desire for stronger communication skills among students. "That reason, more than any other, has generated faculty support for the change," commented Dean Stewart. Dean Stewart feels this change is most important because while most students will not feel the effects of the Liberal Arts requirement in most cases, every student will be affected by the increased communications skills, particularly writing skills.

The Committee decided to make individual POEs more structured out of a concern that students graduate with a well coordinated academic program, studying a subject in depth. Dean Stewart expects only those students with unusual individual programs to be directly affected by this change.

Other members of the Curriculum Review Committee inlcude: Dr. Hochberg, Professor Peterson, Dr. Wagoner, Dr. Drews, Dr. Rockwell, and Dr. Norris.

Editorial

Tonight's The Night!

Well, Spring Term is well underway and with it comes the afternoons in the sun, hackey sack, frisbee, golf, and JC special events.

Aside from these activities, another popular topic of interest and much discussion is room draw. Where are you going to live and with who? What is your selection number?

Tonight the much anticipated event begins in Alumni Hall with the drawing for multiple occupancy. The past several weeks have presented many students with several problems. There are some who have everything arranged to everyone's satisfaction. Then there are those who were rudely awakened, asking themselves "What am I going to do?"

Friendships are truly tested during this time — many begin to wonder who their friends really are. Doesn't it make you slightly uneasy imagining what it feels like not to have a roommate?

There seems to be another topic of discussion, or rather, complaint by students desiring multiple occupancy. The RA selection process certainly does not make their lives any easier. The general consensus seems to relay a message that the announcement of new RA's should be made several days earlier to avoid the hassles of developing alternate lists and plans that involve these candidates.

Next week, things will be relatively back to normal, spring fever and all. Then everyone's attention will turn to plans for Mud Volleyball, Raft Regatta "crews" and trips to the lake.

Counselor's Corner

Dr. Jay Buchanan

In the last column we discussed the concept of locus of control and how our individual orientation, either internal or external, plays a key role in perceptions and behaviors.

The evidence suggests that internals are generally more healthy and self-directed while externals look to powerful others, fate, and luck as major determinants of behavior. In other words, internals appear to be more in control of their environment than their externally-oriented counterparts. What follows are a few suggestions to help shift from an external locus of control to a much more healthy and satisfying internal locus of control.

—Commitment can be seen as the opposite of alienation and suggests a sense of involvement in what is gong on around us. It also means being proactive and not merely reactive to the events and people within our environment. Unfortunately, many individuals have given up growing and experiencing life and replaced them with surviving and existing.

—Control is the opposite of powerlessness. It is not looking to others to make decisions we should be making for ourselves. Being in control allows us to take the credit for successes but also requires that we accept the blame for our failures. Being in control suggests that we take direct action and try not to avoid situations or deny problems.

—Challenge is viewing events and situations around us as opportunities for growth. Taking on additional challenges and setting new goals will go a long way in helping us reach our full potential. Kobasa suggests that hardy individuals view change as a challenge and not as a threat.

Finally, and most importantly, as we move to an internal locus of control we begin to realize that what we do does make a difference. As a result we learn to live a more self-directed and healthier life.

Shoemaker Hosts Avante-Garde Art

One of the nation's leading avante-garde artists will bring her work to Huntingdon April 4-30 for a special show in Juniata College's Shoemaker Galleries.

Judy Glantzman has risen to the top of the avante-garde art world since her first one-woman show in a tiny gallery in New York City in 1982. Since then, her work has been acquired by several public collections including the Chase Manhatten Bank.

In addition to exhibits in such New York galleries as Gracie Mansion, Civilian Warfare and the Limbo Lounge, Glantzman's work has been displayed in galleries in London, Rome, Stockholm, Cologne, and throughout the United States.

Glantzman's work is both modern and aware of a greater tradition, but very much involved in the "Neo-Expressionist" movement centered in the East Village of Manhatten. "There is a merger between my education, my ideas and what I know about painting," the artist said. Although entirely figurative, her paintings are based strongly an Abstract Expressionist technique: strong color and very immediate brushwork, leaving the process of the painting right on the surface. "I want to engage people in the work and challenge them," she said.

As Glantzman often does, the paintings shown are being made specifically for the Juniata College exhibition. For those wondering just what avante-garde is up to now, this exhibit will answer those questions. "You may not like this kind of art," said Huntingdon resident Nathan Wagoner, a friend

Student Voices Opinion

Dear Editor,

It has been brought to my attention that a number of students were not happy with Nancy's Kulp's try-out procedure for the Spring Play. Instead of living with that discontent, and instead of "picking up their dolls and going home," these students wrote a letter to Ms. Kulp. Strangely enough, within a few days they each received a letter from, not Nancy Kulp, but Professor Ralph Church.

Here is the correspondance from the students:

Dear Ms. Kulp,

We sincerely appreciated your efforts in directing the spring play at Juniata College. We realize the difficulty you must have encountered in casting "The Time of Your Life" due to the sheer number of interested individuals. We feel honored to have someone of your caliber with us this year.

However, we would like to address procedure itself. You are a professional thespian. Therefore, the way in which the auditions were conducted reflects your personal background; an atmosphere which is unusual to Juniata College. In a way, this is a good experience, as it will provide the students with an insight into the "real world" of show business. Yet, we feel that this professionalism is an anomaly to the character of the drama department of a small Liberal Arts College. At Juniata College, the drama department is viewed as an outlet for the stresses of our acedemic lives. The tensions which were created by a try-out situation more professional than that to which we are accoustomed only served to induce competitiveness and resultant frustrations.

In other words, we simply want to have fun with theatre work. We also realize that this attitude may well be a strange one to you. What we desire to accomplish with the writing of this letter is a compromise between our perspective views on theatre.

With sincere hopes of a good spring,

Thomas Kochel	Sharon Dotts
Jani Lewis	Eric Danaway
Rob Boyer	Marji Risser
Karen Behe	Nipul Tanna
Walt Cupit	Brad
Sue White	Newcomer
	Andy Scherrer

Let me say first of all that I am writing this letter with the deepest respect for all those involved. I do not personally know Ms. Kulp. I never had a class with her, and for reasons fo my own I did not try out for the Spring Play. Therefore, I cannot in all fairness criticize her procedures. However, I can and will respond to the letter from Dr. Church, because as an active participant in the college theatre program, I was truly and deeply hurt by it.

First of all, I must reject his statement about a "moribund" theatre program at Juniata. (Moribund means, incidentally, "approaching death; about to die.") My first play was fall term of last year, my freshman year. It was "A Thurber Carnival," directed by Louise Van Kuren. Maybe 100 people came to see that play in the 3 nights we performed it. This year I played Marmee in "Little Women," which Howard Crouch directed. The cast was amazed at the unusually huge crowd of 50-100 people each night!

By this time a group of students, including myself got together and decided to form a drama group which we call A.A.C.T. (All Aspects of College theater). A.A.C.T. wanted to substitute the usual Winter One-Acts with something that the students might really take part in and really come to see! We then proceeded to put together the immensely successful, student-run "Hitchhiker's Guide to the Galaxy," to which a record crowd of over 500 flocked. I'm sorry, but I cannot admit that the program is dying. On the contrary, it is growing.

Secondly, we students involved in theatre know that a try-out is competition. Most of those who tried out for Nancy Kulp's play had also tried out for "Little Women" last fall. Dr. Crouch held extremely competitive auditions, which lasted 3 days and which I personally enjoyed. Other students agree. Again, I wasn't there at Ms. Kulp's auditions, but I know the students who tried out, and it is out of line to say they were only expecting "fun and games." They know they are competing, and they are prepared for that.

Nancy Kulp is teaching Acting II this term; she is also directing the Spring Play this term. As far as Juniata's theatre program goes, that is what she has done in her year here. Her presence alone cannot "bring quality" to the drama program, even though it may lend a prestigious air. One comes to the inevitable conclusion that Professor Church is relying on the fact that Nancy Kulp has a name in show biz. Well, who knows, maybe the Spring Play will draw over 600 people to see it. But I honestly want everyone to realize that it's going to take more than one year of Nancy Kulp to permanently upgrade the drama department at Juniata.

Once again, I have a great deal of respect for Dr. Church and Nancy Kulp. I was not involved in writing the letter to Ms. Kulp, but I would hate to miss out being called a "arrogant adolescent" by a professor, because I let my feelings be known.

Sincerely,
Margaret Gonglewski

Fitness Trail

by Mary McDougall

The Residental Life Committee of Student Government is trying to make to it that Juniata College stays fit.

Work will begin this spring on a fitness trail" to consist of various exercise stations scattered throughout the campus.

"The trail will be completed this summer but at least some of the stations should be finished and usable this spring," said Bob Williams at the Student Government meeting on Tuesday, March 25.

The entire trail, which will be constructed by the Juniata College Physical Plant, will cost a total of $1,51.14. Williams hopes to have campus organizations sponsor part of the project on a station-by station basis at a cost pf approximately $130 per station.

Election Results Finalized

by Jennifer Nicholson

Student Government and Center Board election results are as follows: Student Government President - Danielle Rupp, Vice-president - Becky Hostetter, Center Board Chairperson - Becky Olson, Vice-chairperson - Angela Van Derau, and Secretary - Carol Tomilson.

President Danielle Rupp has appointed the following as Student Government officers: Treasurer - Carolyn Stambaugh, Assistant Treasurer - Bryan Fornadel, Secretary - Mandy Smith, Student Government/Center Board Liason - Debbie Dechert.

According to Center Board Chairperson Becky Olson, Jonathon Valori has been appointed the Committee Liason and Missie Iezzi has been appointed the Communications Coordinator. The Center Board will now concentrate on electing chairpersons for the subcommittees for Fall Semester events.

Hot Wax

On the back of the "Pretty In Pink" soundtrack, film director John Hughes says that "the music in 'Pretty In Pink' was not an afterthought." The reason Hughes picked the songs was because he "believes and respects the artists and is proud to be in league with them."

This reason aside, a really worthwhile album was created. Most people are familiar with only two groups on the album, INXS and OMD (Orchestral Maneuvers in the Dark); but Hughes was not looking for name recognition—just good music.

The album starts off with the current single "If You Leave" by OMD. Not a bad beginning! Suzanne Vega's "Left of Center," with her unique vocals, follows. Add to Vega's voice Joe Jackson on the piano and you have a great song. "Get To Know Ya" by Jesse Johnson and INXS' "Do Wot You Do" are both good songs which have the misfortune of occuring between Suzanne Vega and the Psychedelic Furs with the title track "Pretty In Pink." I'm an old Furs fan and I'll admit the fact that I'm biased toward this song, but it's a great tune anyway you look at it. (If you do like it, check out the Psychedelic Furs') 1982 LP "Talk Talk Talk" where you can find the original version.)

Side Two begins with "Shell Shock," a very danceable tune by the very danceable New Order. Keeping you dancing even more is Belouis Some with "Round, Round." Danny Hutton Hitters does a remake (and a darn good one) of Nick Kershaw's "Wouldn't It Be Good" which is tailed by Echo and the Bunnymen's "Bring on the Dancing Horses." Both of these songs are in the Top 15 on college campuses across the nation.

Finishing up the album are The Smiths with "Please Please Please Let Me Get What I Want." Vocalist Morrissey Croons his way into anyone's heart. Overall, the entire album is great to listen to and equally as good to dance to—one of the best soundtracks around.

Glantzman's work has been featured in articles in such publications as "Life Magazine," "Vogue," "The New York Times," "Los Angeles Times," "Arts Magazine," and "The Guardian" of London.

Glantzman was quoted in a recent "People" magazine article on the Gracie Mansion Gallery in New York.

An opening reception for the art exhibit was held on Friday, April 4. Shoemaker Galleries is open to the public weekdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

by Joe Scialabba

I know this is probably a little off the wall, but it's very late and I think I have this virus that everyone else seems to have too.

Anyway, a couple weeks ago, I sat at lunch with some friends and had a great conversation about old cartoon favorites.

Of course, some greats like The Flintstones, The Jetsons, and Bugs Bunny came up.

We also talked about some "Saturday morning stars" like H.R. Puffinstuff, Scooby Doo, and The Banana Splits.

There was Tom Jerry, Droopy Dog, and Huckleberry Hound.

How about Courageous Cat and Minute Mouse, Magilla Gorilla or Mr. Magoo?

To go with the cartoons were the kiddie shows. Many of us went to school each day after watching Captain Kangaroo. We also grew up with Sesame Street, Electric Company, and good 'ole Mister Roger's Neighborhood.

Do you remember Zoom? It was the one with kids running around singing the Zoom song. "Zoom, zoom, zooma, zoom. Come on and zooma, zooma, zooma, zoom. Come on, give it a try. We're gonna show you just why . . .We're goona teach you to fly high . . . "

They also sang this song called "The Cat Came Back" a lot. "The cat came back, the very next day. The cat came back, I thought he was a gonner but the cat came back. He just wouldn't stay away."

I guess the one show I can never get away from is "The Little Rascals." Not many of us don't have a favorite episode, or two, three, etc. Spanky and The Gang has been a favorite for many years.

Well, as I said at the beginning of this effort, I really don't fell well right now, but these memories helped a little.

Tune in next week for a healthier, more original effort. Same Bat time. Same Bat channel.

Advantages Of Small Colleges

Bigger doesn't always mean better when it comes to higher education.

More than any type of college, our nation's 650 small independent colleges, with enrollments under 2,500, stress development of the whole person. They offer students special educational opportunities including independent study, interternships, student designed majors, accelerated programs and honors programs.

"Students at small colleges have exciting opportunities to explore their leadership and creative capabilities while they receive lasting benefits of personalized teaching," says Gary H. Quehl, president of the council of Independent Colleges.

An example can be found at Buena Vista College in Storm Lake, Iowa, where a "second curriculm program" was introduced four years ago. After being tested for leadership, communication, dicision-making, creativity, and other skills, students are directed into extracurricular activities. Advisors monitor their progress throughout their four years and upon graduation, both standard and second curriculm transcripts are made available to prospective employers. Through this second curriculm program, students learn both their strengths and weaknesses in a variety of areas that are important in making life-long career choices.

The translation of real life experience into the college experience is another way of educating the whole person. Officials at Blackburn College, located in Carlinville, Ill., believe that physical labor is an important part of education and that each student should contribute to the cost of his or her education. Students work at building their own campus and actually have constructed nine of 16 structures.

At Susquehanna University in Selinsgrove, Pa., voluntarism is an integral part of student life. "We wish to foster a sense of commitment to service and to be the community," says Acting President Joel Cunningham. Special residences are set aside for students working on particular service projects that include assisting scouting organizations and church youth groups, an energy conservation project, an alcohol awareness program, an "adopt a grandparent" program, and a program for orienting new freshmen to campus.

Realizing that physical fitness is of prime importance, students at Texas Lutheran College in Seguin, Tex., learn and adopt lifetime health and exercise patterns. A voluntary comprehensive physical fitness program encourages students to develop individual programs of nutrition, exercise and recreation.

Carroll Speaks

by Avril Opinante

Rear Admiral Eugene Carroll gave a lecture on the Soviet Moritorium last Tuesday in the Faculty Lounge. Admiral Carroll believes that the U.S. should join the S.U. by implementing a nuclear weapons test ban.

Admiral Carroll said that the engine for the arms race is our search for "perfect security and complete deterrence." The fuel for the arms race, he said, is technology. And testing, according to Carroll, is the cornerstone of technology. This is because the military will not accept untested weapons since they cannot be certain of those weapons' effectiveness. Carroll concluded that if we were to join the S.U. in its moratorium by ending the testing of nuclear weapons, it would be a major step towards ending the arms race.

He criticized Regan's Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), saying that it is a technological solution to a political problem. The political problem, he said, is the relationship between the U.S. and the S.U. SDI would also violate the ABM Treaty, and this would be a major blow to arms control efforts.

Throughout his lecture, Admiral Carroll stressed that if we want security for ourselves in the U.S., then we must work for the mutual security of the United States and the Soviet Union.

Kulp Directs

by Craig Winters

"The Time of Your Life" is here so don't let it pass by without enjoying it.

This is a rare opportunity to experience a Pulitzer Prize winning play directed by Nancy Kulp, the star who played Miss Jane Hathaway on the TV smash series "The Beverly Hillbillies."

"The Time of Our Life" is a heartwarming comedy produced at Juniata College. The play is a product of 1939, written by William Saroyan on the eve of World War II. This event shadows on the whole of the play as Joe, the central character, spends his time studying the effect of the coming reality on those around him, "and on their natural instinct to live gracefully and decently."

Oller Hall opens its doors on April 17, 18, and 19 and the fun begins at 7:45 p.m. Doris Goehring produces the paly in conjunction with Samuel French Inc. and the help of the Play Production class. The price is $2.00 for those without student I.D., but it will be well worth it. After all, it is "The Time of Your Life."

Flute Recital

by Amy McCartney

On Saturday April 12, 1986 at 8:15 p.m., Shoemaker Gallery will be the place of a Senior Flute Recital. Amy McCartney and Carolyn Fonda, students of Mrs. Diane Gold of State College, Pa. will be performing. Both Students have participated in the Juniata College Concert and Marching bands and together organized the newly formed Flute Ensemble.

Carolyn, an Elementary Education major, has performed many flute and piccolo solos with the concert band. In addition, she is a member of the Juniata Concert Choir and a piano accompanist for voice students on campus. Amy, a geology major, was recently selected for and participated in the Pennsylvania Intercollegiate band festival held at Elizabethtown College. She has also performed at coffeehouses and other events on campus.

The ambitious program consists of major works for flute by: Telemann, Mozart, Chaminade and a flute duet by Beethoven. This Saturday Shoemaker Gallery will demonstrate its versatility in the Arts by hosting an exhibition of musical talent.

Style-a-thon

The Hair Happening Salon in Murphy Mart Plaza, Huntingdon, is sponsoring a Style-A-Thon to benefit the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation.

The Style-A-Thon takes place on Sunday, May 4, from 11:00 AM to 4:00 PM. For a donation of $6.00, customers can get a shampoo, cut, and blow-dry. The regular price for these services is $13.00. In the past, the Style-A-Thon has raised nearly $1000 for different charities.

This year, the money raised by this event will help fund research to determine the genetic causes of and develop better treatments for cystic fibrosis, the nation's number one genetic killer of young people. It is currently an incurable disease that primarily affects the lungs and the digestive system. The life expectancy of a child with CF is twenty-one years of age. However, there is new hope. Thanks to monies raised by events like the Style-A-Thon, this past year saw tremendous strides in CF research.

These advances have brought a cure for cystic fibrosis into sight.

Anyone wanting more information on the Style-A-Thon for cystic fibrosis may call the Hair Happening at 643-5156 or the CF office at (412) 321-4422.

Semester Changes

by Helen Bailey

This week's topic concerns the effects the change to semesters will have on the established events of the campus.

The established events of the college year are all in the charge of the Center Board committee, apart from the first event of the year, the Storming of the Acrh.

Dean Tilden, the Dean of Student Services, is sure that Mountain Day will not be affected.

Madrigal will possibly need to be a week earlier than usual. The semester will end on Thursday, December 11, Madrigal will probably be held on the Friday before.

The Spring Semester will begin on January 19th, the first major college event of the term being All Class Night. Usually held in March, it is possible the date may be either a little earlier or a little later in the month. A possible date is March 6th.

There is no problem finding a date for Raft Regatta, it just depends on the conditions of the Juniata River. The water must not be too high or too cold. Raft Regatta is always held on a Saturday with the tradition of having Mud Volleyball the day before. Thursday, May 5th is the last day of classes so it is possible Raft Regatta will be held the weekend previously. Before that the river is too cold, and after that is the week of final exams.

Anyone interested or concerned with the possible changes that the switch to semesters will make is invited to attend the Center Board meetings.

Small Size Advantage

A growing number of potential college students and their parents are becoming aware of the diversified and exciting special programs and community services offered by the nation's small independent colleges—those colleges with enrollments of 2,500 or less.

"Due to their small size, these colleges can respond with flexibility and creativity to current trends and student interests," says Gary Quehl, president of the Council of Independent Colleges.

More than any other sector of higher education, small independent colleges offer students a chance to be a leader, participate in community projects, travel and study abroad, be an intern, and create their own major.

Host Families Needed For Cultural Exchange Program

Host families are needed for a group of French, German, and Spanish exchange students who will be arriving in the area this summer for a one-month homestay: July 2-July 29.

The program is sponsored by NACEL Cultural Exchanges, a non-profit educational organization. The organization is a member of the President's International Youth Exchange. "It was founded and is supported by foreign language reachers," stated Dominick and Dany-Noele DeFilippis, regional coordinators for the program and themselves college professors of foreign languages.

"The basic purpose of the exchange program is to promote international understanding by offering experiences in family sharing," stated the DeFilippis'. It should also provide the opportunity to experience American family life. "All we are really looking for are average American families willing to share their home for one month."

"Because the exchange is only one month during the summer, more families are willing to participate. However, we also coordinate a school-year program which brings 17 and 18 year old French students to the states to attend an American high school and will need host families for these students too," the DeFilippis' added.

Participation in the summer hosting program involves sharing home and family life with a French, German, or Spanish exchange student, ages 14-18, for a period of four weeks, July 2-July 29. The students all speak English, bring their own spending money, and the organization provides comprehensive medical, accident, and liability insurance as well as transportation to the host family.

The only real obligation of the host family is to share its everyday activities with the exchange student and to treat the student as a member of the family and not a guest. Frequently, the son or daughter in the host family is invited by the exchange student's family to spend the following summer abroad.

The exchange students are individually matched to host families based on activities, interests, age, sex, and special requests. "Part of the success of our program lies in the fact that we spend a great deal of time matching students and host families. It helps when both the family and the student share common interests upon which to build a relationship."

The DeFilippis' stated that they also need homes for the teacher chaperones who accompany the students. They are teachers of English in France, Germany, and Spain and are specifically here to supervise and provide advice to the students and host families.

If you are interested in hosting a French, German, or Spanish exchange student for one month this summer or the academic year, please write or call the NACEL coordinators: Dr. Dominick and Dany-Noele DeFilippis, R.D. #1 Box 177, Hickory, Pennsylvania 15340 or call (412) 356-2269 or (412) 356-7359.

Lecture On Tension

"The Brethren and Higher Education: Tension and Transition" will be the topic of a J. Omar Good Lecture to be held Thursday, April 17, at 8:15 p.m. in the Mini Lounge of Ellis College Center.

Dr. Donald F. Durnbaugh, professor of church history at Bethany Theological Seminary, will present the lecture. Durnbaugh was an assistant professor of history at Juniata College from 1958 to 1962.

A graduate of Manchester College, Durnbaugh received an M.A. degree from the University of Michigan and a Ph. D. from the University of Pennsylvania.

In addition to teaching at Juniata and Bethany Theoloigcal Seminary, Durnbaugh has served in the Brethren Service Commission in Austria and Germany and as the Director in Europe of the Brethren Colleges Abroad program in Germany and France.

Durnbaugh is the author of numerous articles on church history and the editor of several publications on the Church of the Brethren. He is included in "Who's Who in Religion," "Who's Who in America" and the "International Scholars Directory."

I.M. Volleyball Action

by Andy Hiscock

The Spring Intramural action has started, and once again the ever-popular Intramural Volleyball leagues look competitive. Although Co-Rec League (A) hadn't played any matches at the time of printing, league (B) was in action.

This past Sunday, 'Just Don't Care' defeated 'OOH!' in two games 15-7, 15-10. Andi Zavod and Chris Branton worked the ball for the open shot for 'Don't Care'. 'The Wallies' also picked up a victory as they beat '3rd Attempt' 15-3, 15-7.

'What's Left' defeated 'Squad' in a dogfight 19-17, 6-15, 11-6. Steve Heistand had a good day serving and Dee Danilson played some good defense for 'What's Left'. 'Holy Hell' beat 'To the Max's' in two games 15-12, 15-9.

'Anonymous' beat 'Underdogs' 15-2, 15-7. Beth Bence and Andy Hendricks worked well at the net

Four other teams were also in action in (B) League this past Sunday. 'Druts' defeated 'Which Phone' in straight games 15-7, 15-13. Alan Wolf had a strong offensive game and Marianne Shipp made a couple of good back line saves for the 'Druts'. 'Phase Nine' was also victorious last week as they beat 'Scope-ow-Bouzmans' 15-9, 15-9.

Spring I.M. Softball Action Warms Up

by Andy Hiscock

Despite losing a battle with the weather this past weekend, the Intramural Softball Leagues got some battles in among themselves last week as the spring season warms up.

In Co-Rec Softball Action this past Wednesday, 'Phi Delta' beat 'Who Are We's' (7-5). 'Flory's Finest' picked up a win by forfeit over 'Guinea Pigs'. 'Arthroscopes' picked up where they left off last season with a victory over 'Diamond Dogs' (13-5). The Scopes picked up runs in every inning as they rolled to the victory. Lisa Hocker had a solid defensive game, while Cathy Miller had a good day at the plate. 'Tap Another Kegga' also opened their season with a win as they defeated '300 & Rolling' (9-5). Ty Snavely and team Captain Jen Quinn had solid games for 'Kegga'.

In Men's Softball Action, this past Monday with 'Sheetz Dogs' defeating 'F.J.C.' (18-4). 'The Dogs' added runs in every inning of the game on the road to their victory. 'Far East' beat 'Green Machine' (16-4). 'East' added 7 runs in the bottom of the 4th to cushion their lead, and 'the Machine' could only manage 2 runs in the final inning. 'Rudeness' beat 'Phi Delta II' (11-7). Curt Collins and Matt Siegel had a good day with the bat. 'Hang Trout' also picked up a win as they defeated 'Loobamaniacs' (13-5).

Randy Farkosh played solid defense while Scott Cody came up with a few key hits for the 'Trout'.

Last Thursday, 'Not' defeated 'Sheetz Dogs' in a close game (7-6). 'Not' got six of their seven runs in the first three innings, and then added the game winner in the 5th.

'Loobamanics' evened their record at 1-1 with a victory over 'Rudeness' (10-6). Tom Trent and Brett Basom had solid all-around games for 'Loobs'.

Mens Links Action Juniata Now 1-1

Joe Scialabba

The Juniata College golf team came back from an opening loss at Lock Haven to defeat visiting Dickinson 386 to 406 at Standing Stone Golf Club.

The Indians, under co-coaches Diane Strohman and Arnie Tilden, took a 1-1 record into the busy schedule this week.

After starting the season with a disappointing loss last Wednesday to the Bald Eagles, the Tribe handled Middle Atlantic Conference rival Dickinson on Friday.

Number one player Steve Borza took medalist honors with a five two-over 72 in the home victory. Joe Scialabba had 74, Tom Cancelmo 75, and Jim Armstrong 78. Dave Challenger and Mark Howanitz added 87's while Tim Garvin shot 90. Steve West was in the lineup for the season opener.

Juniata hopes to improve on last year's third place finish in the MAC Tournament later this month.

Baseball Wrap-Up

by Mike Antenucci

Within the past 11 days the Juniata baseball team played five tough games. Even though the Indians lost 2 out of the 4 league games and just fell short against Penn State, they are still in the thick of things in the race for an MAC playoff spot.

The Indians started out the 11 day stretch by sweeping a doubleheader from Dickinson College, winning 7-6 in the first game, and 4-0 in the second. Starting the first game for the Indians, Sophomore Bryan Fornadel, went 5 innings giving up 3 hits, 1 earned run, and had 3 strikeouts to pick up his first win of the season. Junior Tom Kelley recorded a save.

In the first game Juniata jumped out early, taking a 2-0 lead in the first inning, an inning which included a heads-up play by Senior 3rd baseman Steve Poska, who reached first base after the Dickinson catcher mishandled the ball on the third strike. Juniata picked up another run in the second inning and exploded for three more in the 4th, increasing their lead to 6-1. Dickinson closed the gap and only trailed by 3 runs going into the 7th and final inning, where a comeback effort fell short by 1 run.

The Indians took the second half of the twinbill 4-0. Senior Rich Howey went the distance for Juniata, adding another victory to his overall record (2-0). The 1st inning was all the Indians needed for victory. A single by Mike Culver, followed by a throwing error, than a RBI single by Steve Poska put the Indians ahead 1-0. Poska scored two batters later when Junior shortstop, Steve Meeker, lined a shot up the middle. Scott Cole also contributed with his 2nd inning RBI, a single which brought Junior Frank Briner across the plate. Juniata was to score one more run in the 4th inning to cap off the victory.

Later in the week, April 1 to be exact, the Indians took their show up to State College to play Penn State. Freshman Brian Riggleman was on the mound for the Indians, throwing extremely hard Riggleman managed to go 4 innings and was only responsible for 2 of Penn States runs. Juniata led 8-1 after 4½ innings of play but could not hold on to the 7 point spread. JC dropped behind 9-8 going into the last inning, but with 2 outs, a pinch hit RBI single by freshman Jim Tomasetti tied the score. Penn State than retired the side and scored a run to win the game.

The loss was obviously hard on the team but there were many bright spots. Mike Culver had 2 hits and a RBI, Poska went 2 for 5 and had a RBI, and Scott Cole played extremely well, picking up 3 hits, scoring 2 runs, stealing 2 bases, and also batting in a run. Cole also did the job in the field making several diving catches. Another strong point was the pinch running of freshman George Zanic who stole 2 bases—Zanic ran for catcher Dave Crane.

This past weekend the Indians hosted Messiah and were swept in the twinbill. Catcher Dave Crane played extremely well behind the plate, which may have been one of the few bright spots for the Indians on this day.

In the first game Messiah took a quick lead, but in the bottom half of the 1st inning Zanic tied it up with a single to left. However, the Indians would use 4 pitchers in an attempt to solve the redhot bats of Messiah, but it wasn't to be as the Indians were defeated 14-4.

The second half of the day started out different for Juniata. With JC ace Rich Howey on the mound the Indians came out steaming, taking a 6-0 lead after 3 innings. With DH Dan Webb going for 2 for 3, and Freshman Amo Cianci going 1 for 2, including a deep sacrifice to center, the Indians were looking pretty sharp. Messiah made a late run scoring 3 runs in the 4th inning and 4 runs in the 5th inning to take the lead. Both teams batted in the 6th, but after the third Juniata out the umpires called the game due to darkness. Mike Culver hit the ball well all day, but sharp Messiah fielding kept him off base paths. Steve Meeker also had an impressive day at the plate for Juniata. Howey went the distance.

Pitcher Kathy Bednarczyk warms up in between games of the women's softball double-header this past weekend. Kathy pitched two solid games as the ladies picked two more victories and upped their winning streak to 5 games.

Girls Tennis Splits

by Mike Antenucci

The Juniata Womens Tennis team looked impressive in their opening match of the season sweeping Wilson 9-0.

Playing in the first spot for Juniata, Senior Leanne Egolf defeated Sheila Buckley (6-2, 6-1). Egolf commented on her strategy, "My main objection was just to keep playing the ball deep and to be consistent with my returns." Lynda Cass beat Jodi Schellase (6-0, 6-3), and Allison Kellock upended Brenda Schaffer (6-1, 6-3) in the two other singles matches. Concluding the singles play for Juniata was Laura Mann, who prevailed over Sue Grove (6-1, 6-1) and Meg Kistler, who shut out Liz Jeffress (6-0,6-0).

In doubles action Mann and Meg Keotler used three sets, and a tie breaker in the third set to defeat Buckley and Shellbas (5-7, 6-3, 7-6 (7-3). Georgia Sanaitis and Angela Orwig handled Shaffer and Gray, winning (6-3, 6-4). The final double match saw JC's Jill Rank and Signa Coblt crush Groves and Jeffress (6-0, 6-0).

Later in the week the Indians were swept (9-0) by Elizabethtown. Sunday's match against Kings was cancelled due to poor weather conditions. The next match for the ladies will be this Saturday when Juniata plays host to Wilkes, starting time is 1:00.

Sr. Steve Poska puts the tag on Messiah runner during double-header this past weekend. The Indians fell behind quickly in game one and lossed 14-4, but came right back in game #2 and jumped out to a 6-0 lead. Messiah clawed their way back and stole the victory from JC late in the game.

Rooney Finds JC Info. Boring

by Jennifer Nicholson

Andy Rooney, nationally-known columnist and commentator (his commentary can be seen on CBS's 60 Minutes), mentioned Juniata in a recent column about the boring information you hear from the radio. Specific comments were "I am just barely a basketball fan and I am certainly not interested in whether Upsala beat Juniata or not. . ." and "If it (the radio station) has 100,000 people listening, I suppose four or five might be interested in the Upsala-Juniata score . . ."

The following letter was written to Andy Rooney by President Binder in responce to having Juniata mentioned in the national column. According to Bob Howden, Director of Public Relations, Mr. Rooney responded to this letter with a letter of his own, expressing that he had heard of Juniata College before and understood it to be a fine institution.

Dear Mr. Rooney:

You are one of my favorite persons. I love your column and enjoy your books. In fact, I am entranced by your wisdom—better known as common sense.

I wish to thank you on behalf of the students, faculty, and trustees of Juniata College for giving us space in your recent column. Believe me, we never could have purchased that kind of publicity under any circumstances. I hope that Upsala is just as happy as we are, even though we lost the basketball game which now will become famous in the annuals of Juniata sports history. We stopped playing Upsala in basketball in 1976! (We do play them in football, however, and generally beat them.)

Please know that you have an open invitation to visit our college at any time (if you can find it). It is tucked away in a small corner of the Allegheny Mountains and when people ask me where it is, I say "not far from Penn State." Huntingdon is a small village of 7500 and Juniata is a private, liberal arts college of 1200 students, equally divided between male and female. Juniata has been around for 110 and does manage to turn out a few good graduates annually who go on to do better things such as medical schools, law schools, and assorted graduate institutions. Some even enter the job market after graduation.

Again, my appreciation to you for all the good sence and good humor you bring to America.

Sincerely yours,
Frederick M. Binder
President

World News Update

by Mary McDougall

Washington D.C., — President Reagan sent Vernon A Walters, the chief American delegate to the United Nations, to European capitals to seek support for possible United States action against Lybian involvement in terrorist activites, Administration officials said. At the same time, Mr. Reagan announced he was sending Attorney General Edwin Meese to Europe later this month to discuss ways to combat terrorism.

BONN — The allied powers in West Berlin responded to the bombing of a discotheque there a week ago with the announcement that they were taking measures to check international terrorism and remove people "posing a threat to the population of Berlin." A statement issued in the name of the United States, Britain and France said the measures were "exeptional and provisional."

Winslow To Re-appear

After cancelling his March 13 performance at Juniata College due to illness, actor/comedian Michael Winslow has rescheduled the program for Wednesday, April 23 at 8:15 p.m. in the Kennedy Sports-Recreation Center.

Winslow's performance is being sponsored by the Center Board/Student Government Joint Lecture Committee. Tickets, priced at $5, may be purchased in advance at the Ellis College Center information desk. If Winslow's performance is not sold-out in advance, tickets also will be sold at the door. Tickets from the March 13 performance that were not turned in will be honored for the April 23 performance.

Juniata students may purchase tickets in advance for $3.

Raft Regatta Coming

by Joe Scialabba

As the temperature rises and spring moves along, the annual Juniata College Raft Regatta draws nearer. This year's Raft Regatta is set for Saturday, May 10, with a raindate set on May 17.

Once again the Center Board Raft Regatta Committee will coordinate the event. Co-Chairman for the committee are Matt Seigel and Joe Scialabba.

Sub-committee chairs are being

I was in the Juniatian office the other day when an elderly woman phoned. She explained to me that a group of elderly women were coming to Ellis Hall for a meeting. Evidently, some of these women have difficulty getting up and down stairs. The woman wanted to know if Ellis had an elevator. I told her we did have a service elevator in Ellis but that the women would have to come around to the back of the building and get the elevator on the basement floor. She wondered if the elevator would be locked. At that point, I told her to call the Information Desk for more specific information.

After this conversation, a familiar question crossed my mind again - Why doesn't this college have better handicapped facilities?

If these women do get to use the Ellis service elevator, they will get on the elevator down in the basement and get off the elevator in the Baker Refectory kitchen. If their meeting is on the third floor, they will still have to climb a flight of stairs. What a classy first impression we are going to make on these ladies.

I have also in the past wished Juniata had better handicapped facilities for personal reasons. My twelve-year-old cousin was born with birth defects that will soon confine her to a wheelchair. She is a very intelligent girl and she wants to be a pediatrician when she grows up. I believe she will do it. She is very interested in what college is like and always asks me questions about Juniata.

I would love to be able to invite her to visit me but it just is not feasible. Seeing the inside of almost every building on campus involves climbing up and down stairs.

Without the proper facilities six years from now, we may be passing up the opportunity to have a fine Pre-Med student in the Class of 1996. And just think of all the opportunities we are passing up in the meantime.

From time to time this column has pointed out the tremendous impact that self-concept has on behavior. While self-concept does not totally control behavior, it does play a critical role in determining how we act and react to situations and people around us.

Sociologists and psychologists tell us that the self-concept is defined as the basic feelings people have about themselves, their abilities and their worth. It is the sum total of a person's perceptions and evaluations of himself or herself. Social psychologist Stanley Coopersmith adds that self-concept ". . . indicates the extent to which the individual believes himself to be capable, significant, successful, and worthy".

Our self-concept is based on the perceptions we have of ourselves from significant others and from our experiences. Significant others, by way of example, could well be influential professors and certain friends or reference groups with whom we are affiliated and to whom we have attached a great deal of importance.

Behaviorally, we strive to do things in ways that are consistent with our self-concept. Furthermore, we seek to reduce the tension and conflict created when we do something that is inconsistent with our self-concept. Failing an exam may be rationalized as unimportant or as an unfair test given by the professor in order to explain away the failure which is inconsistent with the perception one may have of self.

The critical point in all of this is that we can work on building and sustaining a positive self-concept. There will obviously be incidents, such as poor performance on an exam or a conflict within a primary or secondary relationship, that damage our self-concept. But, they can be seen as only temporary or isolated and do not necessarily cause long-term, irreparable damage. There are a number of things we can do to improve our self-concept.

In the next article we will look at how self-concept relates to relationships and relationship enhancement. We will also examine ways to build a more permenent, positive self-concept.

Price Gets Assistant Position

by Mike Barnett

Dean of Student Services Arnold Tilden has announced the promotion of Linda Price from Information Desk secretary to College Center Assistant.

Price's new duties will include co-ordinating the training of information desk attendents, supervising the campus refund procedures for cancelled events, overseeing the Ellis College Center Reception Desk, scheduling of campus facilities, as well as continuing to provide clerical staff functions.

STASH YOUR TRASH

by Mike Barnett

Hey, Bob Seger! We can see from the album cover of "Like A Rock" that you're getting a little gray up top and you and your friends look reals slick in your black leather suits. A middle-aged identity crisis, maybe? Use that excuse, perhaps you fans will forgive you tor the unexpected departure from the "old" Bob.

You start off right. "American Storm" sounds it should have been one a previous album like "Nine Tonight." Maybe a little too familiar.

It sounds like you took the best parts from your hit songs and melted them together to produce "American Storm," but it works.

The title track, "Like A Rock," isn't as fortunate. It's boring, Bob. Twenty-five percent of the words are "like a rock." Also, the recurring background vocals of "The Weather Girls" don't fit your new style. They are Aretha Franklin misfits, repeating every word you say or "ooing" behind your repetitive vocals.

Don Henly saves "Miami" with background vocals, but the lyrics are ridiculous. "The buildings so high/ they seem to touch the sky/ Miami,oh,Miami."

The course is set for the rest of the LP. It's a rollercoaster. Good "new" Seger, good "old" Seger. Except for "sometimes" on Side Two where the scratchy-voiced Seger we are used to turns into a Bing Crosby-crooning imitation, the rest of the album is enjoyable. Your die-hard fans probably won't like it because of your sudden change in style. But to the casual rock n' roll listener, "Like A Rock" is a listenable combination of upbeat/downbeat songs and is worth purchasing. It's good music, but it's just not you, Bob.

Campuses Nationwide Experience Strained Black/Jewish Relations

After the latest in a series of "small explosions" in relations between black and Jewish students nationwide during the last year, University of Maryland students are trying to restore peace in the wake of a Kwame Toure speech.

The speech by Toure—better known to older students and faculty members as Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee leader Stokely Carmichael, who popularized the fist-shaking "black power" chant of the sixties—led to a spate of death threats and racist intimidations on the College Park campus.

"The only good Zionist is a dead Zionist," Toure said during a speech sponsored by the university's Black Student Union, leaving Jewish students offended and frightened by some students' cheering response.

"We want some kind of assurance of our security," says Jacob Blumenthal of Maryland's Jewish Student Union.

Jewish students asked the Black Student Union (BSU) to apologize or state it did not support Toure's stand on the destruction of Zionists. The BSU, however, refused.

"That part of the speech frightened a lot of people," says Blumenthal, who also cited Toure's brochures, which "accused Jewish butchers of selling bad meat to blacks and Jewish bankers of manipulating national economies," as scaring Jewish students.

"That's old and scary anti-Sematic tactics," says Blumenthal, "the kind the Nazis used."

In other incidents surrounding Toure's visit, someone carved a swastika in the front door of the Jewish student paper, the BSU president received death threats, being tounted while on campus.

"We're seeing a spreading of hatred on campuses," says Jeffrey Ross of the Anti-Defamation League's (ADL's) national office. "Individually campus situations are being inflamed by outside speakers."

Ross says frequent campus speakers like Toure and Muslim Minister Louis Farrakhan often encourage the inflammations.

But the tension comes not only from Toure's and Farrakhan's provocative opinions of Zionism and Jewish theology, but also from threats of reprisal from the militant Jewish Defense Organization (JDO).

When Farrakhan spoke at the State University of New York at Albany last year, JDO followers reportedly carried weapons and intimidated students in the audience. The clash between Farrakhan and JDO supporters almost grew "into a riot, and it scared a lot of people," the campus paper reported.

Riot fears were never realized during a Farrakhan visit to Pitt in November, but recently at Penn Farrakhan aide Jamil Muhammad told students Jews were "chosen for that damn hellfire for telling those lies they've been spreading."

"The greatest problem isn't the violence at campuses during (such) speeches, but after," says the ADL's Ross, "in dorm situations and in classes, when people who otherwise would be friends see each other as opposing sides."

"The small explosion are the most serious thing."

"One such "small explosion" came at the end of a fist recently, as BSU President Tim Shaw decked a Jewish student for "running off at the month."

The two students have since mended their hard feelings, Shaw says, and general tensions seem to be abating.

Since then, Shaw, Blumenthal and other student leaders have been meeting "quietly", says Esther Abramowitz of the campus Hillel House.

"We learned an unfortunate lesson," says Blumenthal, who agrees tensions are easing. "We (blacks and Jews) weren't as close as we thought we were."

We have to put up with the same racial slurs as they do," says Shaw.

There even may be more dialogue in the wake of Toure's speech than before it.

"People say we're trying to sever the ties of blacks and Jews. But on our campus, there were none," Shaw says.

"If we want to have any kind of coalition, we have to respect each other, agree to disagree and look at our differences as well as our similarities.

Similar understanding and dialogue grew out of Toure's visits to other campuses.

At Columbia, for example, black and Jewish students prepared for Toure's visit by holding workshops in which stereotypes and group sensitivities were discussed, and participants staged role-playiing skits.

When Toure arrived at Columbia March 4, few students attended his speech, though it drew crowds from the Harlem neighborhood surrounding the school.

Rifts also seem to be healing in Colorado, where last fall Jewish students protested using student fees to bring Toure to campus.

$ Dollars And Sense $

by Larry Bock

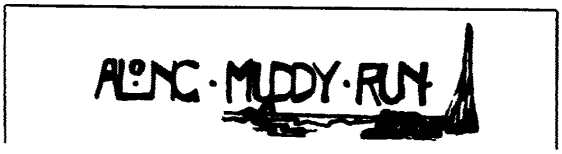
The Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Deficit Reduction Act of 1985 has been called "a bad idea whose time has come," "imminent chaos" and "a planned train wreck." GRH is a piece of legislation that aims to balance the Federal Budget and bring the national debt under control by 1991. To accomplish this, it would subject approximately 30% of the Budget to a series of dramatic reductions over the next five years should the normal budgeting process fail to meet certain pre-set standards. This is no longer a bill or a proposal. GRH is now THE LAW and it's got teeth.

The ramifications of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings for post-secondary education and college students are ominous. In 1986-87, Juniata students will likely see the impact of GRH and declining Federal aid programs in several ways. Guaranteed Student Loans proceeds will be cut slightly with a higher origination fee . . . so you can expect your "$2500" GSL to now be closer to $2300. Also, the subsidy paid to lenders will be reduced, and some banks may choose to not participate in the program next year. But we certainly don't forecast a massive pullout by lending institutions (just yet). At any rate, be sure to borrow GSL money by October 1 . . . that's when the second round of GRH "sequestrations" are due.

The Pell Grant program will experience dramatic reductions next year. Because of GRH and substantial amounts of overspending for Pell Grants in recent years, there will be a significant shortfall in the Pell program during 1986-87. As many as 60% of Juniata's Pell recipients could see their Federal Grants reduced or eliminated entirely. The "linear reduction" that will probably be instituted protects the largest grants, reduces grants in the $850-$1850 range and eliminates grants that were less than $850.

In the long run, we may be seeing the end of big federal spending for higher education. Barring a whopper of a tax increase (and President Reagan has promised to veto any increases), the burden of financing education is rapidly shifting over to the states, schools, and families of the students in our country. Pennsylvania has positively responded to Washington's maneuvers which adversely influence colleges and universities. Juniata will have alternatives for assisting students in meeting our costs. You can help yourself by applying for aid (by May 1) and talking with us when you have a money problem.

I've been invited to do a column on a monthly basis and will use this opportunity to take the mask off of Financial Aid issues and pass along thoughts that may help you more effectively cope with college costs.



By Joe Scialabba

The name of this column is "Along Muddy Run". What is Muddy Run? I asked a guy down at Sheetz.

Muddy Run is a tributary which has its origins in the warm and cold springs of the Northern Huntingdon area. It flows out of these springs, and Standing Stone Creek (maybe), and winds through the shady side and Hollywood sections of town before entering campus in front of East Houses.

At the East Houses parking lot bridge, a large pipe drops in the west branch of "The Run" into the main flow. The west branch used to run above ground before the Kennedy Sports and Rec Center was built. There are rumors that this part of the branch used to host Sherwood sailboat races, nude sunbathing from North, and Fred's first natatorium.

The East Houses portion of Muddy Run, especially when above flood stage, offers the water enthusiast great boating and fishing opportunities of its own. Many a big minnow has been pulled from the brown water. Also, Huntingdon seafood dinners have often featured Muddy Run crayfish. When it comes to boating, "The Run" is the best in the borough.

"The Run" runs its course down past the Weis Market to Quality Beverage, where they may begin to brew a beer of mountain water flavor (but, hopefully not for awhile). Watch out Fort Pitt!!

Muddy Run continues downtown, often underground, until it heads into the Juniata- home of our own Raft Regatta.

The Juniata heads on to the Susquehanna, etc. before Muddy Run hits open ocean.

I guess the moral of this story is thal even small things have a significant part in the large. Our Muddy Run may seem small, but it serves a some minute purpose. Like this town. Like this college. Like this column.

An all-campus information meeting is being planned for next week.

Material drops are scheduled for the week of the event. More information will be made at the meeting, and the rules will be printed in a future issue of The Juniatian.

Anyone interested in helping on the committee, or has any questions concerning Raft Regatta, should contact Matt of Joe, or inquire at the Ellis Information Desk.

Students Speak

by Lisa Clapper

What do you think of the proposed change in the Juniata curriculum?

Dennis Vaughn(freshman): "What's this new trend towards change trying to accomplish? I'm having enough trouble with the present changes. Let's see how these changes work before we make more."

Brad Newcomer(sophomore): "This school is unique in that an individual doesn't have to go through a bunch of red tape to graduate. You can concentrate on what your interested in, not what the school says you have to be interested in. I'm not in the mood for a bunch of red tape.

Jeff Haines and Jennifer Howells(freshmen): "We like the idea of the computer class cause computers are definitely part of the world but the other proposed requirements are unnecessary."

April Evans(sophomore): "I feel that this destroys the whole purpose of this school. I came to this school specifically so that I could create my own major; not take a lot of required courses!"

Mary E. Ritchey(senior): "I think that this change would severely reduce the flexibility that has been Juniata's trademark. My triple major would be totally impossible under that system."

Laurie Fitzgerald and Debi Ollinger(sophomores): "We don't think we have been given enough information about how it will effect our class being seniors when the proposal goes into effect."

Bill Diana(junior): "Why can't we plan our own curriculum, after all we did not pay $10,000 to have our lives planned like babies. Power to the students!"

Elected

Sophomore Rich Brnich was elected as Vice-President the Pennsylvania Neman Province for the 1986-87 academic year.

The Pennsylvania Newman Province, the organization of Catholic students from Pennsylvania colleges and universities, held the elections at their recent Spring Conference in Erie, Pennsylvania.

Brnich, a graduate of Mt. Hebron High School, is a business/accounting major. He is the treasurer of the Campus Ministry Board and a member of the Catholic FolkChoir, the football team, and the 1986-87 Residential Life Staff.

Juniata College, represented at the Conference by students Rich Brnich and Jay Moreau and Fr. David Arseneaulz, Campus Catholic Minister, will hios the organization's summer business meeting of delegates at the Williamsburg Conference Center.

Petition

by Alayne Unterberger and Helen Bailey

Remember the Apartheid Awareness events of a few weeks ago? Since Monday, April 14, the group of students concerned about the situatio in South Africa have been in a petition-signing campaign. All this week in Ellis this petition which will be presented to the Board of Trustees in early May.

This is the petition that has been circulating campus recently. It is simply a request for information from the Board of Trustees concerning the college's possible interests in South Africa.

Show your concern by signing your name to the petition as soon a possible

Stackpole

A $5,000 grant from the Stackpole-Hall Foundation of St. Marys has been awarded to Juniata College for its computerization program.

In announcing the grant, Juniata President Frederick M. Binder said the funds would help fulfill a challenge grant, part of the college's current Century II Campaign. The challenge grant also is for the enhancement of Juniata's $1 million academic and administration computer system.

"Juniata's computer science program has seen steady growth since it was established in 1978," Dr. Binder said. "With the acquisition of the new DEC VAX 11/780 computer and a variety of microcomputers, we are able to offer students a wide variety of courses in programming, software development, data management and hardware oriented subjects."

The president went on to note that computer science is one of the fastest growing academic areas, adding that Juniata continues to enhance its computer science program. "With this grant, the Stackpole-Hall Foundation is voicing its continued support for Juniata and its academic program," Dr. Binder said.

Launched in October, 1984, PHASE TWO of the $20 million Century II Campaign is designed to Finance the growth of endowment for academic programming, student scholarship needs, educational equipment and program enrichment.

Careers

by Andrea Romano

On Wednesday, April 9, Career Fair was held in Baker Refectory during the lunch period.

Different career categories were placed at individual tables so that those interested students could sit and talk to the representative present.

The representatives were alumni from Juniata College. They talked to the students and answered any type of question regarding their profession. They were able to bring new aspects into student's view of a particular career.

They spoke of their work conditions, their responsibilities, and their likes and dislikes about their jobs.

Often the representatives directed the questions towards the students. They asked them why they were interested in that particular profession and tried to clear up any misperceptions.

Afterwards, William Martin,the Career Fair Director, said," I am very pleased, but I wish more students would have taken advantage of it."

He wishes to express to students that this was not an interview. They were not being put on the spot. It was simply for the students' benefit. He was disappointed at the student turnout and he hopes the next Career Fair (in two years) will be better.

There were 44 alumni who participated and each will receive a critique sheet. Their opinions will hopefully give ideas to Martin as to how the program could become more eventful. Martin wants students to look forward to the next Career Fair.

Barbara Porter, representative of the Peace Corps, enjoys lunch during Career Fair in Baker refectory while dicussing all aspects of the Peace Corps with Juniata students.

Dance-a-thon

by Beth Bence

You can rock around the clock all night at the upcoming Dance-a-thon for Cancer.

This twelve hour event will be held in Memorial Gym beginning on Saturday, April 26 at 9 p.m. and ending at 9 p.m. on Sunday morning. Various student disc jockeys will be displaying their talents and prizes will be awarded to the dancers who raise the most money.

A five-to-ten minute break will be provided each hour for refreshment and restroom purposes. Refreshments will be provided through the night compliments of Pepsi and area merchants. Each dancer will be asked to get people to sponsor him/her a certain amount per hour that he/she dances continuously. Sponsor sheets must be picked up prior to the dance-a-thon so that sponsors may be obtained. The sponsor sheets will be available in Ellis Lobby at lunch and dinner.

Have a great time dancing the night away while helping the American Cancer Society get closer to a cure.

If you have any questions, contact any Campus Ministry Board member or the Campus Ministry office.

May Day Planned

by Helen Bailey

Preparations for the one hundred and second annual May Day celebration are well underway.

Mrs. Elizabeth Ann Cherry, Professor of History, will speak at the May Day Breakfast which is scheduled for 7:00 a.m. on Thursday, May 1. Mrs. Cherry's topic will be "A Day That Recognizes Juniata Women."

According to Beth Davidson, May Day Committee Chairperson, the Woman of the Year and the Man of the Year awards will be announced at the breakfast.

The fourteen member committee will nominate five senior women and four women from each of the three underclasses. These women are being recognized for their outstanding contributions to the college and college life. Nine senior men will also be nominated for Man of the Year.

On April 28, the student body will elect the Woman of the Year, the Man of the Year, and two women to represent each of the three underclasses.

Juniata women may sign up for May Day Breakfast tables Tuesday, April 22 through Friday, April 25.

Apology

The Juniatian wishes to apologize to Nipul Tanna for mistakenly including his name on the students' letter to Nancy Kulp in the April 10 issue. We received our information directly from Tom Kochel. Again we are sorry for any inconvience.

Seminar

"Hospital Capital Needs — The Role of Banks," will be the topic of discussion at the eighth annual J.B. Kunz Banking Seminar to be held at Juniata College Wednesday, April 23 from 2 to 4:30 p.m. in Alumni Hall, Brumbaugh Science Center.

Dr. Ted J. Ackroyd, executive director of the Hospital Research Foundation, a corporate affiliate of The Hospital Association of Pennslyvania, will be the featured speaker. Dr. Ackroyd will discuss such issues as hospital capital expenditures, Medicare and Medicaid capital payment policies, tax-exempt financing proposals, bank perspectives and physician influences on hospital capital expenditures.

A member of the Hospital association since 1979, Dr. Ackroyd served as its vice president for health economics and finance before being named to his current position. Prior to that, he was a professor in Penn State's graduate and undergraduate health planning and administration programs. He holds bachelor's and master's degrees in economics and a Ph.D. in health economics and hospital administration.

Responding to Dr. Ackroyd's comments at the seminar will be Peter D.Dilk's, managing director of Public Financial Management, Inc. and H. Christopher Peterson, assistant professor of Economics and business administration at Juniata.

Dilks joined Public Financial Management, Inc. in 1981 and is responsible for the firm's health and educational finance activities. He was formerly the senior manager for Cooper and Lybrand's Philadelphia-based healthcare feasibility consulting practice.

Peterson, a Juniata graduate, has been a member of the college faculty since 1981. He holds an M.B.A. degree from the Harvard Graduate School of Business Administration.

The seminar is being sponsored by Juniata College, the J.B. Kunz Company, Penn Central National Bank, Mellon Bank Central and Unitas National Bank. Many area bankers and physicians are expected to participate in the seminar which will be followed by a buffet dinner at the college.

Punch Bowl Facts

"Punch Bowl" Alcohol Fact Sheet
(Sign-up sheets available from Resident Assistants or the Student Services Office)

1. Alcohol, more specifically ethyl alcohol or ethanol, is a drug.

2. Although alcohol initially (though temporarily) acts as a euphoriant, it is a sedative. This means it is a central nervous system depressant which depresses the functioning of the brain and spinal cord.

3. Time is the only cure for intoxication and hangovers.

4. Approximately 75% of American college students drink alcoholic beverages.

5. Alcohol is the most socially accepted and abused drug in the United States.

6. Approximately 64% of all Americans who drink alcoholic beverages do so without reported problems.

7. Fifty per cent (50%) of all traffic fatalities are alcohol-related.

8. Generally, it takes the liver one hour to detoxify one jigger (1.5 oz.) of 100 proof distilled spirits.

9. Alcohol is not digested, but is absorbed directly into the bloodstream from primarily the small intestines (80%) and stomach (20%).

10. Some studies show that over 90% of the deaths that occur as the result of hazing are connected with alcohol.

11. At least 1 of 4 deaths of young Americans between 15 and 24 years old is alcohol-related.

12. Annually, 40,000 highway injuries among youths can be linked to alcohol.

13. Parental drinking habits are usually adopted by their children.

14. Parent problem drinking may result in youthproblems, for example: guilt; anger/resentment; depression; acting out/rebellion; low self-esteem-/poor self-concept; interpersonal relation difficulties; and chemical abuse or dependency.

15. Rigid non-drinking attitudes have been found to be as potentially harmful as alcohol abuse when strictly enforced in the home.

16. Some studies show that as much as 80% of the vandalism on college campuses is alcohol-related.

17. Blood alcohol content depends on body weight, concentration of beverage consumed, speed of drinking, and speed of absorption.

18. With a blood alcohol content of .10 or more, drivers are considered legally intoxicated.

19. A 12 oz. beer, 1.5 oz. of distilled spirits, and 5 ozs. of wine all have the same concentration of alcohol.

20. Driving ability becomes impaired with a blood alcohol content of .05.

"Knock-Down Shoulder"

Nautilus machines in the school gym, salad bars in the cafeteria and smoke-free areas in every student lounge, it might seem college life has never been healthier.

But one enterprising professor has found a new health hazard on campus. It's that book-laden backpack you've been hefting over one shoulder all these years, says Ron Sendre, a Central Michigan University professor of sports medicine.

"Knock-down shoulder" is only one of the maladies Sendre ascribes to the overuse and misuse of the popular book packs on every American campus.

How can the innocent backpack, symbol of outdoor lifestyles, wreak such devastation on unsuspecting college students?

"A heavy backpack changes your center of gravity," says Sendre. "Your abdominal area is thrust forward, and your shoulders are brought posterior."

"Then a kid will carry that backpack for six, eight minutes across campus to his next class."

In other words, he's got lousy posture while carrying a mega-load of textbooks, and according to Sendre, "there're bound to be lots of repercussions."

Besides knock-down shoulder — a drooping shoulder caused by constantly wearing the pack slung over one shoulder — backpacks can cause swayback, shoulder tension, headaches, even nerve damage.

There is a simple remedy:

"Lighten the load is the best advice I can give," the professor says.

But if one's credit load demands carting 30 pounds of Organic Chemistry texts, the Unabridged Works of Shakespeare and a jumbo box of Crayolas for Art 101, Sendre suggests wearing the pack the way it was designed to be worn.

"I've never seen a backpack with just one strap," he says. Yet that's the way most students wear them.

"Rather than taking the time to throw both straps on, they just throw on one."

But even a properly balanced pack can be a problem for the out-of-shape student.

So Sendre recommends a complete work-out program with weight machines, adding that exercises for flexibility are equally important.

But if all this seems like more health consciousness than one can handle, another study offers a rationale for at least one "bad habit."

Cigarette smoking may enhance students' ability to study, a group of British scientists says.

The researchers found that nicotine, either from cigarettes or pills, increased concentration by eight percent and kept minds sharp for up to a half hour.

Conversations with Haitians and members of embassies give the strong impression that the government barely exists.

HANOI, VIETNAM — Hanoi's attitude to the United States has suddenly become much harsher over the issue of Americans missing since the Vietnam War. Hanoi says it is disappointed that progress on the missing Americans has not elicited "cooperation and good will" from the United States. The shift, which comes after a period of improving relations, leaves open the possibility that efforts to determine the fates of more than 1,700 Americans still unaccounted for in Vietnam may be sent back.

Washington D.C., — La-Rouche fund-raising is the subject of a Federal grand jury investigation of organisations affiliated with the extremist Lyndon H. Small Schools

If you're a student or parent who is college shopping, take a closer look at the education benefits offered by America's small independent colleges. The fact is , the country's small, independent colleges— with us for two centuries now—represent a national resource of enormous power and importance.

Despite trends toward bigness and homogeneity in education, these colleges continue to attract students for some very important reasons:

These colleges emphasize individual attention and personalized education.

As one graduate said of his alma mater, "There was never a feeling of being just an insignificant speck ina sea of students." Small size and a residential setting offer many opportunities to develop close personal relationships with students, faculty and administrators.. to make friendships for life.

-They offer teaching excellance and diverse learning experiences.

Most education is carried out in small classes. Professors teach first and foremost; research is secondary. Special educational opportunities are widespread-internships, study abroad, independent study, accelerated academic programs, and many other innovations offered by these colleges provide diversity and choice.

-Education of the "whole person" is their missiog and goal.

These colleges are concerned not only with intellectual growth, but also with moral, physical, social and emotional growth. This means more opportunities to be a leader, learn moral and spiritual values, take part in internships or work study programs, have a chance to study abroad.

-In these colleges a broad background in the liberal arts is considered the best preparation for the demands of a rapidly changing world.

Unlike specialized education, which soon becomes obsolete, the liberal arts experience opens up all kinds of opportunities. Skills developed in the liberal arts are transferable and applicable—such skills as knowing how to learn and study, to write and communicate well, analyze problems, adapt to change and handle stress, take iniative and follow through with details, accept responsibility and make decisions. . .skills necessary both for a career and for life.

-These colleges offer quality education at affordable prices.

The annual tuition charges at 23 percent of small colleges are less than $2,000, making them accessible to many students who ncould not otherwisw afford college. Costs are less than $4,000 at 81 percent of the small colleges. Close to 60 percent of all the students receive some financial aid from the small colleges they attend.

Small independent colleges are an investment with life-long returns.

Men's Volleyball Reaches Semi-Finals of MAC's

Juniata's Men's Volleyball Club closed out its second season by reaching the semi-final round in the Middle Atlantic Conference tournament held at Messiah College April 12th. Freshman Dan Stambaugh was selected to the all-tournament team.

With the six teams attending divided into two pools, Juniata first faced Ursinus College, who we had not played during the regular season. In the opening three game match, Coach Jessica Fox substituted frequently in order to keep the players fresh for the long day of competition. Ursinus proved to be a good first opponent, but our spikers took the best of them winning all three games, 15-8, 15-6, 15-3.

JC's second opponent was the host Messiah. In the two years we had never beaten them in a regular match, so the team was determined to end that situation. The first game was a nail-biter, but the steady offense guided by setters Tom Hunt and Andy Rhinehart squeaked out the victory 17-15. Messiah came back in the second game 8-15. JC's attacks in the third game by Mark Heinly, Larry Hillman, Dan Stambaugh and Keith Hall, and superb back row defense by Kevin Krause, provided the thrust for the win at 15-11. This put Juniata at 5-1 for the tournament, winning the "B" pool, and advancing to the semi-finals.

Next Haverford, a new nemesis. Having just lost to them a week ago in a bitterly fought contest, our team wanted to atone for that earlier defeat. This was not to be the day. The first game was all Juniata at 15-9, behind the hitting of Bob Davies, Mike Nelson's blocking, and Wes Harpold's consistent back row play. But the Haverford squad rebounded in the second game by jumping out to a 1-7 lead. The deficit proved to be too large to overcome despite a comeback attempt, 8-15. A similar cold start in the third game proved fatal, 6-15. This ended any hopes for an MAC victory in 1986.

In the consolation match against Messiah, Coach Fox had the seniors Mike Wojcik, Wes harpold and Kevin Krause play throughout, with orders to "play with abandon" in their last intercollegiate match. They did, but the host Messiah team was out to save face for their defeat earlier in the day and prevailed in the best of two, 5-15, 10-15. Juniata's spikers ended the day with 6 wins against 5 losses.

Sponser Jim Donaldson commented on the progress made in the two years the Club has played. "We have demonstrated that we can beat the best in the MAC's, what with our regular season win over league leading Elizabethtown and this tournament victory over Messiah. Next year we will beat Haverford."

Elizabethtown College won the MAC Club League Championship by beating Haverford College in three straight games.

Men's Tennis Action

by Rich Gottschall

The men's tennis team suffered their first loss of the season to Susquehanna University. Coach Rob Ash said, "The loss was discouraging because we lost a lot of close matches, but it was encouraging because we played so close with the defending champion in our section." Even though the match score was 7-2 it was actually alot closer, every singles match could have went either way. At number one singles Dan Corazzi lost to Dan Patterson (6-4,7-6) in one of the best matches of the season. Christ Savage had the only singles win with a convincing (6-2,6-2) win over Scott Mayo. The next four singles matches went three sets each, Susquehanna winning them all. In doubles Susquehanna paired their number one and two players against Savage and Corazzi to win (6-3,7-5). At second doubles Fran Decker and Pat Starrett beat Dan Berger and Rich Gottschall (6-2,7-5). The third doubles team of Mark Kearns and Brad Horton beat Paul Sultan and Dave Codely (6-1,6-3) for Juniata's other point.

On Thursday, however, the team rebounded to crush York College 8-1. The only loss came at number one singles. Randy Stoner beat an injured Danny Corazzi (7-5,7-5). In the other five singles matches Juniata didn't give up a set. Danny Corazzi wasn't able to play doubles so Dan Berger and Rich Gottschall moved up to fill the number one spot. They held on to beat Randy Stoner and Chris Roth (6-4,7-5). At number two, Christ Savage teamed up with Chris Glover to beat Arron Brossoir and Roy Bergaonkar (6-2,6-3). The third team of Kearns and Horton beat Jay Driver and Jim Palante (6-4,6-3) to maintain their undefeated status.

The Indians hosted Lycoming this past Monday and will play at Albright Friday aftenoon. The next home match will be this Sunday at 3:00 when Dickinson visits College Hill.

Women's Tennis

by Mike Antenucci

After a 7 day lay-off the Juniata College women's tennis team found themselves in their toughest match of the season. The strong effort by the lady indians fell short by 1 game as they were defeated by wilkes 5-4.

In singles action Laura Beck and Georgia Stanaitis came up with victories for Juniata, while Wilkes managed to win the other 3 matches. Turning to doubles, Juniata found the right combinations with Laura Beck and Lynda Cass, and Georgia Stanaitis and Laura Mann. Both pairs won their doubles matches, however, Wilkes won the other doubles match and took home the 5-4 victory.

The girls played Tuesday at Lycoming and will travel to Scranton on Saturday. The next home match for JC will be Tuesday April 22 when York College visits College Hill, starting time is 3:00.

Men's Track Takes Two Crushes WJ & St. Francis

by Mike Antenucci

The Men's Track team picked up its first two victories of the year by sweeping a tri-meet with Washington & Jefferson and St. Francis. Juniata ended the day with a total of 87 points, WJ was second with 52 points and St.Francis was way out distanced, only recording 20 points.

Juniata picked 43 points on the track and 44 points in the field events, winning 7 events on the track and placing in first place 4 times in the field. Doug Spyad contributed 12 1/2 points for the indians, winning both hurdles and participating in both relays. Andy Zimmerman was the next highest point getter. His efforts in the triple jump, 400 meter run, and relay, gave the Indians another 11 1/4 points.

Other first place finishers for Juniata were: Rick Bouch (100), Eric Mitchell (200), Gino Perri (Discus), Sam Banardi (Jav), and Jim park (Pole vault).

The women's meet was cancelled due to the fact that WJ and St. Francis opted to leave their girls at home. The Indians aiso competed in the Messiah Invitational this past weekend, results were not present at the time of publication.

The next meet for both the women and men will be held this Saturday at Dickinson College. Albright will complete the field for the tri-meet, starting time is 1:00.

Baseball Title Hopes Dimmed

by Mike Antenucci

As the MAC playoffs approach the Juniata Baseball team sees its hopes of making a run at the title slipping away. As of now JC is out of the race, unless a wierd string of events take place. Their overall record now stands at 3-9 and 3-5 in the league.

Last week the Indians dropped two conference games to Susquehanna, 9-1 and 9-0. Starting pitures Bryan Fornadel and Tom Kelly threw respectably, but were unable to stop the red hot Susquehanna bats. When the Indians stepped to the plate there were not to many bright spots. Dan Webb went 4-7 on the day and Freshman Jim Tomasetti went 3-3 in the second game. Juniata left 22 men stranded on the base paths throughout the afternoon, 12 in the first game, 10 in the nightcap.

The Indians played at Gettysburg Monday, and will host Harrisburg Capital Campus at 3:00 on Friday. The next twinbill will be played this Saturday at Juniata, where the Indians will try and take two from conference rival, Albright. Starting time is 1:00.

Golf Team Rolling In Hunt For MAC Title

by Joe Scialabba

Juniata established itself as one of the Middle Atlantic Conference golf leaders last week with six league victories against just one loss. The Indians are 8-3 overall and 7-1 in the MAC.

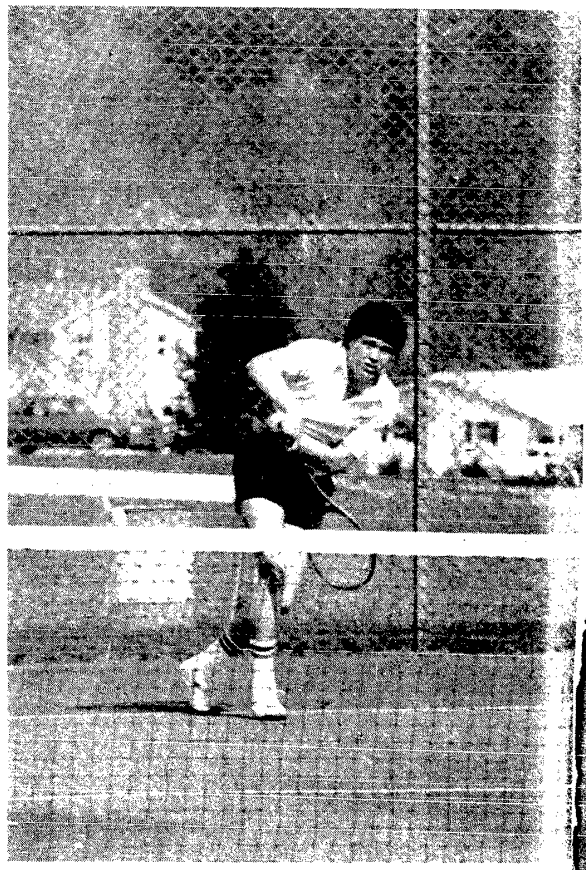
The Tribe finished the week with a second place performance at Western Maryland. Juniata beat previously unbeaten Ursinus and Gettysburg, but lost to the hosting Terrors by just four shots. Senior Steve Borza led the way with a 78.

Wednesday's windswept match at standing stone gave the tribe two more wins, over MAC member Lycoming and Division I St. Francis. Freshman Tim Garvin was medalist at 79.

Juniata started the week with a third place finish in the Susquehanna Tournament. Bucknell (Division II) and York (non-conference) beat the Tribe, but MAC teams Dickinson, Delaware Valley and Susquehanna were below JC. Borza once again led the balanced attack.

Borza looks primed for another solid MAC tournament performance while Senior Tom Cancelmo and junior Jim Armstrong, along with senior Mark Howanitz have played steady. Seniors Steve West, Dave Challenger and Joe Scialabba have also contributed along with freshman Tim Garvin.

Co-coaches Stroman and Tilden will look for more success in the final two away league matches and home finale with Division II power Shippensburg, before the MAC Championships at Shawnee-on-the-Delaware next weekend.



Juniata's Rich Gottshall follows through on a serve in recent singles action. The Indians split their two matches this week.

Punch Bowl Is Here

by Virginia Krall

The 1986 "Punch Bowl" is finally here!

On Monday, April 28, the Committee on Alcohol Studies and Education will once again sponsor this alcohol trivia game show. The event will be held in Tote; elimination rounds are at 4:00 p.m. and the finals are scheduled at 6:30 p.m.

This year Juniata Economics professor Jim Lasko will be the "Punch Bowl" Emcee. Judges are to be announced the night of the show.

Special prizes will be given this year to the winning and runner up teams. Here are just a few samples of what could be won: a Mexican dinner prepared by Bill Huston; Sailing at Raystown with Andy Murray; Tanning Sessions under Julie Keehner's own tanning bed; Waterskiing with Randy Deike; a round of Golf with Arnie Tilden; Swimming at Jane Brown's beautiful pool; a Boat ride with Bill Berrier—plus more!

Door prizes will be awarded to spectators of the final rounds.

CASE has given teams that do not make it to the final rounds a chance to also win honors. Team prizes will be given for "Best Game Show Wardrobe," "Most Authentic Game Show Behavior," "Worst Answer," "Most Team Spirit," "Most Attractive Team," "Low Score," "Best Team Name," and "Worst Team Name."

Teams entered in "Punch Bowl" should study all facts as printed in the Juniatian, as heard on V103 or posted by Resident Assistants.

These facts do not constitute all the questions. All other questions will be taken from campus knowledge of policies and procedures.

World News Update

by Helen Bailey

UNITED STATES-United States action against Libya has been given strong support from the American people, Time Magazine reported on Monday 71% approval with 20% opposing. Newsweek on the same day also reported approval at 71% with disapproval at 21%. Newsweek's overseas polls show support in France of 61%, and disapproval from the West Germans at 75% and from the British at 66%.

TRIPOLI-Efforts in Libya were being increased Sunday in order to show that U.S. bombs struck nonmilitary targets, and therefore failed. "Military speaking, the attack was a failure, completely, and politically as well," said Major Abdu Salam Jalloud, Muammar Khadafy's deputy and second-in-command. Thirty civilian patients still remained in intensive care at Tripoli's central hospital, over a week after the U.S. raids.

DUBLIN, N.IRELAND-Militant Protestants have grown increasingly violent since the funeral a week ago of a Protestant killed by a plastic bullet fired by police. Rioters set fire to two churches, both Catholic and Protestant, and wounded 14 Police officers, in violence last weekend. The next five months are expected to see widespread trouble.

POTSDAM, E.GERMANY-Soviet leader, Mr. Mikhail Gorbachev said Sunday in East Germany that he is willing to meet President Reagan this year providing the U.S. stops "poisoning the atmosphere." He continued that "if the United States recognises that it is necessary to follow the path of detente, the Soviet Union is ready to do so."

Suggestions To Aid JC's Retention Rate

by Lisa Clapper

Was Juniata your first choice?

According to Cooperative Institutional Research Project (CIRP) data gathered during Fall Orientation, only 81.2% of the students attended their first choice college in 1985. This study's data was examined by Juniata's Retention Committee. With this information, the committee has proposed four suggestions to aid Juniata's retention rate.

The study showed 87.7% of women chose Juniata as a first choice and 75% of the men chose it as a first choice in 1985; however, over the years, these numbers have not been so high.

In 1983, only 69.4% of the men attending Juniata picked it as a first choice, while the women were slightly higher with 73.1 percent.

In 1979, 83.1% of the men chose J.C. first as compared to 80.9% of the women rounding the year out to 81.9% of all students.

Another question brought up was, "What is your best guess as to the chances that you will be satisfied with college?" In 1983 only 54.7% of the incoming freshmen thought they would be satisfied. In 1984, 65.4% thought they would be satisfied and in 1985, 58% thought they would be satisfied.

Other interesting facts found were that none of the students surveyed in 1984 and 1985 though they would drop out of college permanently, however 1.9% thought they would drop out temporarily in both years surveyed.

The students were also asked about distinctive vocational orientation. Statistics show that Juniata students were more interested in "getting a better job," and that factor was very important in their selection of Juniata as their college. Percentages of Juniata stu-

"Kiss Me Kate" To Be Staged

One of Cole Porter's most popular musicals, "Kiss Me Kate," will be staged in Juniata's Oller Auditorium May 1, 2 and 3 at 8:15 p.m. Presented by the Juniata College music department, the musical features one of Porter's best scores, including such memorable songs as "Wunderbar," "So In Love," "Too Darn Hot" and "Brush Up Your Shakespeare."

"Kiss Me Kate" opened on Broadway in December, 1948, and had the distinction of being one of the few musical comedies to play more than 1000 performances on the New York stage. It was subsequently performed with great success in Germany and became the first American musical to be staged in Poland. The story concerns the efforts of Fred Graham, played by Juniata senior Mike Derk, and Lilli Vanessi, played by senior Jocelyn Fowler, to rekindle the flame of their one-time love while performing together in "The Taming of the Shrew." The story shifts from the present-day Baltimore, where the group is performing Shakespeare's famous comedy, to Patua where Petruchio seeks to conquer Kate. Lilli and Kate are both won in the final scene.

"Kiss Me Kate" is being directed by Dr. Howard Crouch, professor of educationn Dr. Joseph Figg, assistant professor of music, is the musical's choral director and Ibrook Tower, associate professor of music, is the conducter. Junior Becky Culler is serving as choreographer.

Area residents are cordially invited to attend the May 1, 2 and 3 productions of "Kiss Me Kate." There is no admission fee.

Quick To Open Quick To Close

Have you ever arrived at Baker Refectory just before closing time to find the salad bar being disassembled, the soups dried up, and the ice cream machine being emptied already? I find it inconsiderate when the cafeteria workers are stacking the chairs on the tables while you're trying to enjoy your meal. Maybe it's their subtle way of telling you to get out.

Sometimes there are those evenings when you're running a little late and you can't get to the cafeteria earlier. There are also those times when you just don't know exactly what you feel like eating, so you sit down and try to decide on somthing to satisfy your appetite. Well, this is soon ruined by the efficient cafeteria workers. Just when you decide that a salad would hit the spot, you turn to get yourself a salad bowl, and you realixe there's no vegetables — they've been put away until tomorrow.

I also feel that certain foods should be replenished at all times. For instance, the soups get dried out and this is not fair to those who cannot get to lunch until 1 p.m. to find only noodles in the chicken noodle soup tureen.

There should be a certain amount of time between the closing of the cafeteria doors and the actual clean up. For example, if during the week, Baker closes at 6:30 p.m., clean up should not begin until at least 6:45 p.m. As for the weekends with closing time at 6:00 p.m., clean up should not begin until 6:30 p.m., especially on Sundays because many students enjoy a leisurely dinner before their church services begin.

Troy Has Alternative For Libya

Dear Editor:

Try as I may, I've never been able to get beyond conceiving of myself as a pottery-making, canoeing organism with various thoughts and feelings, fortunate in having a planet to call home. For me, one of the supreme mysteries of humanhood is that concept called "patriotism," for I have never once had a thought, feeling, or perception I could truly identify as "patriotic" simply because of my U.S. citizenship. Now, within whispering distance of fifty, I may have to add patriotism to my long list of life's bypassed offerings: funnelcakes, pastel shirts with embroidered alligators, LSD excursions, membership in the Loyal Order of the Moose, and a visit to the Pro Football Hall of Fame. It's hard to imagine having "patriotic" thoughts about a country which by pure chance happens to be where my parents, perhaps by pure chance, caused me to happen.

After the last summit meeting I thought I might be almost within sight of Patriotica's suburbs, but then the country's highest-ranking citizen substituted caveman tactics for wisdom as a means of dealing with one of the world's super-patriots, thus becoming a blood-brother of international terrorists himself.

If Mr. Reagan, in a moment of elderly misjudgement, felt the need to call out the troops, why didn't they drop bombs full of eggs, Jello, manure, or some trash that plagues our towns? A ton of junk mail or a couple of old DeSotos delivered by F-111 fighter bombers to the town square of a capitol city at 2 AM would make a messy message that even a deranged power maniac couldn't miss. "Next time it goes BOOM elsewhere," Mr. Weinberger could announce.

What saddens me most, though is learning of the death of a child and the wounding of two others, even if their father qualifies as being among the high-caliber insane. The world of adult patriots must amuse and confuse children even in times of peace, but when your sister is killed in her sleep and you wind up flat on your back receiving transfusions because patriots have taken a bite out of your life, all you know is that because you're a kid, you hurt a lot and feel empty.

Is modern weaponry so sophisticated that we can target the children of our enemies? Or are they enemies, too—little enemies? In military terms, is a child's death considered a waste of money, a miss, or a bonus if she's the target's daughter? Are there tiny medals of honor for personnel who, under orders, kill people more preoccupied with childhood than nationalism?

If I were still teaching English I'd assign my students to chose an epitaph for Hana Khadafy's headstone; use that for the title of a paper explaining its appropriateness. If I were a student in that class the words I'd choose are these, from a contemporary Irish ballad: "Another eye for another eye, 'til everyone is blind."

Maybe in the reading or writing I'd discover some things about patriotism

Sincerely,
Jack Troy

Hochberg Praises Production

Dear Editor,

I would like to congratulate everyone involved in last week's performance of The Time of Your Life. I have seen some fine productions over the last sixteen years at Juniata, but none in which an entire cast acquitted itself so amirably. From leads to walk-ons, the acting was outstanding.

Under Nancy Kulp's direction, a group of over twenty student-actors became an ensemble and created something rare and exciting an evening of theater. Ms. Kulp, Prof. Doris Goehring, and all of the students working in front of the lights and behind the scenes have reason to be proud. They set a new standard of excellence for drama at Juniata.

Sincerely,
Mark Hochberg

Report Warns More Colleges Are Joining The Arms Race

A recent report charges that "more and more colleges and universities are enlisting in the arms race" by taking Pentagon research funds, but government and college sources involved in the research say it isn't true.

Apparently intended to enlist students in the debate over the U.S. arms buildup, the report—"Uncle Sam Goes to School," by the American Friends Service Committee—contends that colleges "have reversed policies from the 60's and '70s, and resumed classified military research projects."

"Absolutely not," says Research Dean Thomas Wonderlick of Brown University, one of the schools the report says has resumed secret military projects. "We don't do any classified research."

"Brown, like most universities, went through a tough time (of student protests) around the Vietnam War," he adds.

Student anger over Brown's participation in secret research ultimately resulted in a policy—still in effect—against taking money for classified research.

Most major research universities around the country adopted similar policies at the same time.

The American Friends Service Committee (AFSC), a Quaker group which was also a very active anti-Vietnam War group, implies that more schools are being tempted to drop those policies to cash in on the research riches the Pentagon offers.

The report projects Department of Defense-sponsored research and development will hit a peacetime high of $39.3 billion this year.

In an interview, AFSC researcher Tom Conrad clarified that, while the Pentagon didn't actually spend $39.3 billion on research this year, the long-term contracts it awarded to schools and others ultimately would be worth that much over the following years.

The Defense Department says its research budget this year is $1.024 billion—just 2.6 percent of what "Uncle Sam Goes To School" claims it is—and probably won't exceed $986 million for the next fiscal year.

And the number of schools involved in military research, rather than "skyrocketing," has remained about the same during the past five years, according to previous AFSC reports.

"Uncle Sam Goes To School" is one of a slew of recent studies warning of a renaissance in war-related research at colleges and universities.

For instance, petitions to keep Strategic Defense Initiative research off campus have been signed by physics professors at most major engineering schools, with scientists in other disciplines joining the drive.

And liberal arts scholars last year urged their schools to refuse Pentagon intelligence contracts for classified research on Africa and Latin America.

Students have yet to enter the debate in a large way. And many of the recent reports seem to be aimed at educating them about the "campus-Pentagon connection."

"We have to remember that the Pentagon is not a vast, neutral work-placement agency," Conrad says. "It's still military-oriented. And people are starting to raise that issue."

Students in particular, the Friends report says, should note "the DOD has stepped up controls on its campus projects by excluding foreign students from some facilities and from certain research presentation conferences."

But Conrad, the report's research director, could not specify any colleges where such bans on foreign students were in effect.

The report's source of information, a New York Times editoriall did mention Carnegie Mellon University in connection with DOD plans to prohibit foreign students from supercomputer facilities, Conrad says.

But Braden Walter, dean of student affairs at Carnegie Mellon, says no one has asked his school to restrict foreign students' access to such facilities.

The government, which is funding the supercomputer centers, has asked other schools to impose such restrictions, says Brown's Wonderlick. The National Science Foundation, which distributes much federal research money, wants to deny foreign students access to the supercomputer Brown shares with Princeton.

"We're arguing this point," he says. Brown has yet to gain access to the Princeton computer because of such policy disputes.

The Pentagon itself says its classified contracts also may stipulate that students from "non-allied countries" be excluded from research teams.

But "if it's not classified (research) we have no reason for excluding foreign students," says DOD spokesman Glenn Flood. "We can't get involved with monitoring students."

Though the degree of escalation remains disputed, military research has grown during the past decade and may once again become a heated source of conflict on campus.

Retention

dents demonstrated less interest in "becoming cultured" or "learning more about things" than the norm indicated for students nationwide.

The Retention Committee, dealing with "Preenrollment Attitudes and Persistence," suggests the following:

1. More attention should be directed to "internal marketing." Males in particular need to be informed and reminded of Juniata success stories.
2. The offering of programs and activities, particularly attractive to men, should be evaluated.
3. It was observed that many of our clubs and organizations are dominated by women students. Strategies should be considered to involve more male students.
4. It is recommended that departments and career services personnel jointly develop educational and career planning programs that address the needs of students considering POE changes.

STASH YOUR TRASH

Hot Wax

by Shelley Guest

Yes, there is life after David Lee Roth! 5150, the new release from Van Halen, is a power-packed album with Sammy Hagar of I Cant't Drive 55 and 3 Lock Bx fame as the new lead singer.

The timely departure of David Lee Roth is probably the best thing that ever happened to the super group. So, while David is out on his quest for Hollywood stardom, Sammy Hagar has taken over. The combination of Hagar's dynamic vocals and Eddie Van Halen's hard-hitting guitar work is enough to win over any fan of Van Halen's earlier work.

Side One includes Good Enough and Get Up, two songs characterized by Eddie Van Halen's typical heavy guitar chords. The Sammy Hagar influence can be seen in the current smash singles, Why Can't This Be Love and Dreams. Both include toned-down, dynamic vocals, definitely not the David Lee Roth screamy syndrome. Furthermore, the lyrics, although simple, contain depth and feeling, not usually a strong point in the David Lee Roth days.

Side Two continues with the second single Best of Both Worlds. Eddie Van Halen is at his best on this song. Old Van Halen fans will not be disappointed with this one. Love Walks In demonstrates Sammy Hagar's ability to be not only a screaming rock-n-roller, but a balladeer.

Yes, hold on to your seats old Van Halen fans, there is a ballad on 5150, and a nice one at that.

Well, Van Halen have definitely proven themselves with 5150. David Lee Roth-eat your heart out!!

Punch Bowl Facts

"Punch Bowl"
Alcohol Fact Sheet
April 28, 1986

21. The amount of alcohol in distilled spirits ranges from 45-50%.

22. Women are more likely than men to have cross-addictions with other drugs.

23. Fifteen per cent (15%) of drinkers in America consume 74% of all the alcohol sold.

24. The term "proof" on alcohol stems from colonial times when the strength of an alcoholic beverage was proven by mixing it with gun-powder and igniting it.

25. Women were forbidden to appear in liquor ads from 1936-1958.

26. If you are arrested in Pennsylvania for DWI, you can face a fine, imprisonment and loss of license.

27. Contrary to popular opinion, drinking alcohol when one is cold does not increase body temperature. It does the opposite.

28. In recent years, the number of women alcoholics has increased.

29. Alcohol is a drug and abusers can "overdose."

30. There is a difference between "blacking-out" and "passing-out." "Blacking-out" can be a sign of alcoholism and is characterized by loss of memory while under the influence of alcohol. Someone can "pass-out" or fall asleep from drinking too much.

31. Alcohol causes restlessness during sleep and can interrupt rapid eye movement (REM).

32. The alcohol content in most beers is around 5%.

33. Societies that integrate alcohol into family life (e.g. Italian and Jewish) tend to have the lowest rate of drinking problems.

34. Coffee or cold showers do not help some sober-up. Time is the only cure.

35. Alcoholism is not inherited. It arises from a complex interaction of physical, psychological, and social factors.

36. In small doses, alcohol can reduce inhibitions. But, it dulls sensations during sexual activity.

37. Children are beginning to drink alcohol at a much earlier age than they did a year ago.

38. The ratio of male to female alcoholics is 3 to 1.

39. The age group with the highest proportion of alcohol-related traffic accidents is 21 to 24.

40. Alcohol has almost twice the caloric content of protein and carbohydrates.

Berkhofer To Lecture

Dr. Robert F. Berkhofer, Jr., professor of history at the University of Michigan, will present the annual Will Judy Lecture at Juniata College Tuesday, April 29 at 8:15 p.m. in the faculty lounge of Ellis College Center.

A member of the University of Michigan faculty since 1973, Berkhofer will speak on the topic "A Changing American Past."

Berkhofer received his B.A. degree from the State University of New York, Albany, and his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Cornell University.

In addition to the University of Michigan, Berkhofer has taught at the University of Wisconsin, University of Minnesota, Ohio State University and University of Florida, Gainesville. He is currently a consultant for the National Endowment for the Humanities and serves on the Board of Editors of the "Journal of Historical Geography."

The author of numerous publications and articles, Berkhofer has written extensively on American Indians and is the author of the book "The White Man's Indian: Images of the American Indian from Columbus to the Present." Berkhofer is currently working on two books: "The Irony of Metahistory: Post-Modern Dilemmas and Choices" and "Conceiving a New American Past: A Critical History."

The public is invited to attend Berkhofer's lecture which is made possible by an endowment from the late Will Judy, a 1911 Juniata graduate.

A valedictorian of the Hamilton School of Law, Judy practiced law briefly in Chicago and served in the Army during World War I, rising to the rank of captain and receiving the Silver Star.

Lobbyists Visit D.C.

by Helen Bailey

The Juniata College activists are at it again. Who else would willingly be out of bed by 5:30 in the morning on a day of pouring rain, ready to eat a breakfast of Baker bagels and donuts to experience a day of lobbying in Washington, D.C.?

Arriving in Washington an hour later than planned, the group of 35 students began the day of lobbying at the Calvary Baptist Church in Chinatown where they received information and a briefing.

Organized by UCAM, United Campuses to Prevent Nuclear War, the main event of the day was a march down Pennsylvania Avenue to the Capitol Building followed by a rally. The March aimed to symbolize the inability of the Strategic Defense Initiative or 'Star Wars' program to protect the American population.

The March was led by Chris Blanchard and Mike Shapiro, both Juniata freshmen. They carried a banner reading "Star Wars is a leaky shield."

Symbolizing the ineffectiveness of SDI and due to the rain, many of the marchers carried leaky umbrellas.

"I'd always heard about marches like that," commented Blanchard, who thought the March was a good show of unity. "It was a demonstration," he said, "but it had a lot of law and order." He said that he realized that "you don't have to throw rocks and bottles." He remarked that the police did a great job, and that it was good to see students together from all over the country. He did think, though, that it would have been a lot more impressive if there were even more people.

According to William Hofelt, Assistant Professor of English and Juniata's faculty representative, there were 500-600 students on the March, Juniata apparently having the largest turnout of any college in the nation.

With chants of "1, 2, 3, 4, we don't want a nuclear war" followed by "2, 4, 6, 8, I don't want to radiate," the marchers converged on the West Terrace of the Capital and were addressed by Mr. Sanford Gottlieb, Executive Director of UCAM.

Briefly, he spoke on the necessity of public support and the need to take the day's action back to the nation's campuses.

Pat Shroeder, a Democratic Congressman from Colorado, spoke on her support for the comprehensive test ban treaty saying that if we live by the notion of 'an eye for an eye,' we are all going to be blind. Her message to the students was to "get involved in Politics."

Republican Representative Bill Green also endorsed the test ban saying that if the United States refuses to abide by the ban and continues developing SDI, then the Soviet Union will do the same.

Jim Leach, Republican Representative from Iowa, agrees that the only way to stop proliferation of the Arms Race is by abiding by the test ban.

Another Representative from UCAM said that there are too many weapons in the world. The Soviet Union has 20,000, the United States has 30,000. All this amounts to 6,000 pounds of TNT per person and Reagan believes we need an 11% increase in nuclear war spending. Republican Claudine Schneider of Rhode Island said that the United States can either break loose or continue the SALT II Treaty, which is being observed without having been ratified. She ended by saying that "what counts is action."

Senator Edward Kennedy was due to speak at the rally but was unable to be there. Some students had the opportunity to speak with him in an informal setting later in the afternoon. Four Juniata College students spoke with Mr. Wilbur Babb, Legislative Assistant to Congressman Mitchell for Baltimore City, a Democrat having been a member of Congress since 1971. It seems that Mitchell is completely in favor of what UCAM believes and is striving for. He is very much against SDI.

Speaking on the success of the day, Hofelt said that it was a positive learning experience, the purpose of it being to become better acquainted with the issues and he feels the best way to start is on college campuses.

The Juniata contingency was largely student organized by the Peace and Conflict Studies Committee.

Juniata Staff Honored At Founders Day Tea

Nine members of the Juniata staff were honored for 10 years of service during the annual Founders Day Tea marking the 110th anniversary of the college's founding.

Those honored at the tea, which was attended by college employees with 10 or more years of service, were: Jane H. Brown, college nurse; Dr. Linda Sue Esch, professor of mathematics; Dr. Tom L. Fisher, associate professor of chemistry; Dr. Todd D. Gustafson, associate professor of biology; David L. Harker, security officer; Patricia M. Kann, economics and business administration department secretary; Anthony J. Nabozny, athletic equipment manager; Dr. Ruth E. Reed, associate professor of chemistry; and Marjorie L. Rutherford, admissions office secretary. A native of Huntingdon and a graduate of the University of Pennsylvania School of Nursing, Mrs. Brown is a member of the Board of Deacons of the Huntingdon Presbyterian Church. Prior to coming to Juniata, she worked at J.C. Blair Memorial Hospital where she held positions as operating room staff nurse, operating room supervisor and maternity staff nurse. She is a resident of Huntingdon.

Also a resident of Huntingdon, Dr. Esch received her B.S. degree with honors from Juniata. She earned her M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Boston University where she served as an instructor from 1970-74. After serving two years as an assistant professor at Colgate University, Dr. Esch joined the Juniata faculty as an assistant professor. She was promoted to associate professor in 1980 and professor in 1985. In 1979, she was the recipient of the Lindback Foundation Award for Distinguished Teaching.

A graduate of Old Dominion University, Dr. Fisher received his Ph.D. from Iowa State University and was a post-doctoral Fellow at Virginia Polytechnic Institute and State University, where he also served as an adjunct professor. Dr. Fisher was an assistant professor and was promoted to associate professor in 1981. A native of Ohio, he is a resident of Huntingdon. Dr. Gustafson joined the Juniata faculty as an assistant professor and was promoted to associate professor in 1980. A native of Jamestown, N.Y. and a current resident of Cornpropst Mills, Dr. Gustafson received his B.A. degree magna cum laude from Jacksonville University. He holds M.S. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Wisconsin where he also served as a research associate at the Institute of Environmental Studies. He also has been a scientist/consultant to the Wisconsin Attorney General, and spent six years as an officer and aviator in the U.S. Navy.

Harker, a resident of Alexandria and a graduate of Huntingdon Area High School, has been a member of the college's security force for 10 years. Prior to coming to Juniata, he was a security guard with R.L. McCracken and Associates in Maryland and worked for the FBI in washington, D.C. for two years.

Mrs. Kann came to Juniata as secretary in the office of institutional research. in 1981, she became the economics and business administration department secretary. A native of Huntingdon and graduate of Huntingdon Area High School, she worked at the Juniata Valley Loan Company and the Budget Plan Loan Company before coming to the college.

Also a Huntingdon Area High School graduate, Nabozny was a member of the college's maintenance staff before being named athletic equipment manager in 1985. Prior to coming to Juniata, he was a disc jockey with WBLF radio in Bellefonte and also served on the maintenance staff at The Pennsylvania State University. He is a resident of Huntingdon.

A magna cum laude graduate of Winthrop College, Dr. Reed received her Ph.D. from Virginia Polytechnic and state University where she was a NASA Fellow. She also was a fulbright Scholar at Georg August Universitat in West Germany and a National Institute of Health post-doctoral Fellow at Johns Hopkins University. Dr. Reed joined the Juniata staff as an assistant professor and was promoted to associate professor in 1980. That same year, she was an exchange professor at the Hautes Etudes Industrielles, Polytechnicum de Lille, France. This year, the Huntingdon resident is on sabbatical at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

A resident of Mt. Union where she is a member of the Mt. Union Art Guild, Mrs. Rutherford is a native of Greensburg and a graduate of Greensburg High School. Prior to coming to Juniata, she worked for Bendix Field Engineering/NASA in Columbia, M.D. She has worked for the Union National Bank in Huntingdon and Hardinge Brothers in Elmira, N.Y.

During Juniata's Founders Day Tea, the nine employees were inducted into the "Ten Year Club" and presented with special citations and gifts.

"Kiss Me Kate"

by Ruthanne Hackman

The Broadway musical "Kiss Me Kate" will be performed May 1,2,and 3 in Oller Hall.

The story is of a troup of traveling actors performing Shakepeare's Taming of the Shrew. Fred Graham, portrayed by senior Michael Derk, is the director of the troup. Fred tames Kate, portrayed by senior Jocelyn Fowler, who is his ex-wife. Lois, portrayed by sophomore Molly Bagwell, is Kate's younger sister and cannot marry her suitor Bill, potrayed by sophomore Mark Heinly, until Kate is married. An interestind twist is added to the story when Bill gets into gambling trouble and writes an I.O.U. in Fred's name.

Favorite songs from the musical include "Why Can't You Behave?," "Wunderbar," "Brush Up Your Shakespeare," and "Too Darn Hot."

Juniata students, faculty, and member of the community join forces for this performance. Dr. Howard Crouch is the director, junior Laura Clark is the producer. Professor Ibrook Tower directs the orchestra, consisting of musicians from the college and the community. Dr. Joseph Figg is directing the chorus and junior Becky Culler is in charge of choreography.

In general, practices are going well and the cast is enthusiastic, according to Producer Laura Clark and Cast member Mike Derk says, "It's great! We're enjoying working on the musical and hope the audience will enjoy watching it as much as we enjoy performing it."

"Time Of Your Life" Review

by Tina Acri

"The Time of Your Life" was presented last weekend, April 17, 18, and 19 in Oller Auditorium. The play, a Pulitzer Prize winner, was written by William Saroyan and directed by former actress Nancy Kulp.

The story itself takes place in San Fransisco in 1939 at Nick's Pacific Street Saloon, Restaurant, and Entertainment Palace, which is actually considered a "honky tonk" bar. While explaining the unusual plot, technical director Doris Goehring said that the play consisted of "an assemblage of people from all walks of life, pouring out their dreams to Nick (the bartender)."

Although there were no particular leading characters, Joe, portrayed by Stephen Meyer; Kitty, Laura Mumaw; Tom, John Petrovic; Nick, Stephen Lecrone; and Kit Carson, Walt Cupit, were considered the main characters in the play. Meyer and Cupit were outstanding in their parts. The supporting cast of seventeen did an excellent job as well. The props and the set itself were built by the play production class, under the direction of Mrs. Goehring. They did extraordinary work to make the set so authentic and professional.

Director Nancy Kulp said that she was extremely pleased with the outcome of the play. She commented that she picked this particular play as a "challenge" to the cast, and that "it was worth all the work and worry," since she considered it a "great success." Kulp felt that the performers all worked hard to achieve such "well-defined" characters and that they were up to "professional standards."

Kit Carson, (Walt Cupit) offers his assistance to Nick, (Steve LeCrone) the bartender, as Harry, (Tom Kochel) and Wesley, (Eric Danaway) look on.

Mike Derk serenades Molly Bagwell in rehearsal for the musical "Kiss Me Kate."

Men's and Women's Track Disappointing Tri-Meet

by Mike Antenucci

The past weekend the Juniata's Men and Women's track teams competed in a tri-meet with Dickinson and Albright. In Mens action Dickinson scored 90 points to win, Albright had 47 to split, and Juniata ended up with 44 points taking 2 losses. On the other side of the track the Dickinson Women compiled 101 points recording 2 victories. Albright ended up with 28 points to finish in second, and Juniata recorded 13 points to take third.

Gino Perri led the Men with 10 points, winning the Discus and the Shotput. The Indians recorded 26 points in the feild and only 18 on the track. Frankie Phelps placed in the 100 and 200. Spyad, Zimmerman, and Roselli were the only other Juniatians to place on the track.

Bob Yanckello placed 2nd in both the Discus and Shotput behind Perri, Randy Martin also added a third place finish for the Indians in the Discus. Brent Bittner won the Javelin and Sam Bonardi placed 4th.

The Ladies had a harder time getting on the scoreboard only contributing 13 points to the meet, taking only 7 places and being shut out of the first place column.

Krista Smith and Amy Hoch were the top individual scorers for the Indians. Both the Men and Women ran yesterday against Lebanon Valley. The next meet is scheduled for this Monday at Lock Haven, starting time 3:00.

by Mike Antenucci

The Juniata's Mens Tennis team is now 3-3 this season after they lost to Albright last weeekend 6-3.

In singles action Dan Corazzi of Juniata defeated Fred Missel (6-4,6-3) in the first spot, while number two player Chris Savage lost (6-2,2-6,7-5). Albright continuecd to sweep through the singles action with Kelly Glass' defeat of Juniata's Rich Gottschall (6-3,7-6). Dan Beyger got off to a quick startin his match, winning the first set v-2, but Albright's Eric Nochay came back to vin the next two sets (6-4,6-3). Mark Kearns and Chris Glover both lost their singles matches (6-4,6-3) and (6-3, 3-6, 6-1) respectively.

In doubles action Corazzi and Savage defeated Messel and Jemison (6-3,7-6), while Gottschall and Berger were defeated (6-2, 6-4). Kearns and Brad Horton recorded the third Juniata victory when they defeated Rich Papolo and Don Solomon (6-3,6-0).

Juniata played Dickinson on Monday and will host St. Francis today at 3:00. This Saturday Gettysburg will visit the Juniata campus, starting time is 1:00.

Have Another Day!

Golf

by Joe Scialabba

Juniata heads into this weekend's Middle Atlantic Conference Golf Championships with high hopes. The Indians have a 7-1 MAC regular season record, and are 8-3 overall.

Last year, the Tribe pulled a major surprise with a third place finish in the 21-team field. However, two of last year's five MAC performers are gone.

Returning for the conference tourney are 1 man Steve Borza, a senior, classmate Tom Cancelmo and junior Jim Armstrong. The other spots will be manned by two of the following players-: seniors Dave Challenger, Mark Howanitz, Joe Scialabba and Steve West, or freshman Tim Garvin.

This weekend's tourney is set for Saturday and Sunday at Shawnee-on-the-Delaware.

The Tribe finishes the regular season next week against Shippensburg.

Baseball 2-2 For Week

by Mike Antenucci

The Juniata baseball team finished a very busy week by splitting a double header with Albright this past weekend on College Hill. The Indians also ended the week even, with wins over Albright and Penn State Capital Campus, while loosing the one game to Albright and another to Gettysburg.

The week started with an 8-7 loss to Gettysburg. The Indians compiled 11 hits but left 9 men stranded on the basepaths in a 12 inning barn-burner. Scott Cole went 2-4 and scored 3 runs, while Junior shortstop Steve Meeker went 3-6 with 2 singles and a double. Rich Howey started the game and was releaved by Freshman Paul Hayduk, who was later releaved by Frank Briner picked up the loss.

In the 11th inning the Indians had a chance to win the game. Scott Cole reached first on a base-on-balls, then stole second, and advanced to third on a wild pitch. Freshman Jim Tomasetti doubled in Cole and gave the Indians the lead 7-6 going into the bottom half of the inning. Gettysburg tied it up and sent the game into the 12th inning where they shut the door on the Indians and scored a run in the bottom half of the inning to win the game.

Friday afternoon a 14-2 Penn State Capital Campus team visited Langdon field and were romped on by the Indians 11-8. The game was not as close as the score indicates. Juniata led by at least 5 runs throughout the whole game, but a last inning rally by Capital Campus, a rally which produced 6 runs, made txe game seem alot closer than it was.

Juniata could do no rong in the field for the first 8 innings. Tom Kelley entered the game in the 7th inning, releaving starting pitcher Brian Riggleman. Riggleman started out shaky but came on strong in the start of the second inning. Center fielder Mike Culver made a spectacular diving catch in the 7th to get the Indians out of a jam.

The Indian bats were hot. Juniata picked up 12 hits lurinc the game and were aided by several base-on-balls and 4 Capital Campus errors. Scott Cole went 2-3, Senior catcher Dave Crane had 3 RBI's, while Bryan Fornadel and Steve Poska each knocked in two runs. DH Dan Webb also hit well, going 2-4 for Coach Berrier.

Saturday afternoon Juniata hosted Albright College. The Indians split the double header, winning the first game 6-4, losing the second game 5-4.

In the first game the Indians took a 1-0 lead after 3 innings, than exploded for 3 runs in the 4th inning, and 2 more in the 5th inning. Albright started their comeback in the 6th inning scoring 3 runs, cutting the Juniata lead in half. After picking up one run in the top of the 7th Albright was shut down by Juniata releaver Vince Anselmo. Albright left 2 men stranded on base in the 7th inning, Anselmo recorded the save, and Rich Howey was credited with the win.

Dan Webb and Frank Briner were both 2-3, each with 1 RBI. Webbs hits were both doubles. Mike Culver was the batting star in the first game going 3-3, one of his hits a home run over the left field fence. Culver also had 2 RBI's for the Indians.

The second half of the day was a bit different for the Indians. Albright took a 3-0 lead after 2 innings, and added 1 more in the 5th, and another in the 6th, increasing their lead to 5-0 going into the bottom half of the 6th inning. The Indians rallied for 2 runs in the bottom of the 6th and 2 more in the 7th, and with the tying run on third and the winning run on first, Albright stopped Juniata's Dave Crane.

Once again Mike Culver was hot at the plate, going 3-4, with 2 doubles and 2 RBI's. Rich Howey also hit well, going 2-3, and Bryan Fornadel was 2-4 with an RBI.

Women's Tennis

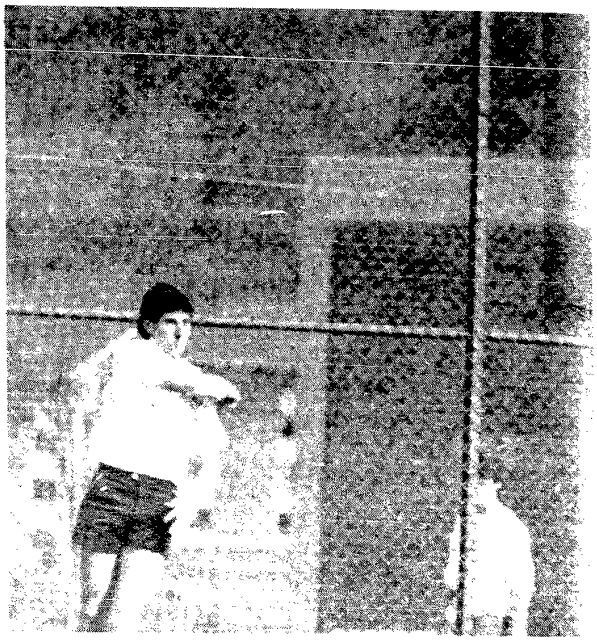
by Mike Antenucci

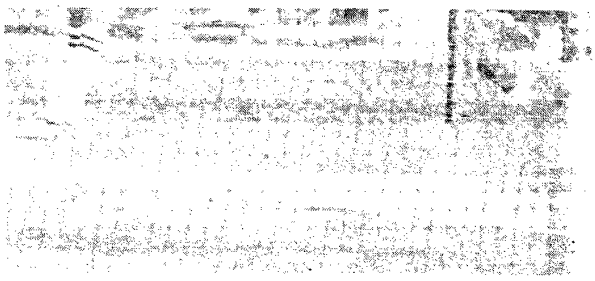
This past Sunday the Juniata Women's tennis team played a rescheduled match against King's College and were victorious by a score of 6-3.

The first time the teams were to meet the match was rained out, as it almost was once again on Sunday. Juniata led 4-2 after the singles competition. At first singles Juniata's Leanne Egolf won rather easily, defeating Michelle Sesta (6-1,6-1). Lynda Cass topped Michele Saniaha (6-0,6-0) to keep the Indians out front.

Lara Mann suffered a tough loss to Carolyn Meekin (6-4,7-6(7-5)), while luara Beck was also beaten (6-4,6-2). Juniata managed to stay infront, however, on victories by Allison Kellock over Pam lewis (6-3,6-3), and Georgia Stanaitis' win over Sue Mc Elerreath (6-3,6-4).

Juniata took 2 out of the three double matches to secure the win. The ladies hosted York on Tuesday and visited Susquehanna yesterday, all that remains now is the MAC individuals tournament. At the time of publication qualifiers were not yet picked.





Senior Chris Savage returns shot during the Mens Tennis match vs. Allbright this past week. Despite a number of solid efforts in both individual and doubles action, the men dropped the match to fall to 3-3 for the season.

The Co-Rec Intramural Volleyball action is heating up as the play-offs near. Andy Hendicks(l.) and Tom Hunt(r.) battle at the net during match this past week.

2nd Northwest Wins Punch Bowl

By Mike Barnett

The Committee for Alcohol Study and Education sponsored Punch Bowl on Monday, April 28, Juniata's version of a television game show.

Teams were made of four members from the same residence hall who pressed a buzzer when they knew the answer to the true/false, open ended, or multiple choice questions. Varying point values were assigned to each question and the team that had the most points after five questions advanced to the elimination and final rounds. After three hours of questions by Host Professor Jim Lakso, the team from Second Northwest, (Steve Meeker, Bob Davies, Jack Lee and Ron Hersh) emerged victors.

Other winners included:

-Most Authentic Game Show Behavior: Kelly Bauer's team.

-Worst Answer: Steve Grater's team.

-Best Wardrobe and Most Team Spirit: Darin Everhart's team.

Best Team Name: Mike Wojick's team for "S.P.U.D.S" (Special People Under Doctor's Supervision).

Worst Team Name: Scott Eberhart's team for "Beer Balls".

According to C.A.S.E President Caren Ogrisek, the prizes included fun in the sun in Julie Keehner's Sun Bed, golf with Dean Tilden, swimming in Nurse Brown's pool, Mexican dinner with Bill Huston, and water skiing with Randy Dieke, to name a few.

Fifty JC Students Dance All Night For Cancer Research

by Lauralee Snyder

DJ's kept the Sports+Rec Center rockin' all night long this past weekend as fifty Juniata students danced the night away for the American Cancer Society.

The dance-a-thon, sponsored by the Campus Ministry Board, has the potential to raise approximately $800 from pledges which are still being collected.

Raffle tickets were also sold before the event and prizes donated by area merchants were raffled off every hour from 9 p.m. to 9 a.m.

Prizes included six packs of soda, two travel mugs, two pizzas from Mama G's, a $20 gift certificate from Penney's, a $5 gift certificate from Poser's, and a set of tumblers from Murphy's Mart.

The grand prize, a pair of diamond earrings from Mur Jewelers valued at $150, were won by Traci Yonko. Twenty students, not quite as energetic at 9 a.m. as 9 p.m., lasted the entire twelve hours. For their endurance, these all-nighters received a free t-shirt. Those wishing to buy these marathon shirts, they can be purchased for $3 in the Campus Ministry Office.

Participants are reminded that all pledge money is to be turned in at the Campus Ministry Office no later than Tuesday, May 6. Prizes will then be awarded to the top fund-raisers. These prizes include a $10 food coupon from Riverside, two dinners from the Big Wrangler, and a bucket of chicken from Kentucky Fried Chicken.

Because of the success of the Dance-A-Thon this year, the Campus Ministry Board is planning to make this an annual event to benefit the American Cancer Society.

Many thanks to those who danced to "buck" cancer!!

Editorial

Is It Necessary?

It never ceases to amaze me—the number of professors who think classes are over on the hour, rather than the scheduled five minutes earlier. But then again, what's five minutes?

Well, an extra five minutes per day is an additional 25 minutes a week. Considering that there are 10 weeks in a term, that's 250 minutes, which is a little more than FOUR hours. Almost an extra week of that class for the term.

I'm sure there are some who would rationalize this as contributing to a better education. Really, how much does a student get out of that extra last five minutes? Most are sitting there, with their notebooks closed, continually looking at their watch (usually in utter disgust).

Why don't professors realize that their students also have other classes—that they have to get to. If your next class is in another building, there's little or no chance of arriving on time. Nothing ruins your day quite as well as a mad sprint from the Science Center to Good Hall to find that the door is closed and has been for five minutes. So, since your education has been "extended" you have to disrupt the entire class after you enter to get situated. Spending an extra five minutes in one class only means that you'll be five minutes behind in your next.

Considering how obvious this inconvenience is, why do many professors insist upon keeping their classes past the scheduled time?

Letters to the Editor

Another Libyan Alternative

Dear Editor,

In response to Mr. Troy's letter to the editor of last week, I would like to put a few of his points in perspective, at least for my own sake. I find it important to remember that the United States is the type of country that will allow its citizens to think, feel, or perceive themselves to be unpatriotic, or non-patriotic, if they so desire. No one in this country has the legal right to outwardly punish them for expressing their views. And so on this merit, I thank Mr. Troy for expressing his viewpoint.

However, there is a picture which I feel we all must see. First, let us define the U.S. attack on Libya as an act of war. Now before anyone goes looking for a dictionary, I call it an act of war because to the people who were involved: those who dropped the bombs and fired upon the Libyan forces in the Gulf of Sidra, and on the cities of Tripoli and Benghazi; those who were wounded and killed; those who lost friends and relatives in these attacks; for them, it was war. And war is a terrible experience for anyone in any time — war IS hell. People's lives are destroyed.

Furthermore, I would have been much more satisfied if Mr. Troy had also given the examples of the eleven year old girl killed in the Rome airport and the infant child blown out of an airplane in midflight with the examples of Mr. Khadafy's children also being killed and wounded. Yes, Mr. Troy, all children can be hurt a lot and feel empty in times like these, no matter where they live.

I doubt seriously, though, that the target was children from the overhead F-111 fighter bombers. There is a confusion here between the aim of this war and its heart-wrenching outcome. If we could take those reponsible for causing events such as these and put them in a room to fight the battle alone, then. . . .

Finally, I would have to agree with Mr. Troy that patriotism does not justify the death of even one human being, let alone that of a child. But in times of war against your nation, the one of which you are a citizen, I would hope that you become a patriot (by definition) in order to protect your list of life's offerings that, you although may let bypass, are more likely taken for granted.

Sincerely,
Robert DiAntonio

Student Criticizes Admissions

A letter open to ALL potential tour guides:

Being a Juniata College tour guide can be a rewarding and fulfilling experience. To be able to represent your school is indeed an honor and nothing less than an accomplishment. To all of you considering this position, I would like to share some insights of a veteran tour guide.

For the past two years, I have gotten up on Saturday mornings at 9:00. I have given tours in the rain and in the snow. I have given tours when I have had final exams. For the past two years, I have given the Admissions Office my best. In return, I have shown up for tours only to find the Admissions Office closed or the tour being cancelled- all without prior notification. Admittedly, these instances are few and far between, but the Admissions Office will not accept responsibility for these instances.

Again, after my terms of service I made a mistake- few and far between also. This year fall term, in addition to a heavy academic load, my father fell extremely ill. Thus, over the course of the term, I was unable to give three tours. As a result, I was graciously given winter term off to cope with my father's illness by Michele Bartol.

I felt that I would again be able to give tours in the spring term. I was assured of this by Michele Bartol that I would be able to resume my position.

To my utter amazement and disappointment when I returned, in the spring I found my position had been filled and I had been dismissed. Michele, it turns out, had simply forgotten to put me on the spring schedule. But now her "hands were tied." So I really wasn't fired- just forgotten.

Why is it that I make these mistakes- excusable mistakes at that-and I am held accountable for them in the worst way? Why is it that when the Admissions Office makes mistakes, they are not held accountable at all?

Responsibility should begin at the top. How can the Admissions Office expect good tour guides given their behavior?

So tour guides beware: if your miss three tours, even after all you have done for the Admissions Office, they will fire you. . . under the guise for "time off".

Maybe it is for the better that the Admissions staff will be new next year. Hopefully, you will not have to go through what I did. However, not everyone is leaving. . .

Sincerely,
Elizabeth Radcliffe

Raft Regatta Rules And Regulations

1. While Juniata College, through the Raft Regatta Committee, helps coordinate the Raft Regatta to limit hazards to the extent possible, officials of the College are not responsible for enforcing the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania on the Juniata River.

2. All participants are hereby informed that there are risks of personal injury arising from participation in the Raft Regatta.

a. There are hazards to rafting the river in the forms of currents, an irregular bottom, floating objects and other potential perils that relate to the vagaries of the river.

b. Hypothermia, defined as a condition of subnormal body temperature, can be caused by cold water and air temperature which may result in illness or death.

c. Risk of injury via vagaries of the river and hypothermia are both increased through alcohol consumption.

3. Operating a watercraft under the influence of alcohol or a controlled substance is against the law. Under * Chg. 30 PA. C.S., a watercraft defined by the Commonwealth of PA is "any device" used as a "means of transport" on water. Read the following sections of Commonwealth of PA statute:
5502. Operating a watercraft under influence of alcohol or controlled substance.
(a) General rule— No person shall operate or be in actual physical control of the movement of a watercraft upon, in or through the waters of this Commonwealth while:
(1) under the influence of alcohol to a degree which renders the person incapable of safe operation of the watercraft.
(2) under the influence of any controlled substance, as defined by the laws of this Commonwealth and rules and regulations promulgated thereunder, to a degree which renders the person incapable of safe operation of a watercraft;
(3) under the combined influence of alcohol and a controlled substance;
(4) the amount of alcohol by weight in the blood of the person is 0.10% or greater.
(b) Legal use no defense— The fact that any person charged with violating this section is or has been legally entitled to use alcohol or controlled substances is not a defense to a charge of violating this section.
(c) Penalty—A person violating any of the provisions of this section commits a misdemeanor of the THIRD degree.
5502.1. Homicide by watercraft while operating under influence.
(a) Offense defined.—Any person who unintentionally causes the death of another person as the direct result of a violation of section 5502 (relating to operating watercraft under influence of alcohol or controlled substance) and who is convicted of violating section 5502 commits a felony of the third degree when the violation is the cause of death and the sentencing court shall order the person to serve a minimum term of imprisonment of not less than three years.

4. Juniata College will not impede enforcement efforts by agents of the Commonwealth or Borough and holds each individual responsible for his or her own conduct during the Raft Regatta. Juniata assumes no legal duty to monitor the conduct of students and furthermore none of the regulations listed above or below absolves individuals of their responsibility for their responsibility for their own behavior.

5. Violation of Raft Regatta Rules or general College policies will subject students disciplinary sanctions.

6. The Annual Raft Regatta will be held Saturday, May 10, 1986 starting at 11:00 a.m. at the Smithfield Bridge and ending at the Mill Creek Bridge.

7. There will be a MANDATORY Captains meeting on Tuesday, April 29 at 7:00 p.m. in the Mini-Lounge of Ellis Hall. Failure to attend this meeting will mean forfeiture of transportation rights and registration privileges.

8. The Regatta is open to any student, faculty, and administrative member of Juniata College whose raft has met specifications of the Raft Regatta Committee.

9. All participants in the Regatta will be required to register with the Raft Regatta Committee. Registration forms and a $1.00 per person entrance fee are due Friday, May 9, at the Information Desk. The fee is used to defray transportation and maintenance expenses.

10. All participants in the Raft Regatta will be required to sign a waiver form. No one will be permitted on the river unless he/she has signed this form. These forms must accompany the registration form of the raft the student intends to ride. These forms are to be turned in no later than Friday, May 9.

11. Use of glass containers is prohibited.

12. Raft transportation will be provided to the launch site ONLY FOR THOSE WHO ARE REGISTERED.
— No raft over 9' x 12' will be transported.
— Times and pick up points will be assigned at Captains' meeting.
— You must provide labor to load - rafts will be unloaded by Raft Regatta Committee and Weightlifting Club.

13. Littering is prohibited; litter bags will be provided.

14. Members of a raft are responsible for dismantling their own rafts. If they want to save anything, it is their responsibility.

15. NO STYROFOAM SUPPORTED RAFT WILL BE TRANSPORTED.

16. As many materials as possible will be provided by the Raft Regatta Committee for building rafts. These materials will be stored at South's parking lot and are distributed on a first-come-first-serve basis.

17. Pennsylvania state law requires life saving devices for every rider of a watercraft. Life preservers are provided by the Raft Regatta Committee.

18. The Raft Regatta Committee urges everyone to wear sneakers during the Regatta due to sharp objects which may be encountered on the river bottom or along its banks.

19. Parking is prohibited at the launch site and finish site. Transportation will be provided by the Raft Regatta Committee.

20. Each raft must display the numbered plaque provided by the Raft Regatta Committee.

21. All guests must be registered with the raft on which they are riding.

22. Behavior on the buses will be monitored. Students who behave improperly will be subject to disciplinary sanctions.

Counselor's Corner

Dr. Jay Buchanan

by Dr. Jay Buchanan

Let's continue our discussion of self-concept by asking the critical question, "How does self-esteem, which is part of a person's overall self-concept, influence his/her ability to enter into and maintain meaningful, personal relationships?"

A great deal of research in this area points out that self-esteem plays a major role in the way we respond to each other.

Stanley Coopersmith, the social psychologist to whom we made reference in the previous article, posits that individuals with high self-esteem seem to have less difficulty in making friends, are more willing to express their opinions, are less sensitive to criticism, and are less preoccupied with themselves.

In short, individuals with high self-esteem bring more to a relationship. Since relationships require a fair amount of give-and-take, it would follow that the higher the self-esteem of the respective members, the greater will be the chance that the relationship will be satisfying and rewarding.

Don Hamachek, in his book, Encounters with the Self, offers a brief self-test whereby one can evaluate his/her own level of self-esteem. The eleven-item check list asks such questions as the following:

* Do you feel generally equal, neither inferior nor superior, to others?

* Do you have confidence in your general ability to deal with problems?

* Do you resist the efforts of others to dominate you, especially your peers?

* Do you sense and consider the needs of others?

The extent to which one responds "yes" or "usually" to most of the questions generally indicates a high level of self-esteem.

Hamachek also suggests a number of ways to improve self-esteem such as : * Work on being more honest and open with other people.

* Focus on the good things in our lives and not the negative things.

* Stop imposing unrealistic standards on ourselves (I should do this, I ought to be that, I must be this).

*Compliment ourselves more often and work on being less critical of ourselves.

*Continue to put forth the effort despite being discouraged.

Since we have now changed our own clocks back to Daylight Savings Time the question once again surfaces: When will the Juniata campus clocks be corrected?

As many of you already know, I elaborated on this time and clock subject in October when the "fall back" version of "spring forward" occured. For everyone's sake, including my own, I won't go into it again. Just remember me this time next fall.

To other matters: I just realized a few things about my Juniata education. You may relate to several of these.

—My memory hasn't improved. I can't remember my student number, license number or social security number. All I can remember is my meal sticker number.

—My time management skills are questionable. I still rate sun bathing, frisbee and golf ahead of Sociology of Medicine, study time and trips to the library (two this year).

—Sleep is more important than I ever thought. I never thought it could take a whole week of sleeping in to make up for a whole weekend.

—Physical activity is essential. I have to exercise during the week to burn off the caloric intake of the weekend.

—*Even though they're all reruns, M*A*S*H is a normal part of the schedule.* I can't believe I have seen every M*A*S*H episode, but I haven't seen a new one in at least a year. Watching it three times a day doesn't help, but I still do it.

—Breakfast is a luxury. I can't semm to convince myself to get up just to eat before class. If I set the alarm early I either sleep through it or punch the snooze button three or four times. Eventually, I just set the clock as close to class time as possible, and rush to Good.

—Things are put off. This goes back to time managment and priorities. Why should I start a paper early? Why should I begin this article before 5:00 on Monday? Etc. . . .

Golfers Place 8th In MAC's

by Joe Scialabba

The Juniata golf team moved up six places on Sunday, but Saturday's slow start was too much to overcome as the Tribe settled for an eigth-place finish at the Middle Atlantic Conference Championships at Shawnee-on-the-Delaware. The Indians were fifth last spring in the 21 team field.

After a 528 total for Saturday's 27 holes, the Indians improved to a 495 on Sunday for a 1023 total. Franklin and Marshall took the team Crown with a 937, score. Sunday's comeback was sparked by Senior Tom Cancelmo, who shot a 116 on the final day to finish with a 252 total, tying with classmate Steve Borza for team medalist honors. Junior Jim Armstrong shot 128-128 for a 256 score while Senior Joe Scialabba had a 263. Senior Mark Howanitz shot 138-131 for a 269 total.

Several Indians had one bad opening day score to limit individual performances. Cancelmo shot an 18-hole round of 92 while Borza and Scialabba faltered on the final nine on Saturday with a 48 and 49 respectively.

Howanitz shot three consecutive 46's on Saturday, and Armstrong played steady with equal scores on both days.

Dave Walker of F&M took low individual honors with 225.

The Indians had one of the better MAC regular season records at 7-1 (8-3 overall).

Men's Baseball HOME vs. Lock Haven (1:00p.m.)

Baseball Splits Two

by Mike Antenucci

Juniata traveled to Wilkes College this past weekend for an MAC double header with the Colonels. Once again, as the Indians have traditionalized this season, they split the contest.

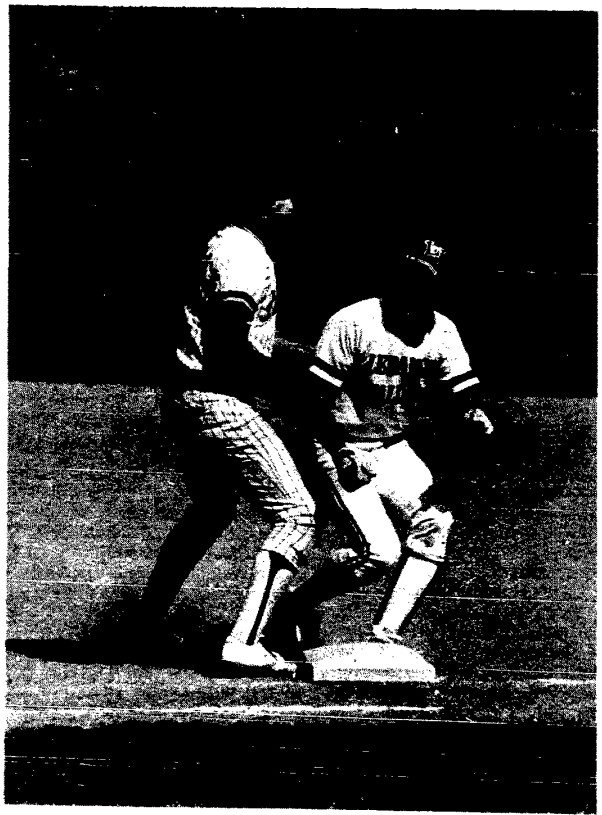
The first game saw the Indians with a 5-0 lead after the first 4 innings of play. Wilkes faught back hard, picking up 2 runs in both the bottom half of the 6th and 7th innings. Starting the game and picking up the win for the Tribe was Senior ace, Rich Howey.

Dave Crane went 2-3, including a two run triple in the 2 inning. Junior Shortstop Steve Meeker was also 2-3 in the first game, while Freshman Left fielder Amo Cianci went 1-2, scoring 2 runs. Juniata had 9 hits at 29 tries in game 1.

Mike Culver, Dan Webb, and Howey were the only three Indians with base hits in game 2, however, the Indians managed to lead the game 4-0 entering the bottom half of the second inning.

Bryan Fornadel picked up the loss for the Indians, who aided Wilkes by giving up 3 walks in the 6 inning, and making 2 errors also.

The Indians played a make-up game with York this past Monday, and host Lock Haven this Tuesday.



The Men's Baseball squad split their twin-bill with Lebanon Valley last Thursday winning game 2 in the bottom of the ninth and also split their double-header with Wilkes this past Saturday 5-4, 4-7. Photo by Melissa Barbor.

The Women's Softball team split their double-header with Susquehanna this past week. After losing the first ga 3-9, the ladies bounced back to win game #2 6-2. The ladies are now 11-5 overall and ended their MAC play with a record. Photo by Melissa Barbor.

Vol. XXXVII, No. 25 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | May 8, 1986

Man/Woman Of Year Selected At Breakfast

Lauren M. Rogerson of New Kensington, a senior pre-law/public administration major, was honored as Juniata College's "Woman of the Year" during the annual May Day breakfast held May 1.

In all, 18 Juniata students were recognized on the basis of their cordiality and poise, personal competence and achievement in the arts, academics, sports and other fields; service to the college, community or both; and self determination and responsibility.

The "Woman of the Year" was escorted by the Juniata "Man of the Year," Gino V. Perri, of McKees Rocks, a senior English/education major. Members of the court included eight "Juniata Women," two from each class, and eight senior "Juniata Men."

Rogerson is secretary for the Juniata legal society, a member of student government, ski club and rugby club and a resident hall assistant. She was recently named to "Who's Who Among American Universities and Colleges." Rogerson stated, "I was honored and surprised. I've really enjoyed my time here and being elected 'Woman of the Year' was one more happy experience for me. Being escorted by Gino made it all worth while."

A 1982 graduate of Valley High School, Rogerson is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Rogerson of Glenview Dr., New Kensington. Her future plans include going to law school at American University in Washington, D.C.

Perri has been active in football and track during his four years at Juniata. An All-American in both sports, he recently qualified for the NCAA track and field championships. He is currently a resident assistant and was named to "Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges." Perri stated, "I'm very honored and flattered to be chosen. I'm really not sure why I was, but what the heck!"

A 1982 graduate of Montour High School, Perri is the son of Mrs. Ester A. Perri of Windriver Dr., McKees Rocks. His future plans include moving west and eventually teaching English and coaching.

Special honors were awarded to Mrs. Grace Binder and Mrs. Elizabeth Ellis. Mrs. Binder was recognized for her 11 years as first lady of the college. May Day chairwoman, Beth Davidson presented her with a spring bouquet of flowers. Mrs. Ellis was recognized on the 68th anniversary of her May Queen coronation. She too received flowers from Davidson.

The guest speaker at this year's breakfast was Betty Ann Cherry, associate professor of history at the college.

Cherry addressed the topic of how Juniata has helped women "become their own persons." She reflected on special May Day events from the past, including the day in which her mother, Elizabeth Wertz Ellis, was named May Day Queen at Juniata.

"Without traditions like this, there would be no Juniata like the one we know," said Cherry.

She added, "Traditions maintain community participation. Communities make people fully human and enable them to develop into their own person. I feel confident that the Juniata community has encouraged and helped you to become your own person. My hope to each of you is that you discover your own unique personal identity."

The eight students selected as "Juniata Women for 1985" are seniors Virginia Krall of Ephrata and Kate Poppenburg of Sewickley; juniors Danielle Rupp of Red Lion and Jill Wineka of York; sophomores Lisa Baer of Titusville and Amy Wertz of Malvern; and freshmen Amy Coursen of St. Louis, MO and Maria Tweardy of Abbottstown.

The eight "Juniata Men for 1986" are Tim Barnett of Goldsboro, NC, Greg Molchany of Johnstown, Joseph Scialabba of Huntingdon, Matt Siegel of Bullville, NY, Tom Trent of Somerset, Gary Warnecker of Lilburn, GA, Michael Wojcik of Central City and Robert Yankello of Sewickley.

The annual May Day breakfast was attended by several hundred women including students, faculty and staff members, wives of faculty and staff members, and several special guests.

Gino V. Perri and Lauren Rogerson were named "Man of the Year" and "Woman of the Year" at the May Day Breakfast, Thursday, May 1.

Regatta Cancelled

Raft Regatta os officially cancelled. On Tuesday, April 29th, raft captains gathered in the Mini Lounge of Ellis to hear the official news on the regatta. Bill Huston, Acting Director of Programming, led the meeting with Matt Siegal and Joe Scialabba as chairpersons for the committee.

Huston distributed a letter to the students. The letter stated the reasons why Juniata College is no longer able to hold a Raft Regatta.

Since Juniata has no jurisdiction over the Juniata River, and the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania does, the state would be liable if anyone were to get injured. Therefore the state wants the college to sign a permit which would free the state from any liability suits.

The college must sign, and because of this it will not have a regatta. As the law states, anyone operating a water vehicle under the influence of alcohol will be arrested. Not only will the students be arrested, but so will the administration of the college.

This was brought to the college's attention about a month ago by Jim Valentine, the Pa. Fish Commissioner and Waterways Patrolman. His orders come from Harrisburg.

After announcing this, Bill, Matt and Joe were open to questions. One that was important was why Juniata did not have this problem in the past. Bill said Juniata was never aware of the extent of the watercraft law. It had been warned but ignored it.

Alternative Weekend Planned

Raft Regatta has been officially cancelled, but an exciting "Raft Regatta Alternative Week-end" is being planned.

The weedend will kick off with a Juniata tradition tomorrow afternoon with Mud Volleyball. The event sponsored by the Juniata Executives Club will begin around 2:00 and end around 7:00.

Dinner will be served outside at a picnic from 5:00 to 6:30.

Circle K will sponsor "Random Draw," a rock group from State College on Friday night from 9 to 2 in the Multi-purpose room. The group is "a step above what we're used to," said Bill Huston, Acting Director of Programming. Admission is only $1.00 and the atmosphere will be more club like, with tablesand chairs set up.

Saturday will kick off at 11a.m. with SpringFest '86. "Used Furniture" will play outside, V103 deejays will play music outside, a waterslide, as well as mud wrestling and Muddy Run races are tentatively scheduled for the afternoon. Individual RHA's will be encouraged to provide mixers and set-ups in the lounges throughout the day. Once again, lunch and dinner will be served picnic style.

At 8:15 p.m., doors will open for the 9:00 performance of "The Band" featuring Former Band Members Levon Helm, Rick Danko, and Garth Hudson.

The original "Bamd" made music history from the late '60s into the mid '70s, performing for millions of fans throughout the country, including the infamous Woodstock festival.

"The Band," featuring former band members Rick Danko, Levon Helm and Garth Hudson, will be performing at Juniata College Saturday, May 10 at 9pm in the Kenne-

Let's Make The Most Of It

For some reason the news did not surprise me. Raft Regatta cancellation was, hopefully, the final tier on "The Year of Changes." Sure, this year's freshman will never get to experience Raft Regatta. But, let's think about incoming freshmen. As a Juniata Tour Guide, I enjoy watching high school students' (and parents') eyes light up as I discussed our traditions, emphazizing Raft Regatta.

Just three weeks ago, I asked a prospective student what made him consider Juniata College. His answer: "well, I got all these handbooks from different colleges. When I flipped through Juniata's, the first thing I saw was a picture of student's floating down the river on rafts. It made a great impression!" Will next year's handbook feature a picture of a JC student throwing a suitcase into his car on a Friday afternoon?

It's an ugly photo, and one that won't be developed with the continued efforts of our administration, clubs, and organizations striving for successful alternative programming.

Let's make the most of this weekend, who knows? Maybe May 10th, 1986 will go down in JC history as an event to be repeated again and again and . . . have fun!

Letters to the Editor

Tour Guide Reaction

Dear Editor,

In response to Elizabeth Radcliffe's letter to the editor last week, I wish to give all potential tour guides my point of view.

As Elizabeth stated, being a tour guide is indeed an honor! I am quite proud to be able to represent Juniata College everytime I give a tour. In my opinion being a tour guide is one of the most important and most rewarding jobs on campus. I find it very satisfying to have the opportunity to aid perspective students in their search for the 'right' college.

Tour guiding also carries with it many responsibilities. These include rain, snow, and even 9 a.m. Saturday tours one term a year. You also must be responsible enough to show up at Admissions for every tour. How would you have felt if during your visit to Juniata your tour guide didn't show up? I wouldn't have been impressed.

Furthermore, I have to say that Michele Bartol and the entire Admissions staff do an excellent job. They are very responsive to the concerns and needs of the tour guides.

Just last week I decided to become a computer operator next year. I was reluctant to give up my tour guide job, but was equally concerned about having the burden of two jobs. I asked Michele if I could remain on the roster for fall semester but not give tours on a regular basis. She assured me that if I found it possible to handle two jobs during spring term, I could return to the rotation immediately. If that isn't cooperation and understanding, What is?

So for all of you applying for a tour guide job - GO FOR IT! It is the most rewarding job on this campus!

Sincerely,
Joe Newhart

More Guides React

Dear Editor,

This letter is in response to Ms. Radcliffe's criticism of the Admissions Office and their treatment of tourguides. To quote her letter, being a tour guide IS "a rewarding and fulfilling experience. To be able to represent your school IS indeed an honor and nothing less than an accomplishment. To all of you considering this position, we would like to share some insights of 2 veteran tour guides."

When you are offered the position of campus tour guide, there are certain responsibilites that go along with the job. You will be expected to show up at your given time ready to give a tour. If you cannot, for some reason, it is your responsibility to find a replacement, of which there are quite a few to choose from. In the event that you cannot find a replacement, you are AT LEAST responsible for notifying the office of your inability to give your tour.

Even if there is no scheduled tour for that time slot, you are still expected to show up. This is due to the fact that the office can never know when a student will come in without an appointment and ask for a tour of campus. This, in fact, happens quite frequently. It is NOT the responsibility of the receptionist to notify tour guides of cancellations, for the appointment schedule changes continuously.

These responsibilities are not unique to the Admissions Office. Most campus employers expect students to work during their scheduled times or find a replacement. The Admissions Office is actually very LENIENT in allowing tour guides to miss 3 tours. Some employers do not allow any absences.

Given the nature of a tour guide's position, we agree with these guidelines. People who come to visit Juniata should not have to wait for an hour while the receptionist frantically searches for a tour guide that hasn't shown up because they "forgot" or "over slept."

As far as Ms. Radcliffe's situation is concerned, we are not in a position to pass judgement. However, we do feel that some of her accusations are unfounded. Being tour guides for the last 3 years, including summers, we have come to realize the importance of our position as student spokesmen, and we wish to clarify these issues to prevent further misunderstandings.

Sincerely,
Dana Harriger

Students Irked

Dear Editor,

We read a letter from a former tour guide which was printed in last week's paper, and we would like to add our own comments.

First, being a tour guide is a real job. One receives a paycheck once a month, just like all of the other on-campus jobs. Apparently, this tour guide considered this a sacrifice and inconvenience to her daily life. Why then, did she apply for employment in the first place? If the early morning hours, rain, and snow were such problems, why didn't she work for Food Service during lunch and dinner hours? A job is a responsibility, not a burden. Employers in the "real world" wouldn't even take a second glance at someone with that type of attitude.

Secondly, let us say that we are sincerely sorry about the tour guide's personal problems. Perhaps the Admissions Office honestly made a mistake on the schedule for spring term. They certainly are busy at this time of the year, and it would be understandable. A little more understanding might have been appropriate, instead of a nasty, slanderous letter. After all, there are other jobs on this campus if she needs work so badly.

For one last comment - someone was in the wrong. Who knows which party was responsible? What count is the maturity and tactfulness of handling the situation. Instead, we got a temper tantrum. (Sorry about that, Admissions.)

Sincerely,
A Group of Irked Students

It All Clicked

Dear Editor,

There are a lot of reasons not to do a spring musical. So many things can go wrong with musicals: dance steps out of sync;imbalance between orchestra and voices; problems with set and costumes, even laryngitis. You can never hear everything in Oller unless you're sitting in the first three rows.

Then too, there's not enough time after choir tour. The students are likely to be over committed what with finals ahead, papers, interviews. They're not going to learn those lines by May 1, no way. Best play it safe; maybe try . . .

But fools rush in . . . (where major universities are making cut backs, where broadway vets can seldom muster a success.) So you work. You rehearse the night before an exam, with two papers due before the end of the term; time you really can't afford. What thanks do you get?

Eight-fifteen p.m., Saturday, May 3, Oller Hall: Mrs. Cronin (age 87) is there (she'll nod off in church tomorrow, just you see.) and Trixy (age 6) two rows down on the left ("She was up late last night, better take an asile seat, we might have to split at intermission.") And of course there were assorted trustees, students (come to see how roomy was doing in the dance routine) faculty and townies ("We used to have such good plays when whats-is-name was here.") It ran the gamit. Huntingdon audiences usually do.

I'd heard good things about "Kiss Me" from the Thursday nighters ("What miss Cosby, Cheers and Hill Street?") I was part of the Saturday night crowd, halfway down on the left, just behind Mrs. Cronin.

The orchestra begins (the one we didn't know we had) students, alums, faculty. Rich, sumptous sounds of a magnificent overture Oller. Precision, bouncy novelty numbers follow foot tapping piano pieces. The choir s the night with number after delightful number as an eager audience claps (sometimes too soon). It's spontaneous now, not the polite expected patter you hear at (say) commencements.

Despite all the agonies, the problems, the doubts, or perhaps because of them, it all clicked. It all came together: diction (you could actually hear everything in Oller, everything!) the balance between orchestra and voices, the pace, the costumes, the timing, the contrasts between serious and novelty numbers. It all clicked. Not just well, but superbly, and not just a number or two, but the whole sha-bag.

Eleven p.m.: Trixy is still wide awake, on her feet and clapping, so too is Mrs. Cronin. So too are the students ("Ya done good roomy.") and the trustees and the townies and all the rest of us. Somehow the bit of feedback in the 3rd mike has paled now. The critics pen is stilled and the audience is casting its ballots in the only way that matters. For the cast, the many, many support "others", for Joe, Ibrook, Howard, Deb, Becky, Laura (and the list goes on, I'm bound to have left someone out.) You brought us to our feet. There is nothing more to say (Cole himself would have been proud.)

Sincerely,
Dale Wright

Director's Thanks

A Director's Note of Thanks,

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all those involved in making "Kiss Me Kate" a success. 800 or more people saw the show and thanks to your talents as singers, actors, dancers, technicians, and teachers of vocal and instrumental music, they went away feeling happy. In these days of international tensions and personal concerns this was a much needed respite.

To those of you who demonstrated the prolonged commitment needed this is an additional thank you for making the project a success. To direct such a production is a challenge but also holds the potential for a period of tension (a nice phrase meaning "a pain in the neck"). Because of the willingness of the greatest share of the group to give of their time and talent a quality production developed and the job of directing proved to be a positive experience for this person.

In summary, in lieu of a personal card to each of you let this be my thank you. Keep you talents growing.

Tired but Happy,
Howard H. Crouch

Regatta Cancelled

Dear Editor,

The Commonwealth of Penna. Fish Commission and Waterways Patrol has issued Juniata College an ultimatum. They have demanded our signatures on a document which would "indemnify and save harmless" the Commonwealth of PA and would position Juniata College as the liable sponsor of Raft Regatta. In this official capacity as the sponsor, college representatives would be required to enforce the laws of the Commonwealth. As you know from reviewing the Raft Regatta Rules, operating a water craft ("any device used as a means of transport") under the influence of alcohol is against the law. College officials lack authority to and have no obligation to enforce Commonwealth laws; particularly off campus in a public area.

If we do not sign the permit and then proceed with Raft Regatta in the traditional manner, Juniata College, as a corporation, and officials of the college as individuals will be given citations for violations of Commonwealth of Penna. Statutes.

Having been presented with these insurmountable barriers and restraints, it has become our sad task to inform you that we are forced to cancel one of the most successful and enjoyable traditions of Juniata College, The Raft Regatta.

We Need Spring Fling

Dear Editor,

As one of many aggravated students, I would like to take this opportunity to voice my opinion on the recent actions, taken by whomever, which have totally made Juniata out to be a boring place. Granted we already know the town of Huntingdon doesn't have much to offer to the college atmosphere, so many students depend on things like Raft Regatta — which we all know has been cancelled from the Juniata school calendar. So what do we, the students, have to look forward to this weekend? Well, we have the alternative Raft Regatta weekend, YEAH! I'd rather stay in bed and catch up on some sleep. It is true that the school was able to get a group called "The Band" to come and play at Juniata, that's great, but $5 a head, yeah, you might get 150 kids. Then I hear the concert will be in the gym, excuse me if I'm wrong, but this is spring, isn't it? Why not have the concert outside, i.e. right in front of the North Dorms would be perfect place.

You can put the band's stage down by the side of the parking lot of the gym and all the students could set blankets, or what have you, on the grass — from the parking lot all the way up to North and TNT Dorms. Plus you want to have the concert in the day, not in the evening — this is the last weekend to party. Remember, too may people will be too busy getting drunk at 8:15 p.m., no one will want to go to a concert.

If you don't mind me suggesting (I speak now from experience and I'm sure others can too) Juniata needs a "Spring Fling" or "Party Festival." Recent visits to several different colleges within the past 2 years, I have experienced some great spring weekends. I have seen many free concerts: The Hooters, Run DMC, George Thorogood, and Smash Palace to name a few. What I feel Juniata needs is a real format for a spring weekend. Yes Mud Volleyball has been a tradition, but extended into mud wrestling and muddy run races, come on, guys, we can do better than that.

What else more can we say. We realize the lack of time the school had to prepare for this weekend, and some people worked night and day to get us something. Thanks, hopefully next year will be better.

Sincerely,
Mike Antenucci

Cancelled

Someone asked if the issue were mainly alcohol. The answer was no. Public safety under any conditions is Valentine's reason for enforcing the law. If anyone simply falls off the raft, and has not been drinking, all other people on it are responsible.

Someone asked if the school just accepted this or tried to find a way around it. Bill said all options were weighed and there is no way around it. He said, "We are between a rock and a hard place."

by Mike Shapiro

Something strange is happening on campus. On any given night, on the grounds between Tussey and Sherwood skirmishes are being fought. People, dripping wet, scurry for cover. If one listens closely, the silent whoosh of wombats being unleashed can be heard behind the whooping battle cries.

Yes, there is a water war raging here at Juniata. Small, tightly organized factions are doing battle in the night. Armed with Water Uzi, Water Balloon, and the Deadly Wombat, groups from Tussey, Terrace, and Sherwood are proliferating. It is also rumored that bands from East, South, and even Lesher are forming.

This reporter has managed to gain the confidence of the leaders of one of the groups from Sherwood. Apparently superior in their armaments and "success rations," this group is now having difficulty finding worthy advisaries.

The tactics and practices of this group (whom I shall assign the psuedonym "7-UP" to) are simple and essentially universal. The basic principle is to seek out the other groups and soak them. Anything goes during an engagement, as long as only water weapons are used and no property is damaged. It is also understood that debris from a conflict are to be cleaned up by participants and that the insides of buildings are to be avoided.

While following these seemingly simple guidelines, the "7-UP" group has proved its overwhelming dominance in battle. I posed the question of "why?" to the leader and his munitions (who wish not be identified). Their reply was concise, "We're highly organized, we have technologically advanced weapons and have an effective deployment method." In addition to these advantages I've noticed that they religiously adhere to their paramilitary-motto "If you don't trust them — Dust them!" A bit savage perhaps, but effective.

This report may be a bit confusing or cloudy, but the whole phenomena is too. Shrouded in secrecy, water battles are fought and won in the bushes and parking lots on campus, usually in a matter of minutes. Prolonged engagements of an hour or more are not unheard of though. The more I follow the "7-UP", the more I see the lunancy and organization behind it all. These bands have formed almost spontaneously, and are there thriving in the dark recesses of Juniata College.

Students Present Instrumental Recital

A recital of instrumental music performed by Juniata College music students will be held Tuesday, May 13 at 7 p.m. and 8:30 p.m. in Oller Auditorium.

Flute, guitar, piano, organ and harpsichord selections by such composers as Bach, Chopin and Couperin will be performed. In addition, original compositions by students Donna Smith and Brian McCallum will be included. All of the performers are students of Juniata faculty members Bruce Shettig (guitar), Terry Murray (piano and organ), Diane Gold (flute), Mary Beth Linton (piano and harpsichord), Katsuko Ochiai (piano) and Patricia Lloyd (piano).

The public is cordially invited to attend this free concert.

After listening to the latest LP by Let's Active, you might swear that you know their sound almost too well. In fact, your parents may (and regrettably so) do the same. The reason is fairly simple: Mitch Easter and his band sound very reminiscent of the twenty-year-old sensation known as the Beatles.

"The Fab Four? No way," you say. "Yes way." Sort of. Mitch's vocals hit you a little like Lennon. Well, more like McCartney . . . or a combination of the two? It is difficult to explain, but worth your while to listen to. When it comes to the music, the gap between the two groups becomes somewhat wider. You can pick some of the guitar riffs right off the Revolver album, and so it seems Let's Active sis. But they sound new, fresh and — despite waht purists may say — just as good as George Harrison's strumming, if not better.

Overall, the music and vocals combine to form a sound which is (don't hold your breath) a Neo-psychedelic-like-the Beatles-might-be-if-they-didn't-break-up-energetic-garage-band-fun-great guitars-lose-yourself-in-it-kind-of--music.

Five songs really stand out on "Big Plans For Everybody" (which is the album's so far unmentioned title.) "In Little ways," Talking to Myself," and "Fell" represent the best of the Beatle-ish tunes. The partly acoustic "Badger" and the snappy, rockabilly-ish instrumental "Route 67" finish up the first and second sides respectively (and respectfully) with that 60's edge. If you liked the Beatles, check this album out. Otherwise, listen to it anyway — Let's Active puts out a great sound which stands tall on its own.

dy Sports+Recreation Center. Tickets, priced at $5 each, are now on sale at the information desk. Acting Director of Programming Bill Huston said, "The price is as low as we can go since it wasn't in the budget, and this band is more expensive than Raft Regatta would have been.

"The Band" first left their mark on the American music scene performing with Bob Dylan. The group cut two albums with Dylan before going out on their own. It was not long before "The Band" made a name for itself with such hits as 'Up On Cripple Creek," "The Weight," "The Night They Drove Old Dixie Down" and"Life is a Carnival."

"The Band's" popularity continued to grow with each new album and concert tour. Their album "Music From Big Pink" has become a classic, and their seven other albums including, "Rock of Ages" and "Northern Lights, Southern Cross," became just as popular.

This concert event at Juniata is being sponsored by Center Board as part of the Alternative Raft Regatta weekend. Tentatively, the weekend will wrap up Saturday night with an outdoor midnight movie sponsored by the Film Committee.

Leave a clean trail.

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

by Joe Scialabba

No, this is not about Raft Regatta. I've been depressed for long enough.

Speaking of depressed, how about this one. . .

A college classmate of mine (and some of yours too) has had some car trouble in recent weeks. For the sake of this article, I'll call him Dave.

Dave took his car to a local garage. He told the less-than-cheery mechanic he thought it was the gas filter. He left the car for service. After about two days he picked up the car. The mechanic said the problem was with the engine (brilliant!) but it should be okay.

Dave had been driving the car a couple days when again the same lack of power problem occured. Dave sat at a stop sign and the car knocked more than Tony Orlando and Dawn. So, again Dave visited the garage.

This time, the mechanic said, "maybe it's the gas filter." Dave again left the car.

I should add that Dave had visited many garages in his four years at Juniata, running up quite a large bill. One of his roommates, however, had to buy a whole new engine. But, that could be next for Dave.

A couple more days passed and Dave again took his revitalized vehicle from the garage. It wasn't running very well, but it was doing okay. Definitely worth the second bill in several weeks, he thought.

Well, it was not to be that simple for Dave. After a nice trip to the lake, Dave cruised, and then sputtered back to the borough of Huntingdon. When, at the stop light under the arch, disaster struck again. The car stalled.

The light turned red to green, red to green, etc. . . . The car never budged, but Dave's temper did.

Finally, he got the car rolling again, but only to the state store parking lot (also known as Drunkin' Donuts). Once again, the car will go to the shop. But how?

Dave claims he will get a free tow to the garage. I doubt it. It's just a part of being a senior:

—No job but plenty of expenses.
—Job but more than the normal plenty of expenses.
—Bank account but no checks.
—Car but no gas.
—Gas but no car.
—Gown but no shoes.
—Shoes but no suit.
—etc. . .

I don't know why I wrote this, but like Dave, I'm running out of solutions to this weekly problem.

Soap Star To Visit J.C.

Shaughnessy, better known as Shane Donovan of the daytime series "Days of Our Lives," will visit the Juniata College campus Saturday, May 17 in support of the Peace and Conct Studies Program.

Shaughnessy will be the guest of honor at a dinner to be held at 6 p.m. in the ballroom of Ellis College Center. At 8:15 p.m. he will present a lecture in Oller Auditorium discussing his acting experiences, including his work in soap operas. In addition, he will talk about his activity in peace issues and his involvement in the organization "Beyond War," a non-political, educational movement that promotes peace through knowledge and understanding and informs people of the awesome threat to survival posed by nuclear weapons.

Born in London, Shaughnessy is a graduate of Eton College and Magdalene College, a division of Cambridge University. He also attended London's Central School of Speech and Drama. Before coming to the United States in 1983, he appeared in several British television productions.

Since then, he has been involved in various theatre performances as well as roles in the soap operas "General Hospital" and "Days of Our Lives."

Both the dinner and the lecture are open to the public with the admission for both priced at $15. Tickets for just the lecture are $2. Juniata students and staff may attend both the dinner and lecture for $10. All tickets are available at the information desk in Ellis College Center or from the college's Development Office in Founders Hall, (814) 643-4310, ext. 210. The event is sponsored by the Juniata College Peace and Conct Studies Committee.

Skeet Champ

Charles K. Bear, a sophomore at Juniata College won the prestigious American Skeet Competition recently in Peoria, Illinois.

Bear scored a perfect mark of 100 in the competition to capture the National Championship at Bradley University.

"I expected him (Charles) to do well, hoping that he'd win. His stellar performance is an example of what can be accomplished with practice and patience. He shot extremely well under pressure." said trap and skeet coach Jack Linetty.

Bear is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Bear of York.

More than 150 shooters participated in the four-day event. Other Juniata students making the trip were Dan Bailentine, Randy Farkosh, Shawn Wescott, and Philippe Metge, an exchange student from France.

Kiss Me Kate Musical Reviewed

by Helen Bailey

"So what do you do at a quarter to two, with only a shrew to kiss." This question is resolved in the Shakespeare play, 'The Taming of the Shrew' and in Cole Porter's musical which was excellently presented last Thursday, Friday, and Saturday in Oller Auditorium.

"Kiss Me Kate" is a musical comedy concerning the strained relationship and the eventual making-up between Petruchio and Katherine in the 'Taming of the Shrew' and their real selves, Fred Graham and Lilli Vanessi acting together in the Shakespeare play.

The opening of the musical does not do justice to the scenes that follow. Slightly weak in the singing parts, the eighteen students in the ensemble were all needed to boost the start. The main personalities however, soon began to show through.

The main character of Kate (also acted as Lilli) played by Jocelyn Fowler, is presented as being moody and unamused most of the time, and as being negative about everything. Hiding these feelings is not meant to be the character's strong point.

The part of Lois Lane (Bianca in Shakespeare) played by Molly Bagwell, comes across as one of the major personalities. Her voice is powerful and although sometimes slightly obscured by the power of the orchestra, is projected with great confidence.

The acting in the play, 'The Taming of the Shrew' goes hand in hand with the acting in the musical. Sometimes it becomes slightly hard to adjust to the characters, due to the swift changes from scene to scene. These changes seem to make the production even more worthy of praise. Acting seemed to be most impressive where the main characters were concerned but the other smaller parts were equally well portrayed.

In the musical each character acts as totally fitting the part he or she plays in Shakespeare. This is certainly good, consistant acting.

The females generally had better singing voices, and any songs that were not quite as good as the rest, were not weak, they were simply less strong. Jocelyn Fowler, in the final scene sang "I Am Ashamed that Women are so Simple" with only the piano to accompany her. "So in Love" from scene Three was beautifully done, and her performance of "I Hate Men" from the Fifth scene came across as very powerful, almost like an anthem.

In contrast the beginning of the Second Act began less strongly with the singing of "Too Darn Hot." It is also slightly hard to see the relevance of the song in this context.

Scene Four brings the show completely to life. Entering from each side of the Auditorium, the cast dashed onto the stage carrying a banner naming the play. The lighting and scenery backed up the excellent Shakespearean costumes, adding light and color to the scene. This contrasts with the sparse (intended) plainness of the scenes of backstage.

Humor basically makes the musical what it is. This is seen in the two main characters and how they act towards each other. The two funniest characters are those of the gangsters, played by Roy Santa Croce and Tom Hunt. They drew laughs every time by their actions and words. Although some of the time it was hard to catch everything they said, it did not really seem to matter.

Because of the humor any slight mistakes were covered up and made unnoticeable. According to Director Dr. Howard Crouch there had been light problems and set problems, but he said the students handled it all beautifully. Certainly he looked pleased with the way it went on the last night after being presented with flowers and after seeing the standing ovation from the large audience.

The 'Shrew's' finale and the Grand finale bring the show to a fitting close—"My what a wrench," says Petruchio, "so kiss me Kate."

Lois Lane (Molly Bagwell) questions Bill Calhoun (Mark Heinly) as to shy he can't be good in the musical production "Kiss Me Kate."

STUDENTS NEEDED FOR COMMITTEES

Each year students are placed on Faculty and Trustee Committees. Students are needed for the 86-87 academic year. Each of these committees perform very necessary tasks. There are 6 Trustee committees and 11 Faculty committees. They are as follows:

Trustee:	Faculty:
Budget	Executive
Finance	Academic Planning
Academic Affairs	Personal Evaluation
Building/Grounds	Academic Computing
Student Services	J-Board
Planning/Development	Safety Committee
	Library Advisory Room Conflict/Arbitration
	Academic J-Board

Trustee committees meet twice a year and Faculty meetings vary with each committee. There will be a meeting for any students interested in serving on a committee on May 11th. At the meeting each interested student will be asked to fill out an application indicating the committe the student is interested in. Committees will be described in further detail at the meeting. All interested Students are welcome. MEETING: SUNDAY MAY 11th at 9:00 in the mini-lounge.

"The Taming of the Shrew" actors/actresses gather on stage before their performance begins.

President Binder To Receive Honors

Juniata College President Frederick M. Binder will be receiving two outstanding honors from his alma mater, Ursinus College, during May.

On May 18, Dr. Binder will travel to the Collegeville campus where he will be awarded the college's Certificate of Honor during Commencement ceremonies. The award, voted by the college's Board of Trustees, is being given to Dr. Binder in recognition of his "leadership in higher education and dedication to liberal learning."

In addition to receiving the award, Dr. Binder will be delivering "Remarks to the College Community" as part of the Commencement program. During the ceremony Dr. Binder will be sharing the platform with Gov. Richard Thornburgh, who will be delivering the Commencement address.

Also this month, Ursinus will be presenting Dr. Binder with its Annual Alumni Award for his outstanding contributions to the field of higher education. The citation will be awarded during the college's alumni weekend.

Tribute To Dr. Binder

Juniata College's faculty, staff and Board of Trustees paid tribute to Dr. and Mrs. Frederick M. Binder during a special recognition dinner held on campus Friday evening. Dr. Binder will be retiring June 30 after 11 years as Juniata's president.

Dr. J. Peter Trexler, professor of geology, opened the program with remarks on behalf of the faculty. Trexler, who also represented the faculty at Dr. Binder's investiture, recalled that the president came to Juniata "well versed in administration, higher education and with boundless, relentless energy, a determination to succeed, high intelligence, an ability to appraise rapidly the strengths and need of the college, and an impatient compulsion to get on with the task."

Trexler went on to say, "We faculty have to admit that, if we've worked hard, you have set an example for dedication and hard work for the college and our programs." In addition, he praised the many accomplishments of the Binder administration, including the construction of new buildings and facilities, the college's strong financial condition, and its inclusion in such publications as "Peterson's Competitive Colleges" and "Best Buys in College Education."

Speaking for the administration, Dr. Arnold J. Tilden, Jr., vice president and dean of student services, said Dr. Binder first-and-foremost is a teacher. "He's a teacher of students, he's a teacher of faculty and he's a teacher of administrators."

Relfecting on the three colleges Tilden had been associated with, he noted, "More students have approached me relative to Fred Binder, on an unsolicited basis, and said, 'Dr. Binder is the best teacher I've ever had.' "

Hayes presented the Binders with a special citation passed by the House honoring Dr. Binder's service to Juniata, recognizing his life-long dedication to higher education, and wishing the Binder's the very best in the future. Hayes also praised Dr. Binder's leadership in higher education in the state, noting his appointment to the state Board of Education in 1983.

Special tribute also was given to Mrs. Grace Binder. Speaking for the college community, Dr. Kim M. Richardson, associate professor of education, said, "Grace has enhanced the quality of life of many people in our community through her many talents." Richardson outlined Mrs. Binder's work on campus as the college's "First Lady" and her volunteer work in the community.

"In preparing this talk, I spoke to a number of people," Richardson said. "The things faculty and staff mentioned first to me were Grace's ability to call everyone on campus by name and her friendliness toward us all. She is a gracious hostess and a warm person who makes a special effort to welcome faculty and students to Juniata."

Following those remarks, Mrs. Jean Ellis, wife of Dr. Charles C. Ellis, chairman of the Board of Trustees, presented Mrs. Binder with a pillow cross-stitched with the college seal.

Friday night's dinner concluded with the unveiling of Dr. Binder's official presidential portrait which will be hung in the Alumni Lounge in the Kennedy Sports+Recreation Center.

Tributes to the Binders continued Saturday. The wives of the college's trustees made a special presentation to Mrs. Binder during their annual coffee which was directed by Mrs. Ellis.

At Saturday's Board meeting, Dr. Charles C. Ellis and each member of the Board praised Dr. Binder's accomplishments and wished him well in his retirement. Dr. Ellis presented Dr. Binder with a Juniata College captain's chair on behalf of the Board.

Dr. Ellis also read congratulatory letters from state Sen. Robert C. Jubelirer and state Secretary of Education Margaret A. Smith. Jubelirer paid tribute to Dr. Binder's many accomplishments in higher education and to his service on the state Board of Education. Smith praised Dr. Binder's leadership at the college and in the community, and looked forward to their continued association on the state Board of Education.

Dr. and Mrs. Frederick M. Binder pose with Dr. Binder's formal presidential portrait which was unveiled Friday night at a special recognition dinner on campus. The portrait will be hung in Alumni Lounge in the Kennedy Sports & Recreation Center.

Better Job Market For Graduates

Despite the boom in the stock market and the general economy, students are finding this spring's job market only marginally better than last year's, placement officials around the country report.

There are, moreover, odd things happening, they add.

Oil companies are hiring fewer petroleum engineering majors, but raising their starting salaries significantly.

And while business majors are getting more job offers than last year, their starting salary offers are down one half of one percent, the College Placement Council (CPC) says.

"It's not really clear why this is happening," says CPC spokeswoman Judith Kayser.

The much-anticipated business rush to hire liberal arts majors, moreover, hasn't materialized so far during the spring hiring season.

"There is a lot more talk than action" in hiring liberal arts majors, says John Shingleton, placement director at Michigan State and author of an annual survey of business hiring plans for new graduates.

Michigan State, the CPC and Northwestern University — which sposor the three major forecasts of corporate recruiting on campus each year — predicted that the total number of job offers to spring grads would rise a modest 1.4 to two percent above the last year.

The job market last year was a vast improvement compared to 1983 and 1984, when, according to the U.S. Dept. of Labor, as many as half the students were still unemployed six months after graduation.

Though 1985 grads' prospects were much better than their immediate predecessors', campus placement directors generally thought corporate hiring demand for students was, as Singleton put it, "still soft."

"What I have seen substantiates the forecast" of demand this spring, observes Victor R. Lindquist of Northwestern.

Lindquist projected a two-percent increase in job offers and a three-to-four percent rise in salaries for this year's seniors.

Shingleton came up with a slightly lower projection of a 1.4 percent increase in the number of job offers, and still thinks he's right.

"They (the statistics) have been a very accurate portrayal of the recruiting trend this year," Shingleton says.

No one, of course, anticipated the collapse in oil prices that began in December, the month all three surveys were published.

The dive obviously hurt oil companies, which have hired the most petroleum engineering majors. Three years ago, the engineers were the hottest commodities on campus, averaging six job offers apiece and getting starting salaries over $30,000 a year.

The impact at some schools has been immediate.

At Texas A&M, one of the biggest producers of petroleum engineers, placement director Louis Van Pelt says companies are interviewing fewer engineering majors than they did last year.

The oil companies, however, are showing "a reasonable amount of interest in accountants and management," Van Pelt adds.

But nationwide, petroleum engineering majors may not have felt the shock of oil company cutbacks yet, Kayser says.

During the last month, starting salary offers to petroleum engineers just out of college were 6.9 percent higher than they were a year ago, she notes.

"There is a (six month) time lag between movement in the economy and employment," Kayser maintains.

"The reports down the road will show a real drop in the number of offers" from oil companies, she says.

On the brighter side, virtually all other kinds of majors are doing better in the job market this spring.

"Overall recruiting (for all fields) remains strong," Van Pelt asserts, adding "our recruiting rooms are still full all the time."

Teaching jobs seem to be especially plentiful, Shingleton says.

At the State University of New York at Buffalo, where the number of corporate job interviews has increased since last year, placement counselor Mary Ann Stegmeier notes social service organizations seem to be making more job offers this spring.

Computer science majors are receiving 4.8 percent higher salary offers than last year, Kayser reports, though Shingleton has found computer job offers on the manufacturing end have "gone down considerably."

He agrees with Kayser that general employment prospects for computer programmers and software engineers remain good.

Kayser expects the relatively good economic trend to continue.

"The (economic) expansion will endure through 1986 and at least into early 1987," she spectulates.

Softball Ends Season With Another Winning Week

By Andy Hiscock

Juniata's Women's Softball team wrapped up their '86 season with another winning week. The ladies handily swept a double-header with St. Francis last Tuesday (15-5), (10-0) and lost a tough game to visiting Gettysburg Thursday (5-2).

Despite not advancing to any post season play and lack of press in the Juniatian this spring, the ladies compiled an impressive 13-5 overall record and a 5-3 MAC record. The team concentrated on the basics and gave a true team effort throughout the season.

Last Tuesday, the lady Indians swept St. Francis in a make-up double header. In the bottom of the first inning, JC started the offensive ball rolling as they picked up 2 runs with a two out rally. Jr. Janet Robison reached second base on an infield hit and throwing error at first. Sophomore Lisa Gray then hit a shot down the right field line for a triple and RBI and was then awarded home on a throwing error at third base. The ladies mainstay hurler Jr. Kathy Bednarczyk worked out of a bases loaded jam in the second without letting up a run. JC then blew the game wide open with a 5-run second inning. With one out, Kathy helped her own cause with a single and then stole second base. Jen Wade followed with single to left to put runners at 1st and 3rd. Freshman Tammy Achenbach drove in a run with her single to left. Freshman Laura Hoffman brought in two more runs with a single. Janet Robison cleared the bases with her first of two homeruns on the day to raise the score to 7-0 at the end of two. Kathy ran into some control problems that led to 4 St. Francis runs in the next two innings, but JC shut down the opposition for the rest of the day.

Laura Hoffman picked up her 3rd RBI of the game with a single in the 4th. Beth Higgins drove in 3 runs with a bases loaded double in the 5th after Sr. Cindy Corle, Kathy Bednarczyk, and freshman Tammy Achenbach reached base with singles.

Everyone contributed to the barrage of runs. Laura Hoffman had a great game as she went three for four and added her fourth RBI of the game with a single in the 5th. Lisa Gray ended the game early as JC envoked the ten run rule after Lisa drove the ball to deep right center for her third triple of the game and add two more runs. Janet Robison also had a good day as she went 2 for four with a homerun and 2 RBI's.

Well, entering game #2, JC had their offense in high gear, and it was time for the defense to get into the act. Jr. Kathy Bednarczyk rose to the call and pitched a no-hit shutout in game #2. Kathy pitched in every game for the Indians this year and started all but three as she amassed a spectacular 13-3 season record. Besides haveing a sctrong arm, Kathy made a number of excellent defensive plays and fooled some batters with a good change-up. The no hitter was saved in the last inning when freshman Emily Beach picked up a would-be single in shallow right field and gunned down the runner at first.

The JC offense never missed a beat as the bats kept pounding the St. Francis pitching. In the first inning Robison smashed her second homerun of the day deep to left with a runner on board as JC jumped out to a quick 2-0 lead and never looked back. Freshman Emily Beach drove in the first run of what led to be a 6 run second inning for the Indians with a single. Hoffman added two runs with triple to left-center and scored on a passed ball. Robison reached second with a single and an error. Lisa Gray continued to have a hot bat as she punched a ball down the right field line and legged out a home run and upped the JC lead to 8-0 at the end of two innings. Kathy then set St. Francis down in order helping herself with two fine fielding plays on hot smashes back to the mound.

JC added two more runs in the 4th on an infield single by Janet Robison driving in Laura Hoffman who was on third as a result of her triple to center. Janet then stole second and later scored on a double by Tammy Achenbach.

The game versus Gettysburg Thursday proved to be much different. Rather than lopsided blowouts, the ladies found themselves in a low scoring defensive battle.

JC proved that they can play the defensive game as well as the offense. After Gettysburg picked up two quick runs in the top of the first, JC shored up their defense and went to work at picking away at the lead. Despite getting baserunners in scoring position in the next two innings, JC failed to get a run across the plate and stranded four runners over the two innings.

Despite an additional Gettysburg run in the 3rd, the ladies refused to give up and JC came right back with a couple of singles and had runners on 1st and 2nd with two outs but once again failed to get the key hit. A couple of errors led to two more Gettysburg runs in the 5th inning. JC once again battled back and loaded the bases but managed only one run.

After holding Gettysburg in the top of the sixth, JC loaded the bases for a second time in two innings, and squeaked out another run before being retired. JC stranded two more runners in the bottom of the last inning as they lost 5-2. Allthough they didn't win, I felt that the game typified the lady Indians season in that they never gave up and the entire team worked together. The big hit wasn't there, but the ladies managed baserunners with bunt singles and heads up baserunning including four stolen bases and a run on a heads up tag play kept the ladies in the game. A few of the errors at the beginning of the game proved to be costly, but the ladies fought the entire game and made their own chances. They stranded 15 runners including nine in the last three innings. One key hit could have changed the entire complexion of the game, but no excuses have to be made.

JC Softball Coach looks on as Lady Indians play Gettysburg last Thursday. The Ladies finished the last week of the season with a double-header swppe of St. Francis 15-5, 10-0 and lost a tough game to Gettysburg 2-5.k Their overall season record stands at 15-5 and 5-3 in the MAC. Track MAC's

This past weekend several Juniata Track members, both women and men, competed in the MAC championships. Gino Perri came home with two individual titles, winning the discus with a throw of 155 feet 4 inches, and the shot put. Doug Spyad made it to the finals in both the hurdle events. Other entries for the men were Bob Yanckello, Frankie Phelps, Rich Bouch, Brent Bittner, and Sam Banardi.

For the women Sue Gill finished 3rd overall in the 400 meters to medal. Other women that competed were Krista Smith, Chris Jones, Sue Occiano, Amy Hoch, and Amy Telefian.

That concludes the track season for all Juniata members except Gino Perri, who will compete in the Nationals, which start May 17.

Baseball Takes Two

By Mike Antenucci

Last week Washington and Jefferson College visited Juniata to play a double header against the Indians. This was the first sweep of a double header for the Indians in over a month, the last time they took two in one day was on March 29 against Dickinson.

In the first game, which Juniata won 3-0, Senior Rich Howey went the distance and gave up only 7 hits. Juniata picked up their first run in the third inning when Dave Reed knocked in Steve Meeker, it turned out to be all the Indians would need.

Juniata picked up 2 more runs in the 6 inning. Steve Poska scored on an error, and Junior Frank Briner drove home Rich Howey.

In the second game Juniata was victorious 6-0. Once again the Juniata pitcher, this time Bryan Fornadel, went the distance. Fornadel struck out four and walked two giving up only two hits.

Jim Tomasetti and Steve Meeker were both 2-3 in the night cap. Scott Cole scored the first Juniata run after he was hit by a pitch.

Fiscal Year Proves to be Gifted Year

More than $1.8 million was given Juniata College during the recently completed 1985-86 fiscal year, making it the third largest giving year in the college's history. This year's giving total of $1,804,-84 is surpassed only by the 1984-85 and 1974-75 giving years.

According to Dr. Clayton N. Pheasant, vice president for college advancement, Juniata's alumni gave nearly $854,000 to the college in 85-86, some $300,000 more than the previous year. Approximately 3,500 alumni, over 50% of the alumni population, contributed this year. "This underscores the unique nature of the loyalty and support afforded Juniata College by its alumni," Pheasant said. "The percentage of alumni giving at Juniata is twice the national average," Pheasant added.

Pheasant also announced the successful completion of the largest Annual Support Fund (ASF) campaign in the college's history. This year's ASF total of $278,000 surpassed the goal of $275,000. David Beachley of Hagerstown, Md., president of the Beachley Furniture Company and a 1977 Juniata graduate, served as chairman of this year's ASF campaign.

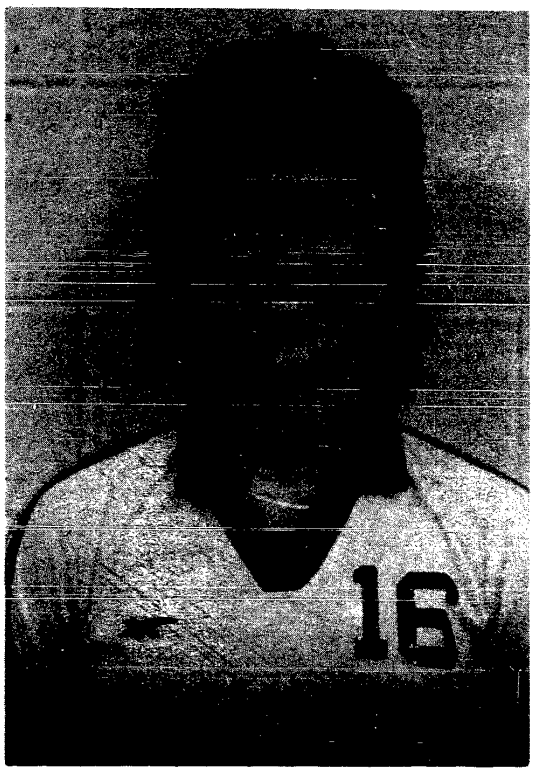
Beachley attributed the success of the Annual Support Fund to Juniata's loyal alumni. "Of the $278,000 raised, $143,000 came from alumni," Beachley noted. "This spirited response is a direct result of the efforts of our alumni and student volunteers who spent a great deal of time contacting graduates urging them to help make the campaign successful."

Pheasant also praised the work of Beachley and his volunteers. "The success of this year's Annual Support Fund drive is a result of Mr. Beachley's outstanding leadership and the hard work of the many volunteers involved."

Although alumni contribute the largest portion of the Annual Support Fund, gifts also are received from foundations, businesses and corporations, matching gifts, the Church of the Brethren, the Juniata Parents Association and other friends of the college.

Each year, gifts contributed to the Annual Support Fund are used for scholarships, teaching equipment and current operational needs.

Campus Mourns Tragic Loss



Senior Carolyn Stambagh

Senior Carolyn Stambaugh was killed in an automobile accident Saturday, August 30, on the Baltimore Beltway, Route 695.

Carolyn was traveling to visit her boyfriend, Juniata graduate Tim Barnett, who lives in the Baltimore area. She pulled onto the median strip and was sitting outside her car when she was struck by an automobile. The car's driver had suffered a diabetic seizure at the wheel.

She was flown to a Baltimore area hospital where she died four hours later.

Carolyn, a native of Thomasville, was a four-year starter on the womens' volleyball team and Student Government Treasurer.

A Memorial Service was held in Carolyn's honor on Sunday, August 31. The service, held in the Memorial Gym, included remarks by Dr. M. Andrew Murray, Campus Minister, Danielle Rupp, Student Government President, and Lori Bason, captain of the volleyball team.

Funeral services were held on Wednesday, September 3, in Thomasville. The Stambaugh family requests that in lieu of flowers, donations be made to the Founders Club of Juniata College in Carolyn's name.

Convocation Opens Academic Year

Juniata College's 111th academic year officially opened Monday morning with the fall Convocation ceremony featuring the first public address by the college's new president, Dr. Robert W. Neff.

In his remarks, Dr. Neff noted that Juniata has received a great deal of recognition in recent years. "The experts know that Juniata is an outstanding institution," Dr. Neff said, pointing to the college's inclusion in "Peterson's Competitive Colleges," "Best Buys in College Education" by "New York Times" education editor Edward Fiske, and the "U.S. News and World Report" study of the 90 best liberal arts colleges in the country.

Dr. Neff told the audience of students, faculty, administrators and trustees that he was committed to enhancing the college's excellent academc reputation. In outlining his goals, the president said he would strve to make the college better known outside the central Pennsylvania region, and enhance the sense of community throughout the college. "It is essential that each part of the college community views one another clearly."

Prior to his remarks, Dr. Neff was officially welcomed to the college by representatives of the students, faculty and Board of Trustees.

Danielle Rupp, president of the Student Government, spoke of the new president and new academic calendar as major chabges. "This will be an eventful and exciting year for all of us."

Speaking for the faculty, Dr. Earl C. Kaylor, Jr., professor of history, praised Dr. Neff's academic and career credentials. Kaylor noted that the presidents of all small colleges have a difficult job insuring the continued existance of such institutions. "Dr. Neff's selection as president makes us all hopeful that Juniata College's future is secure."

Dr. Charles C. Ellis, chairman of the Board of Trustees, reflected back on the numerous qualities outlined during last year's presidential search. Ellis noted that Board members were seeking a president who was an outstanding educator, able administrator, inspiring leader, an individual of noble character and conviction, a fundraiser, a great speaker and a skilled diplomat.

"When I first looked at this list, I thought it would be impossible to find a person who possessed all these qualities," Dr. Ellis said, "but we have found such a person." In delivering his charge to the new president, Dr. Ellis said, "You have the credentials, you have the opportunity, now charge!"

"See 'ya later, Smiley."

"She's got a light around her and everywhere she goes a million dreams of love surround her
She's got a smile that heals me
Oh I don't know why it is
But I have to laugh. . .anyway." B. Joel

I can't believe I'm writing this Carolyn. The campus can't believe they're reading it. So many of us never had to deal with something so devastating before. The tears in our eyes and the lump in our throats won't go away. The usual "see ya later" in TNT Friday night seemed sufficient at the time. Talk about taking things for granted. We thought you would always be here, because we depend on you so much. For that winning point. For the student government money. For the beautiful smile. For the laughs, the hugs, and the good times.

Smile upon us now, Carolyn. Help the pain go away. We know you're happy. Remind us that it was part of a plan. A plan we can't find a reason for, but are trying to accept. When we're done reading this, we'll just stop and look around for a second. We'll think of you and we'll smile.

See 'ya later, Smiley.

Students Speak

by Debbie Ollinger

How do you feel the welcoming services on arrival day helped you?

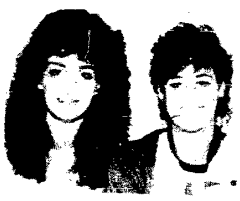
Rick Stoneking(freshman): "Being a freshman, I was scared about coming to college. When I arrived at Juniata the fear went away. I felt very welcome by everyone here. The playfair was a great experience too."

Phoebe Reecer(freshman): "Playfair was a good way to meet people. Everyone seems friendly, there was no problem finding my way or moving in."

Karen Makel(freshman): "They did a good job of introducing us to the surroundings and to help us meet people. The people that helped me move in (orientation leaders) were a big help."

Mike Ritchey(freshman): "A good job was done by the people at the information stops for incoming traffic. Playfair was kind of dumb but it did help me to meet people."

Daryle Dobus(freshman): "I arrived for football camp and it was unreal - I felt like I had been here for years. My experiences the first day made my adjustment a lot easier."



Beth Oatesand Sue Kunak(freshmen): "We found the orientation leaders and all the RA's really nice and helpful. Playfair was a fun way of meeting people."

Dr. Baxter Leads Five J.C. Faculty Members to India

By Buffy Heisey

India played a very hospitable host to six members of Juniata's faculty June 9 through July 21, 1986. The Juniata professors included Robert Wagoner, Philbrook Smith, Wilfred Norris, Klaus Kipphan, Laurence Mutti and Craig Baxter. They went, together with ten other faculty members from nine other colleges.

The purpose for this trip was two-fold. Professor Craig Baxter, being familiar with India, was the coordinator of the trip and group leader. Secondly, the members of the group are all involved in the Peace and Conflicts Studies at Juniata. This trip was funded through the Fulbright—Hays Program of the U.S. Department of Education in Indian Currency.

The group attended a two week academic program in New Delhi. The program focused on the Ghandian methods of conflict studies. It included general lectures on India, specific lectures on Ghandi, and field trips to villages and other various historical and architectural sites. For the remainder of the time they were in India, they toured this marvelous country. It is easy to see why Agra, the site of the Taj Mahal would be first on any visitor's list. Next they entered the holiest city for Hindus, Varanasi. Jaipur, also called the "pink city" is the center of the Ragput culture. Ghandi's headquarters in Ahmallabad was a definite must for the tr[illegible] Bombay, the cosmopolitan [illegible]nter of India, was the next attraction. Goa, a former Portugese colony was the next stop. Mysore was a capital of a fromer India Princely State. The last city visited was Bangalore, the center of India's high tech industry. Incidently, in Amillaball the group met a Juniata alumnus, Philip Thomas, who was on the faculty of the India Institute of Management.

After the group had returned home, Professor Craig Baxter stayed and visited Pakistan and Bangledesh to meet politicians and journalists. In Dhaka, Bangledesh, he met with the Prime Minister, Leader of the Opposition, and lectured at Dhaka University. In Pakistan he met with the Leader of the Opposition and members of the cabinet.

It is always most interesting to get first impressions of a place from someone who has never been there before. Professor Klaus Kipphan visited India for the first time with the group last summer. He shared some of his enthusiasm about the trip. Kipphan said, reflecting the trip, "It was one of the greatest adventures of my life. My expectations were far exceeded. The Indians were the most spontaneous, hospitable people I've ever seen. Their generosity and willingness to explain rituals and their hospitality made it very easy for us to mingle. The Indians have lots of time for you." In relating a funny story he added, "Traffic is very hectic. It's not unusual to find an elephant, or perhaps a few "holy" cows walking among the many trucks, cars, buses, pedestrians, motor scooters, carts pulled by camels, and rickshaws on a highway in a cosmopolitan area." The three most popular questions asked by the Indians were the following: What's you name?; From where are you?; and what are you doing in India? Members of the group with cameras were also very popular with the Indians.

Have Another Day!

New Faces at J.C.

By Christine Schoonover and Linda Lloyd

There are several new faces among Juniata College faculty as the 1986-87 academic year gets underway.

Sandra L. Beard is the visiting instructor in economics and business administration. A 1984 Juniata graduate with a B.S. degree in business administration and French, Ms. Beard received her M.B.A. in May from the University of Maryland where she was a teaching assistant. She has been employed as a bilingual secretary with the World Bank in Washington, D.C. and as a research assistant with Management Logistics International, Limited in Arlington, VA. At Juniata Ms. Beard was the recipient of Brumbaugh-Ellis Presidential and Ridenour scholarships, and studied in France her junior year. She was a member of the Juniata Honor Society, French Club, and The Juniatian staff. This semester she is teaching Market Management and Management Processing. Ms. Beard says she is very pleased to be here as part of the staff. She remarked that the campus is the same, but there are many different faces among the administration and students.

Sylvie Clement is the visiting instructor in French. Ms. Clement recieved her DEUG, Lucerce, and Maitrise from Charles V College of the University of Paris. Most recently, she has been a teaching assistant in Manchester, England and also has spent time in Tahiti. In addition to teaching such subjects as law, typing, writing, French, and English, Ms. Clement has worked as a librarian secretary and a managing secretary. Ms. Clement likes it at Juniata College, especially since the cockroaches from her apartment at Hess are gone. She was shocked to see Huntingdon, because she is used to big European cities.

Ms. Ulrike M. Nickel is the visiting instructor in German. She is a graduate of the University of Dusseldorf with degrees in education science, German and English. For the last six years she has been teaching German and English to Japanese businessmen. She also has taught German to British soldiers stationed in Germany, and has taught English to businessmen at the Henkel Company in Dusseldorf. Ms. Nickel is teaching various level German classes. She is happy to be here and is really thankful to William Vocke, Klaus Jaeger, and the students in Hess, where she has an apartment this year, who took her shopping at Murphy's Mart.

Ms. Nickel and Ms. Clement would like to extend and invitation to everyone to join them at the French/German table in Baker Refectory every Thursday at 5:30. Only French and German will be spoken, but even if you don't know a language, you're more than welcome. They would also like to be able to improve their tennis skills during their stay, and are looking for someone to give them lessons. If interested contact them at Juniata College, extension 647.

Karen J. Rosell is the new assistant professor of art. She is a 1980 summa cum laude graduate of the University of Richmond where she was elected to Phi Beta Kappa. She recieved her M.A. degree in art history from Virginia Commonwealth University and holds a Ph.D. in comparative arts from Ohio University where she was a teaching associate and the recipient of a University Doctoral Fellowship. Dr. Rosell teaches the art history courses, which include Survey of Western Art, Ancient and Medieval Art and Renaissance Art this semester and Modern art, Baroque Art, and Survey of Western Art during the spring. Dr. Rosell is very enthusiastic about teaching at Juniata College, as one could tell when she spoke of how she really loves it here. She remarked on how friendly people are, and how interested, motivated, and fun the students seem. Amusingly enough, Dr. Rosell said she knows she doesn't look too much older than the students, and doesn't stand out as a professor, but she hopes to remedy that within ten years.

Susan R. Thorton is the new assistant professor of English. She received her B.A. degree from Middleburg College and her M.A. degree for the Niversity of Colorado. She also holds an M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from State University of New York at Bingamton where she was an instructor in introductory creative writing, rhetoric and literature for the last four years. Prior to that, she was an instructor at North Shore Community College in Beverly, Mass., and has worked in the fields of journalism, publishing and public relations. So far she is enjoying herself. She says that Juniata is very different, and much smaller than the State Universtiy of New York at Binghamton, but that it is refreshing to be in a new and smaller setting. Here at Juniata

Class of 1990 is "Oriented" to J.C.

by Lynn Merritt

Summer is over, and school has begun; and with it each year comes a new crop of underclassmen. Last weekend the Class of 1990 entered Juniata College. Most of them appeared to be timid and aloof, but they were eager to get started and make their mark on the school. The many games, activities and especially the people made their transition to their new home a great deal easier.

The new students had their first encounter with the orientation leaders when they speedily unloaded each car as it arrived. For each freshman this was his first link to the upperclassmen, and it proved to be an interesting and enjoyable experience. The orientation leaders offered help, advice and all their knowledge on the "college experience." Linda Selcher, an orientation leader for Tussey, said, "Being an orientation leader is a lot of fun. I met so many new people, and I think they will have a great time at school. I also met several upperclassmen."

The first major event for the freshmen was Playfair, which was held in the Recreation Center, Saturday night. All the freshmen gathered together to play crazy games and meet people. One of the games was to walk through the gym shouting out your birthday month. Once the person found his group, he was suppossed to introduce himself to the others. It was a different kind of game, but it accomplished its purpose: to aid the freshmen in meeting their fellow classmates. Sunday evening there was a lavish picnic which featured good food and great conversation. Once again everyone mingled and made new friends, but the upperclassmen attended. People discussed classes, professors, and the parties for the weekend. By this time most freshmen had made many friends, and their shyness was a thing of the past.

In the residence halls the Resident Assistants were the links to most of the weekend's activities. They are not only the rule enforcers; they are also tutors in times of trouble, advisors in times of confusion and friends in times of loneliness. They have provided the stability that some freshmen missed the first few days. Everyone in the college has been most willing to help the freshmen make this transition a lot easier. Juniata's greatest asset is its students, and their friendliness has been overwhelming. Juniata College is a great school, and from just the

by Amber Terhune

While the majority of Juniata students were still vacationing, working at summer jobs, or anticipating the return to school later in the week, the resident assistants returned Monday evening, August 18, to attend a four day workshop. The workshop was designed by Julie Keehner, Dean of Residential Life, to provide informational sessions on policy and resposibilities.

Tuesday's sessions centered on job descriptions and what the residential life staff expected of them. Juniata's judicial system and policies were explained by Arnie Tilden,Vice-President and Dean of Student Services, while Randy Deike, Director of Housing, spoke about administrative responsibilities. He also suggested how to effectively set limits and confront those students who exceed the limits or break rules.

The resident assistants were introduced to the foreign students on Wednesday in a session led by William Vocke. The day focused on developing an effective relationship between students and their resident assistant. The importance of listening skills, the motivation of other students, programming details, and crisis intervention were only some of the topics discussed.

Thursday began with a lecture by Dr. Jay Buchanan, Campus Counselor, on suicide prevention and awareness, followed by first aid and safety awareness by Jane Brown and Jack Linetty. The resident directors then led some Boundary Breaking exercises, which were ways for the staff to get to know each other. The returning resident assistants returned to share their experiences and offer words of advice. Thursday ended with a social and dinner with the new college president, Dr. Robert Neff, and his wife, Dorothy.

The workshop drew to a close on Friday by introducing the resident assistants to some campus resources: food service, the health services, the physical plant staff, and security. Lectures on goal setting and some necessary final remarks preceded an evening cruise and dinner on the Raystown Queen.

The workshop and its various sessions has prepared this year's resident assistants with the skills and information needed to organize a hall. They are all eager and ready to make this a great year!

Ward finds Huntingdon very middle-America, very charming, and very rural. (but then again, don't we all?) Ward likes the closeness he feels in Huntingdon, where everyone knows everyone else, compared to Hull, which is "comprehensively anonymous." The Ward's also enjoy the simple, country pleasures that Huntingdon has to offer, including the mountains and the Lake.

Ward was highly impressed by the warm hospitality he found in the Juniata community, and described the faculty as being incredible people who have been wonderful at making them feel at home. Both Ward and his wife were surprised at the number of social invitations they've received since they came to Juniata.

The Ward's arrived in Huntingdon in mid-August and will be returning home next July. Until then let us hope they have an enjoyable and memorable year at Juniata.

Saturday Evening Jazz

by Chris Huff

On Staurday, August 30 at 8:00 p.m., Tarnished Six play to an enthusiastic crowd on Detweiler Plaza in front of the Kennedy Sports + Recreation Center.

Tarnished Six is a Dixieland Jazz Band with a specialty in early jazz from the 1920's and 1930's. They are reminiscent of the New Orleans Jazz sound with selections ranging from popular songs by the Louis Armstrong to more obsure ones by Kid Orey.

Tarnished Six adds their special touch to the music. They provide a history lesson on both the beginnings of Jazz and the performers of that era. Interesting anecdotes include how certain types of Jazz evolved, why male pianists were called professors, and personal stories abut the artists who made the music.

The group consists of six members. The group's sound emphasizes the horns. There is a tuba, two trumpets, a trombone, and two clarinets. The sixth member plays drums.

Tarnished Six are both good musicians and good comedians. They add a pose of humor to an already entertaining show.

They are a band who appeal not only to the avid Jazz lover, but also to anyone who enjoys listening to some fun music.

The audience was very responsive to the band. Both senior citizens and young coupies were in the crowd. They all enjoyed the show. Tarnished Six is a band that can appeal to people of all ages. In the age of electronic disco pop, Tarnished Six add a nice relief. The are a band to see.

Movie Review

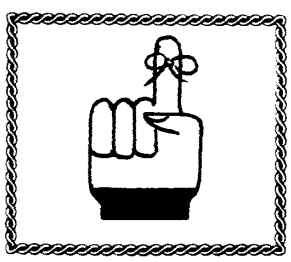
by Andrea Romano

As movies go, White Nights is above average as an entertaining adventure. It appeals to many grades of people.

It stars Mikhail Baryshnikov and Gregory Hines as ballet and tap dancers respsectively. Baryshnikov had defected to the United States from the Soviet Union during a U.S. tour of his ballet company. Hines portrays an American who defected to the Soviet Union after the Vietnam crisis which he was so discontented with.

The story begins with Baryshnikov's plane having to make an emergency landing in the Soviet Union. Because of his dance interest, he is put in the home of Hines so he can be watched. Both dance together and teach each other their ideas of dance. Baryshnikov believes Hines'growth as a dancer has been stunted. Hines believes Baryshnikov does not have the discipline that the Russian dancers have. Baryshnikov tries to influence him into going back to the states so his creativity and talent can be appreciated.

This begins the climax and the excitement. For those who enjoy dancing, White Nights is a must.



Exchange Professor

By Deborah Dougherty

It's only the ninth day of classes at J.C., so your senses aren't fully awakened to the classroom environment, until the professor begins to lecture in an English accent.

The professor is Don Ward, the class is Major American Writers I, and the accent is quite genuine. Dr. Ward, along with his wife Jill and son Duncan, is involved in an exchange program with Juniata's English professor, Dr. Ralph Church and his wife. The exchange includes teaching positions, friends, house and even the family car.

Dr. Ward received his PhD. in Twentieth Century American Literature, and while at Juniata he'll be teaching most of the first year courses: English I and Contemporary Poetry. In England Ward teaches Contemporary British Fiction and Drama, so he's enjoying teaching the different classes. Dr. Ward's wife, Jill, is teaching Freshman Composition part-time, and his son, Duncan, is taking a few classes here as well.

In the meantime, Dr. Church will be teaching English courses at the Hull College of Higher Education, located in Hull, England. The college itself has about 3,000 full-time and 3,000 part-time students enrolled and is spread out all over the city. Ward describes Hull as a working class, tight little city with a population of approximately 250,000. Hull was once one of the largest docks in England, but in recent years it has been hit hard economically, by a high rate of unemploymenat, and a great deal of poverty. In spite of all this Hull is still a very dynamic city, and the Church's should find that other large cities and attractions are easily accessible to them from Hull.

Fitness Trail

by Michele Johnson

Joggers will soon have a safer way of getting their daily exercise, according to Dr. Arnold Tilden, Vice-President and Dean of student Services.

A fitness trail will be constructed as soon as the needed funding is sponsored. The Class of 1986 endorsed approximately one-third of the funding for the trail last year, however, no additional funding has been found. The planning is completed and the physical plant is ready to start construction. The total cost of the trail will be approximately $1000.

Ten locations make up the trail, with each of the stations having helpful exercise hints about warm-ups, stretching and cool downs. It is a 30-40 minute workout and spans almost one mile.

The trail was the idea of Dr. Tilden who has been working on this project for a few years. He is concerned about the danger of students jogging along the road. The trail is constructed in such a way that students can run in the evening.

The Kennedy Sports+Recreation Center will be the starting point for the trail and it will then circle around East Houses and Sherwood. The trail will pass Tussey-Terrace, Round Top,the tennis courts near Tussey-Terrace and finally, end at the back of the Sports+Rec Center.

Each of the locations were endorsed by the athletic department.

Century II Campaign Achieves Goals

Phase Two of Juniata College's Century II Campaign has surpassed it's goal of $14.8 million, reaching the $15.2 million mark at the end of the 1985-86 fiscal year.

The achievement of the PHASE TWO goal was announced by Dr. Charles C. Ellis, chairman of Juniata's Board of Trustees. Ellis noted that when PHASE TWO of the $20 million Century II Campaign was launched in October, 1984, some $10.5 million had been raised in cash and pledges. He pointed out that less than $5 million in cash and pledges is needed to successfully conclude the Century II Campaign by the target date of 1990.

Ellis noted that there were many factors contributing to the success of PHASE TWO. "The campaign leaders did an outstanding job for Juniata. Through their efforts, we were able to secure several major gifts and challenge grants that served as catalysts for our fund-raising efforts."

The largest single gift in PHASE TWO came in March, 1985 when the Westvaco Corporation donated its Williamsburg conference center and 70 acres of property to the college. Valued at $1.1 million, the gift included the main structure, a beautiful colonial style mansion, as well as two other residential structures. Also on the property is a natural spring which produces some eight million gallons of water daily. Now known as the Juniata College Conference Center at Williamsburg, the facility is being used for a variety of educational seminars, meetings and workshops.

In addition to the conference center, two major challenge grants played a key role in the success of PHASE TWO.

A $250,000 one-for-one matching grant from the Pew Memorial Trust of Philadelphia for academic computer applications was successfully completed in the spring of 1985. Commitments from corporations, foundations, alumni, friends and a special appeal to the campus community and parents of Juniata students made this part of PHASE TWO successful. Through the challenge grant, the college secured $500,000 of the $1 million needed for the academic and administrative computer systems.

The $150,000 one-for-two challenge grant from the Whitaker Foundation of Camp Hill successfully secured $450,000 for new scientific equipment and instruments for the college. Several major grants, including $67,000 from the state and $50,000 from the National Science Foundation, along with individual and corporate contributions, were important factors in successfully meeting the Whitaker challenge.

Endowment for academic purposes and scholorship assistants also was a major goal for PHASE TWO. With about 80 percent of Juniata's students receiving some form of financial assistance, establishing new scholarships has been important. As a result of PHASE TWO, several new scholarships have been established by individuals and businesses, and existing scholarships have been enhanced. In addition, funds have been received to support faculty internships and visiting executive programs.

"Leadership has been a key to the success of PHASE TWO," Ellis said. "Without the hard work of General Chairman Joseph R. Good of Hollidaysburg and Honorary Chairman Vincent A. Sarni of Pittsburgh, PHASE TWO would not have been this successful. These two individuals, as well as the other committee chairpersons and leaders, spent a great deal of time and energy working toward the successful completion of PHASE TWO," Ellis said.

Ellis also praised Dr. Frederick M. Binder, president emeritus. "As president of Juniata for 11 years, Dr. Binder provided outstanding leadership and direction for the institution. The success of PHASE TWO is a tribute to his dedication and hard work."

Of the $4.7 million raised in PHASE TWO, more than $1 million came from Juniata alumni. "Juniata is fortunate to have an extremely loyal alumni population, said Dr. Clayton N. Pheasant, vice president for college advancement. "This generous support enhances the college's strong academic program and benefits future generations of Juniata alumni."

Dr. Yawkey lives in State College with hr husband and four young children. She is really enjoying herself and liked the enthusiasm of the students as well as the faculty. She is teaching Child Developmet and Introduction to Teaching the Exceptional Child this term. She says she hopes to draw on her personal experiences as a mother and a teacher in the public schools to aid her teaching here. In her spare time she enjoys traveling, hiking, jogging, aerobics, and reading. She is also enjoying meeting the faculty and new students. As she begins to find her way around, she hopes to become more involved with campus activities.

Centerboard Changes

By Melissa Iezzi

There are some changes taking place in Juniata's Center Board, the organization responsible for the planning of campus activities and special events.

There will be two new Center Board committees beginning this fall: the Recreation Committee and the Moonshiners Still Committee.

The Recreation Commettee will be responsible for transforming the Mini Lounge of Ellis into a "game room" of video games, pool tables and a ping pong table. Along with this, the seating in Tote will be expanded.

The Moonshiner's Still Committee will be advising the coffee house committee and the SNAP in the production of live entertainment in Tote. As is tradition, Center Board sponsored coffee houses will still be held during the week, but are moving to Tote instead of Sherwood's Catharsis Lounge.

The reason for these new committees is two fold. First, Center Board hopes to turn the Ellis College center into a recreational and entertainment facility for students, not just a place to eat and buy books. Secondly in response to the changes in the Alcohol Policy, Center Board is trying to create new entertainment alternatives.

Center Board will be holding a special election to fill the seat of Vice Chairperson. The date of this election has not yet been decided.

Be on the look out for more information concerning meeting days and times for the organizational meetings of the Recreation Committee and the Moonshiner's Still Committee. Get involved—your input will make a difference!

RECYCLE

Renovations

Stacey A. Halderman

It's back-to-school time again, and Juniata students may have noticed that there have been a few renovations done to the school to improve the outward appearance and the inw. During the summer, the Blue Army was very busy and and completed quite a few renovation projects. Not all porjects were completed during the summer and are still in progress.

Among the summer renovation projects that have been completed was the project on the second floor of Ellis Hall. The lounge ceiling and part of the branching corridors were painted. The carpet was replaced, and some of the furniture was reapholstered. In the dining area, the draperies were cleaned, and the campus bookstore received a fresh coat of paint.

Many other summer renovation projects that were completed were as follows: The Presidents House was totally refurbished, both inside and outside; a new playground was built for the Childhood Development Center; Oneida Hall had new storm windows installed; Tussey Terrace had the roof repaired; North Hall received four sets of new exterior doors; Mission House had fountain work done; new goal posts were installed; mechanical and other non-visible projects were completed; and many sidewalks were replaced.

Probably the most obvious project in progress is that of Oller Hall. This project has been ongoing and began a few hours ago when the organ had been refurbished. As of present, the roof replacement along with seat reapholstering is completed. Exterior painting of the front and West side is completed, but the East side and back are to be painted soon. The workers are busy now painting the new acoustical ceiling tiles, the foyer, and the interior walls. The stage curtains and the window draperies have yet to be cleaned, and the ends of the seats and the floor are to be painted soon. There is no exact projection date for completion, but it is hoped to be sometime this fall.

Many outlying projects are yet to be finished, and new shrubbery will be planted around the sports + recreation center.

The improvements have added both to the appearance of campus and to the pride of Juniata for the campus appearance and for those who are dedicated to improvement.

Mr. Jack Linetty, Director of the Physical Plant , comments that he and the workers have been very busy and he hopes that "a lot of improvements are visible and that the campus community appreciates the work that hs been done." We hope to continue to make the campus as beautiful as we can."

V103 Changes

by Andrea Zavod

Do you like the way V103 sounds this year?

You're going to like it even better in the months to come.

The addition of a satellite disk and a move to a different frequency band is going to make Juniata's student run radio station better than ever before.

The satellite disk approved for purchase last spring was bought by V103 and installed this summer. If you had not already noticed, the dish stands behind Ellis Hall.

According to station manager, Shelly Guest, the addition of the dish will enable the station to receive the ABC Rock Radio Network, international and national news, sports coverage, and music concerts.

Though the wiring of the dish is not yet complete, Guest hopes the project will be finished very soon.

The other major undertaking of V103 during the next year is the switch to a different frequency band.

Though a complicated story, here's the scoop:

The local Huntingdon radio station WRLR 106 FM decided to physically move their transmitter, and in doing so would interfere with V103's reception.

Since V103 is a lower priority station, operating at only 10 watts, the station was obligated to concede. WRLR went ahead with their plans, but also offered to help V103 relocate on the dial.

A frequency search was conducted, and based on distance, power of other stations, it was found that 91.9 FM was to be V103's new home.

Guest says that WRLR is being very helpful in the transition, the biggest help coming in the preparation of the applications needed to be submitted to the Federal Communications Commission, FCC.

This move, which will increase the stations' wattage to 100, will mean higher status with the FCC, but more importantly to its listeners, the better sound quality, improved reception, and larger listening area north and south of Huntingdon.

The entire process will take six months to a year, according to Guest, but at no time will V103 have to go off the air. WRLR has agreed to make their changes when V103 is ready to make the transition.

Meanwhile, enjoy all the great rock from the 60's,70's, and 80's on V103. Don't forget to catch V103's most poular shows, the Weekend Warmup every Friday night from 6 p.m. to 9 p.m. and the classic rock show on Saturday nights.

Any student interested in becoming involved with the radio station is encouraged to stop by the studio located in the basement of Ellis Hall.

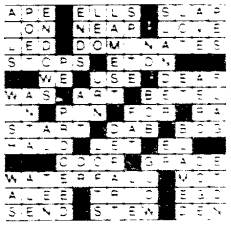
PUZZLE ANSWER



New Coach Brings About New Vigor For Field Hockey Squad

By Kelli Fahey

Besides seeing some new faces playing out on the hockey field this year, there is also a new member standing along the sidelines. This of course is Juniata's new Field Hockey Coach, Kathy Quinn.

Kathy is well known for being an excellent athlete and coach. After coaching for the past seven years, she is very excited and full of great expectations for Juniata's team this season. Kathy began coaching for the team during camp which started on August 21st. She is very pleased as to how well the girls have accepted and responded to her. Coach Quinn stated that her one major goal for the season is to get the team to carry pride and a positive attitude while wearing a Juniata uniform. Kathy knows that the team definitely has the potential for a winning season.

Originally from Huntingdon, Kathy began her athletic career in the local high school. She spent a lot of time at Raystown Lake which helped her to become an award winning water skier. Besides just coaching hockey, Kathy has also played and coached basketball. She received a bachelor's degree in Science and Biology at Mariot College in Ohio then attended Springfield College in Massachusetts and earned her Masters in Physiology.

Juniata's new Field Hockey Coach, Kathy Quinn coordinates drill during practice this past week. The coach's positive attitude combined with a good mixture of seasoned and new members may prove to be the key to a winning season for the team.

Ladies X - Country Outlook

The Juniata women's cross country squad will be built around a nucleus of eight returning letterwinners.

Coach Irene Chamberlain, in her third season with the Indians, expects seniors Sue Gill and Kris Smith to lead the way for the Tribe. Both Gill and Smith bring three years of experience into the 1986 season. In 1985, Smith earned a 13th place finish at the MAC championships. Juniors Krista Jones, Shelly Stepke, Sue Gulla and sophomores Julie Drummond, Kim Esc and Cherie Byars will add depth to the harrier team.

Newcomers to the program include sophomore Stephanie Payne of Audubon and freshmen Julie Dannaway of Tyrone and Janice Dellaguardia of Southhampton.

"We only have 2-1/2 weeks of training before our first meet, but we should be competitive at the Lebanon Valley Invitational. With eight returnees from last year's 5-3-1 team we are optimistic about the season." Chamberlain said

Action from Indian's scrimmage on College Hill this past weekend. The practice allowed the returning lettermen to fine tune their games and provided some important game play experience for incoming players. The Indians open their season at Lebanon Valley this weekend. Listen to the game live on V103.

Soccer Team Looks Solid

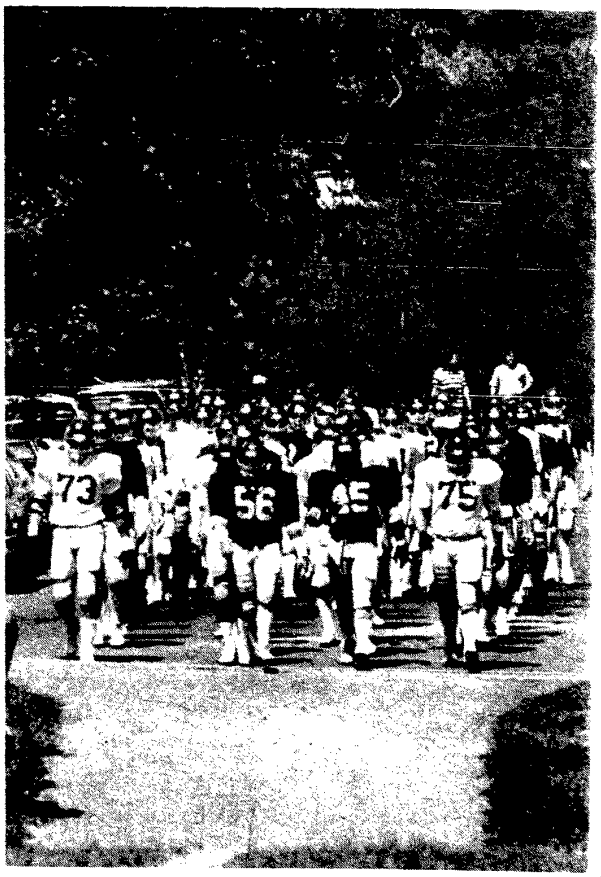
The 1986 soccer season will open on College Hill, Saturday, September 6th, with a match between Indian booters and the visiting Redmen from Shippensburg University. This non-conference game against the first of four Division II opponents should provide Head Coach Klaus Jaeger with a good look at his squad which consists of three seniors, five juniors, 10 sophomores, and seven freshmen.

A total of 16 matches are scheduled for the 1986 season. "The games against Shippensburg, Franklin & Marshall, Elizabethtown, Messiah and Bloomsburg should present the most challenging task. However, no opponont can be taken lightly," said Jaeger. Eleven lettermen return from last year's 4-11 season. Jaeger said "I hope that the team will continue with its marked improvement from last year and succeed in holding the opposition to even fewer goals this year. Solid defensive and smart midfield play will decide the outcome of this season during which the team is determined to shoot for an improved record."

According to Jaeger, the caliber of returning players and the quality of incoming freshmen make this year's team one of the best in the history of the program.

With keeper John Bobko studying in Spain this year, junior Walt Cupit is the front runner for the goalie position. He faces stiff competition from freshman Tim Phelps, an accomplished keeper from Flourtown, PA. The defense this year is anchored by letterwinners Paul Granger, co-captain, Mike Gifford, the juniors, and Brian Roselli. Their respevctive positions are challenged by Jean-Marc Bur, a transfer student from France, Jeff Moseman and freshman John Telanko.

The reins in the midfield are held this season by senior co-captain Chuck Kreutzberger, Pat Konotzer and Steve Grater. They are joined by freshman Robert Kelley of Doylestown.



Juniata's 1986 Football Team on their way to full contact scrimage this past weekend. Bright spots could be found on both offense and defense as the practice proved to be helpful as the squad gears up for their game at Lebanon Valley this weekend. Listen for the play-by-play on V103.

World News Update

by Todd Mullen

Washington,D.C. - Several high-ranking government officials, including Vice-President George Bush and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger, have accused the Soviets of falsely arresting US journalist Nicholas Daniloff. Daniloff was arrested last Saturday on espionage charges by the KGB. United States journalist groups as well as the State Department are urging Daniloff's release.

Moscow - Seventy-nine people are dead and 319 are missing after a Soviet cruise ship sank last Sunday in the Black Sea. Officials say the accident occurred when the cruise ship Admiral Nakhimov was struck by a cargo ship approximately eight miles from the port of Novorossiysk. One thousand, two hundred and thirty-four passengers were aboard, none of them were Americans.

Manila - The death of five people and the evacuation of 20,000 families forced President Corazon Aquino to declare Manila a disater area after Typhoon Wayne dumped 17 inches of rain on the Philipine city. The US State Department declared a travel advisory to Manila because of airport security problems, but it has been lifted.

Miami, FL - Cost slashing, layoffs, and routing changes are all part of Eastern Airlines' plan to slim down and save money. Rising customer discontent as well as aggressive competition and $154.7 millilon loss in the first half of 1986 have added up to some difficult decisions for Eastern President Joseph Leonard. 1,500 suspension of daily roundtrip flights between Miami and London are some of the measures being taken. It is hoped that these and other actions will save Eastern up to $160 million annually.

New Staff Adopts New Philosophy

by Debra Ollinger

The Juniata Admissions office has undergone extensive personnel and philosophy changes. With only one returning employee, the Admissions Office intends to use the situation in a positive way by instituting a more student centered approach to attracting future Juniatians, according to Rick Phalunas, the new Dean of Enrollment.

Mr. Phalunas is a 1973 graduate of Juniata with a major in biology graduate work mostly at WVU. He has worked at an array of institutions most previously at New England College in the President's Office which entailed admissions counseling.

"Our goal is to get all of Juniata involved in the promotion of Juniata," he said. "Students can do this by simply allowing themselves to be in situations where an interested group may be and describing Juniata educationally, socially, athletically and so on."

This new philosophy will be carried out by the new Admissions Staff. Michelle Bartol, the only returning member of last year's staff, is now serving as the Assistant Director of Admissions. She is a former counselor and a 1983 graduate of Juniata and is serving her third year with the Office.

Susan Benusa, a 1981 Juniata graduate, is now an Admissions counselor plus the new Assistant women's Volleyball coach. According to Larry Bock, head coach, she is "the best assistant coach in the country."

Another new counselor, John Laprade, is a 1986 graduate of Western Maryland and was a Dean's List communications major. He has worked in the communication's field as a production assistant in Baltimore and also is an avid marathon runner.

The familiar face of 1986 Juniata grad, Joe Scialabba, can also be found as an admissions counselor. Joe was the Blood Award winner for the highest GPA of a student athlete, and sports editor of the Juniatian, but probably best known as the 1986 All Class Night emcee.

A former counselor, Mollie McKibben has returned to Juniata also

Artist Series Opens Sunday

The 1986-87 Juniata College Artist Series will open Sunday, Sept. 14 with a performance by the Chestnut Brass Company in Oller Auditorium at 8:15 p.m.

The Chestnut Brass Company, a versatile quintet, is nationally known for exuberant performances on brass instruments, both ancient and modern. The traveling entourage is equipped with its own museum of instruments and features transcriptions of all sorts of music including their own originals. The group, selected as "Outstanding Young Artists to Watch" by "Music America" was dubbed as ". . . not to be missed if appearing within 100 miles" by the Fort Wayne "Journal Gazette".

October 29 will bring the Pittsburgh Dance Alloy to Juniata. This modern dance repertory company, founded in 1976, is actively committed to the development and presentation of today's dance expression. The Alloy's eight professional dancers work at the forefront of the contemporary scene, regularly producing and performing the works of important and emerging choreographers withir a national network of dance activity.

The highly praised sound of the Louisiana Repertory Jazz Ensemble will perform in the Ellis college Center Ballroom on November 14. This New Orleans based aggregation of professional instrumentalists includes leading jazz men ranging in age from 27 to 71. The Ensemble performs bold improvisations of classic New Orleans jazz on original instruments in authentic styles of the 1880-1930 era and have drawn enthusiastic com-

J.C. Support System guides us thru changes

Everyone seems to be talking about change. Juniata is undergoing a lot of changes this year. We all have an "exciting and eventful" year to look forward to.

I decided to sit down and seriously determine exactly how many changes I have gone through in the first few weeks of this "exciting and eventful" year. I was amazed to discover how much change has occurred in just my first weeks here. Change that has influenced me as a student of this college and as a person. Another thing I discovered was that much of this change was unexpected and unwelcome.

I honestly wondered how I got through it all alive, much less alive and happy too. I was just about to credit myself with being superhuman when I found the real answer in my HOBO class the other day. It is our support system that gets us through the changes.

We don't usually realize it like this but we are each other's support system. Together we have weathered storms until we are able to catch a glimpse of that rainbow. Just like they warned us, we have been hit with many changes already but we have kept each other alive and happy.

Get ready for more. The changes will never stop but, because Juniata is a special support system, neither will the rainbows.

Editor's Note: The following is the first of a series of articles submitted by students concerned with Apartheid Awareness.)
by Alayn Unterberger

"Apartheid—both petty and grand—is obviously evil." Stephen Bantu Biko

Friday , September 12 marks a very important date for S.A. It is the ninth anniversary of the tragic death of Stephen Bantu Biko, considered a civil rights leader and the "future of the Black Consciousness Movement."

Stephen Biko was born in Kingwilliamstown, Cape Province on December 14, 1946. He received his primary and secondary education from rhe local school system, and, at the age of 20, entered medical school at the University of Natal. It was here that he became politically active. Until 1968, Biko was instrumental in the NUSAS (National Union of S. African Students), a black student organization whose main source of power was located on white campuses. As a result, it was difficult for black students to hold leadership positions. Accordingly, Biko split from NUSAS and he formed the SASO (S.A. Students' Organization) and in 1969, he became it's first president. SASO served as a forum for "the needs and aspirations of the non-white students and to seek to make known their greivances." [pg. 4 of I Write What I Like]

Later, Biko began working for the BCP (Black Community Programs) which was the vehicle with which he was "working within the system." By acting in this manner, Biko did not mean that blacks should follow the lead taken by Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, which he saw as "collaboration in our own destruction," (p. 37) but that black S.A. had "to prove the whole game a sham and to break off the system."

"Black people," Biko felt, "must recognize the various institutions of apartheid for what they are—gags intended to get black people fighting separately for certain "freedoms" and "gains" which were prescribed for them long ago. Biko is seen as the Father of the Black Consciousness Movement in S.A. He believed that the Afrikaner (white S. African govenment) used a "divide and rule" policy to keep the blacks under its thumb, psychologically as well as physically. The Black Consciousness Movement seeks to give black S. Africans the psychological power "to grapple realistically with their problems, to attempt to find solutions to their problems, to develop what one might call an awareness for themselves." (pg. 114) Biko firmly believed in non-violence and envisioned a peaceful transition from the apartheid policies of the current t Afrikaner government to "one shared open society" in which both blacks and whites would rule equally.

In the beginning of 1973, Stephen Biko was banned by the S. African government and restricted back to his hometown of Kingwilliamstown, where he founded the East Cape Branch of the BCP, which was to be banned two years later. Throughout Biko's short life, he was detained for the last time in Port Elizabeth, charged violation of Section 6 of the Terrorism Act. Biko died on September 12, 1977 while in detention. His cause of death was listed as brain damage. An inquest held after his death proved that "he was kept naked and manacled" during his detention.

As Biko expressed it, "You are either alive and proud or you are dead, and you when you are dead, you can't care anyway. And your method of death can itself be a politicizing thing." (pg. 152)

*all quotes in this article are from the book, I Write What I Like, 1978 a compilation of Biko's writings (Published by Harper and Row, Pub.)

Campus prepares for parents

by Kelli Fahey

This year, "Fleeting Rainbows, Passing Years" is the theme for one of Juniata's lasting traditions which is Parent's Weekend. Parent's Weekend is a special time for parents of Juniata students to encounter the college life and to spend a few days with their son or daughter.

"'Fleeting Rainbows' represents the rainbows period of our lives, which are very important. They may be fleeting, but their effect can be lasting," stated President Neff.

Liz Snavely is the Chairperson on the committee for Parent's Weekend which is scheduled for the weekend of September 19-21.

Many preparations have been made in order to have another successful year. Liz estimated on having approximately two hundred parents joining in the fun. Parents will be able to attend classes, eat in the cafeteria, meet professors and deans, relax in the sports center and attend the numerous sports events that are scheduled. There are also special events for the parents such as demonstrations from the Science Center, an Andy and Terry Murray concert, lectures by Jay Buchanan, the campus counselor, and a Presidential reception which will allow parents to meet the new president and his family.

J.C. Galleries host fibre art and poetry

Fibre art and pottery by two Altoona artists are on display at Juniata College's Shoemaker Galleries through September 27.

The exhibit by Sharon Sell and Helen Gorsuch may be viewed weekdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. in the college galleries located in Carnegie Hall. There is no admission charge.

Sell's work includes a variety of fabric wall hangings produced by using fibre reactive dye on silk of clothing. In addition, her exhibit at Juniata includes yarn stitchery and a quilt.

A graduate of The Pennsylvania State University with a B.F.A. degree in drawing and painting, Sell also holds an M.A. degree in fabric design from Indiana University of Pennsylvania. In addition, she has studied at the Slade School of Fine Art in London and is currently working on her doctorate at Penn State.

Sell has served as coordinator of the Blair Art Exhibit of the Southern Alleghenies Museum of Art and has taught continuing education courses at the Penn State Altoona Campus. Her work has been on display at the Three Rivers Arts Festival in Pittsburgh, the Greater Harrisburg Area Arts Festival, the Southern Alleghenies Museum of Art in Loretto and at other area museums and exhibitions.

Gorsuch bases her pottery and sculptural work on natural forms with and element of fantasy. The way a piece evolves is basically dictated by the limits of working with clay. Each ceramic animal and theme pot is designed and hand built which allows only a limited number to be produced each year

A native of Sarasota, Fla., Gorsuch is a graduate of the University of Tennessee and has studied at Penn State, East Tennessee State University and Mt. Aloysius Junior College. Her sculptures can be found in private collections in New York, California, Pennsylvania, Florida, and Washington, D.C. Gorsuch has displayed her work in a variety of shows and exhibitions including the Three Rivers Arts Festival, Bedford Springs Festival Art Show, Central Pennsylvania Festival of the Arts and the Blair County Arts Festival.

Across the winding broken roads
Past the mountains and rural abodes
Marching on to games and fun
The bastion of learning, Huntingdon.

Packing, packing what a sight
Most of it, destined for Friday night.
Grab the shades to block the sun
Hop the line for Huntingdon.

There's lots of things that are no more
Like rafting drunk down Juniata's shore
Great keg parties now long done
Why return to Huntingdon?

We seniors remember a brighter time
When beer flowed freely and women looked. . . .oh well.
For ice cream unguarded they sure did run
Is all well in Huntingdon?

Then the cream trough was guarded
And semesters started
And a man called Neff then did come
To this bastion of learning, Huntingdon.
Cash deposits on kegs and taps
A ban on alcohol, perhaps?
The fun, the fun, we still seek some Need we look past Huntingdon?

Tune in next week.

Students Speak

by Debi Ollinger

How do you like the change to the semester system?

Tom Marle(sophomore): "I like it a lot. At first I thought 5 classes would be tough to manage, but the way it's broken up makes it easy to manage and is much less monotonous."

Brian Kopp, Andy English, Ernie Aschenbach, Barry Smith, and The Stork(absent from photo)(juniors): "So far so good. . .our procrastination abilities are definitely getting a workout. It will take another month, maybe longer to be sure."

Lauralee Snyder(senior): "I'm still getting adjusted to the new system, but I think there really isn't to much change to undergo. . .until finals."

Carie Larrick, Kim Ross, Lori Dobbins and Molly Bagwell(juniors): "We think the days are too long, especially in the afternoon. The professors seem to be still giving a trimester workload making it hard to keep track of assignments. One good aspect is that we've found time to party."

Scholarship to advance education

A new music scholarship has been established at Juniata College by members of the former Huntingdon Music Club, a cultural force in the community from 1928-67.

The scholarship, which will aid music students at Juniata, was made possible through the recent sale of the club's Steinway grand piano, orginally purchased by the organization in 1937.

The Huntingdon Music Club, which had its inception in the Music Committee of the Huntingdon Civic Club, recognized the need for greater opportunities for community musical expression. The club sponsored a variety of concerts featuring well-known artists. In addition, the club supported a large chorus and smaller choral groups, an instrumental ensemble and frequently presented productions of operettas and musicals.

In 1950, the club established a scholarship program providing awards to local high school students to attend summer music programs at Chautauqua, N.Y. The award recipients were expected to return to their high school with a desire to help and contribute to the music life of their school and community.

"Juniata College and the Huntingdon Music Club had a long and productive association," said Dr. Clayton N. Pheasant, vice president for college advancement. Many of the club's concerts were held in college facilities. "This scholarship will carry on the club's tradition of helping students further their appreciation for music through education. We thank the former club members for their support."

First Class Or Tourist?

A new year, a new academic calendar, a new president, a new beginning! It promises to be an exciting, challenging, and, hopefully, a rewarding year for all of us!

A question, it seems to me, that surfaces as we begin or continue on our journey through college is simply, "Am I going first-class or tourist?"

Dr. Bradley Dewey, academic vice-president at Franklin and Marshall College, discussed this question at a recent freshman convocation for parents and students. The issue is so germane to all college students that is seems quite appropriate to share his comments (and some of mine) with the Juniata community.

Going first-class certainly suggests taking advantage of all the resources and services available. It means seeking out the counsel and advice of faculty, advisors, and administrators on a timely and regular basis.

First-class means utilizing the Sports+Recreation Center, attending cultural events and participating in student government. The world of first-class extends beyond the self and on into the world of those around us.

By contrast, tourist-class suggests not taking full advantage of the overall and total experience available at Juniata. Rarely, if ever, finding time to talk to professors, non-involvement in campus events and residence hall activities, and doing just enough to get by seem to be characteristic of tourist-class students.

Dr. Dewey reminds us that, quite ironically, both first-class and tourist-class cost the same. It would seem that some are getting short-changed! The nice thing about it though is that we can change from tourist to first-class students at any time.

Chances are that if you choose first-class you will grow, experience and generally be more satisfied than your classmates who choose tourist. Maybe it's time to turn in your ticket.

Could your room win a contest?

Have you put a lot of time and energy into decorating your room, or are you making plans to decorate your room so that it will be a more enjoyable place to be? If so, then why not enter the Annual Room Decoration Contest sponsored by the Residential Life Committee and Student Services.

Applications are being accepted from now until October 10 in the Residential Life/Housing Office for the Annual Room Decoration Contest. Rooms are judged based on originality, execution, and impact on evaluators. There are three categories of prizes associated with the contest. First, there is a $25.00 prize for the best decorated room in each residence hall as selected by the Residence Director and Residence Hall Association. Second, there is a $50.00 prize for the best decorated freshman room on campus as selected by President Neff and a committee appointed by the Residential Life Committee. Third, there is a $75.00 prize for the best decorated room on campus, also selected by President Neff and the Residential Life Committee.

So, take a few minutes to stop in the Residential Life/Housing Office and fill out an application form.

Storming the Arch: Freshmen Initiation

by Andrea Romano

The mood was violent by the Arch on Wednesday evening. It was time again for the annual initiation for the freshmen men of Juniata College. It was, as it is every year, a sprited event involving a few dozen freshmen against the whole of the upperclassmen.

The men and women on the sidelines booed and hissed derogatory chants at the defenseless freshmen. They waited anxiously for the freshmen to make the first run. However it was uneventful as bodies were lightly thrashed by the wastesides. Vile odors were spewing from various containers and bottles. Many innocent bystanders were hit by a plethora of eggs and balloons. The crowd seemed to think the event was lame in that no real excitement had developed by the third run.

Minutes were passing as the upperclassmen waited for the fourth run. By this time the Cloister pathway was a messy scene of various excrements.

By the side of the Cloister, an injured freshmen received help from the referees. Thankfully there were no real injuries except for a few bumps and bruises. After the sixth run all participants quit, as again the freshmen failed to thrust their way through the arch.

Quartet's many special honors include performing for President Jimmy Carter and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin and an appearance on CBS' "Sunday Morning." "The New York Times" has called theirs ". . . a brilliant performance."

Showtime for each performance is 8:15 p.m. in Juniata's Oller Auditorium with the exception of the Louisiana Repertory Jazz Ensemble which will perform in the Ellis College Center Ballroom.

Each year, the Artist Series offers a varied selection of entertainment including music, dance, and theatre. It is designed to provide cultural and aesthetic opportunities to both the campus and the community.

Patron memberships, which include two reserved season tickets and a listing of names in each Series program, are available for contributions of $125 or more. Season subscriptions, providing one general admission for each program are priced at $30.

Tickets may be ordered by mail by writing to: Artist Series, Juniata College, Huntingdon, PA 16652 or can be purchased at the following Huntingdon area stores—Posers, Black's Jewelry, Keller's Steel's Pharmacy and Miller's or at the Ellis College Center Information desk. Also, special tables will be set up at Steel's Pharmacy and Miller's on September 11 and 12 from 12 noon until 5 p.m. and again on Sept. 13 between 10 a.m. and 4 p.m. Checks should be made payable to Juniata College.

What is Case?

How many of my fellow Juniata students know what CASE is?

CASE stands for the Committee on Alcohol Study and Education. In the past CASE has sponsored, 'Punchbowl' and the 'Pre-Madrigal Non-Alcoholic Cocktail Party'. It's image is that it is an anti-drinking organization. This is not what it stands for. CASE encourages informed choices about alcohol consumption. The motto is "If You Drink, Drink Responsibility."

The Committee has new ideas and projects for the year, but needs more student support. If you are interested in joining CASE send a note with your name and box number to. . . Box 16.

Did you ever dream of traveling back in time? Marty McFly played by Michael J. Fox never did, but he finds himself thrown back into the 1950's. This trip was made possible by McFly's friend Dr. Brown played by Christopher Lloyd. The weird scientist builds a time machine out of a DeLorean car and discovers it actually works!

While back in the 50's, Marty meets his parents as they were then. He spends most of his time avoiding his mother who has the hots for him, trying to get his mother and father together, and looking for a way back to the 1980's. Mixed in is a chase scene, a high school dance with Marty jamming on the electric guitar, and lots of laughs. With an appearance by Huey Lewis and music by Huey Lewis and the News, this is an excellent, entertaining flick.

as Assistant Director of Admissions. Mollie left JC to pursue a marketing job and to travel the country. She will take over the advising position of JCAA—Juniata College Admissions Association—which she founded when here previously.

Lastly, Marsha Kyper, a 1976 magna cum laude graduate of Slippery Rock University, will step in as Interrum Associate Director. She too is a former Admissions counselor and left to assume a position at Penn State. She, also, is pursueing her teaching certificate while at Juniata.

Mr. Phalunas believes Juniata's greatest strength to be its people itself. "We want people to come to JC and visit and feel they know the college—feel they fit in and can be part of the Juniata community."

It is in the visits to the college that Juniata shows its true colors. "People always say 'hello' and go out of their way to make newcomers comfortable," he said, "what we have is very attractive and we want to show it off and treat them as our guests."

It is with this attractive quality of the Juniata family in mind that Rick wishes to increase the number of campus visits. Seven visitor days and three open houses are already scheduled, along with special interest visitor days for science or law and civil service etc. . . "We want people to see and feel part of what we feel is special about Juniata."

The second annual "Journey to Juniata" is also scheduled. This is an overnight visit to the campus for high school seniors with bus transporation provided. "This year we are trying to get more students from the North and South, Northern New Jersey, Conneticut and Maryland if possible," Rick said.

Because of the desire to focus more on the student, the Dean has developed what he calls a "Quasi-marketing Approach" which attempts to understand the student who would profit from the Juniata experience making a successful college career and present them with the necessary information so they, themselves can make an educated decision.

To form a compatible match of student and college, this platform has three objectives. Intially expectations have to be focused, according to Mr. Phalunas,"we have to realize not all students want to pursue the same goals."

Secondly, because of the varied aspirations we must present Juniata in its liberal art style diversity—and all that we have to offer.

Lastly, we must find the things about Juniata that appeal to everyone regardless of their chosen field and weave particular preferences with general tastes into a fabric of a total feeling of confidence that will enable the student to make a responsible, adult decision.

Mr. Phalunas, Rick, encourages anyone who has ideas, criticisms or praise to drop by admissions or Tote, where he can be found often in the evenings, to talk about what he/she can do for Juniata on the admissions endn "Every student is a walking advertisement for JC filled with information that many perspective students need to know. Everyone can be part of the Admissions Office!"

JC's Fall Intramural Program Ready To Open

By Andy Hiscock

Juniata's Fall Intramural program is gearing up for the open of the '86 Fall season. If this year is like those of the past, ther will be plenty of action in the five sports offerred corresponding to the high popularity and participa ion in the intramural program here at JC.

Allthough new team entries for the I.M. leagues are now closed, and you still wish to get involved look for possible team entry extensions or try to get on an allready existing team and report to the Intramural office in the Sports and Rec center.

Sports offerred for the Fall season include the following-:

Co-Rec Basketball
Men's, Women's, and Co-Rec Softball
Men's and Women's Tennis (singles)
Men's, Women's, and Co-Rec Volleyball (2 leagues)
Men's and Women's Racquetball (singles)

All games will be scheduled on Sundays through Thursdays. As is a problem every year, the sports department is shorthanded when it comes to writers for Intramural as well as Varsity sports here at Juniata. Anyone who doesn't feel that their sport is getting enough coverage or is just interested in writing for the Juniatian is encouraged to attend the staff meeting in the Juniatian office on Tuesday night at 7:30 p.m. or drop a note in Box #667.

I encourage everyone to try to get involved if they can, and wish all the teams good luck.

Men's X-Country

The Men's Cross Country team will be lacking in numbers and experience when they open their 1986 season, but that doesn't bother first year coach James M. Payne.

"I'm really excited about this position. I hope this is a long term association because I think I can do some good things with the program," said Payne.

When the harriers open their season at Lebanon Valley on Saturday, September 13th, five runners will be dressed in blue and gold. Jim Gandy is the only senior on the squad, followed by junior Jonathan Monteleone and sophomore Jeff Boshart. Newcomers to the program include Martin Bunn and Bill Selak.

Payne, who replaces Joel Brown at the helm of the cross country program, is a graduate of Juniata Valley High School and Northern Michigan University. He is a sixth and seventh grade reading teacher at Huntingdon Middle School. Payne averages 60 miles a week in road work and has participated in two Boston Marathons. He said, "I'm interested in producing sound athletes with a good outlook on life. If I do that, the winning and losing will take care of itself.

Indians Open Season With Victory – Defeat LVC 26-0

By Mike Antenucci

This past Saturday, the Juniata Football Team opened up their season at Labanon Valley, and they picked up right where they left off last year, defeating Lebanon Valley 26-0. Scoring a touchdown in each quarter, the Indians dominated the Flying Dutchmen on both sides of the coin.

Several milestones were set on this day in Annville. Sophomore wide receiver Don Betar grabbed a record tying three touchdowns, while quarterbacks Mike Culver and Chris 'Cubby' Davis combined for the second best passing game in Juniata history. Culver was 16 for 27 throwing for 276 yards and three touchdowns, Davis was 5 for 6 for 58 yards and one touchdown. Junior Mike Cottle was the other JC player to get into the endzone for the seventh season coach Rob Ash (29-28-2).

Defensively the Indians were led by senior co-captain Bob Crossey, who had 11 tackles. Sophomore Frank Gay, filling in at linebacker for the injured Bryan Warren, also had 11 tackles. Senior Tom Kalinyak had 10 tackles, with sophomore Tim Kirsh, getting his first start in an Indian uniform recording 4 tackles and breaking up 3 passes.

If there were to be concern among the coaches, I'm sure two things would come to mind. First and most important would be the injury suffered by running back Greg Townsend early in the first quarter. Before getting hurt, JC's leading rusher from last season carried the ball seven times for 36 yards. A second concern would be the penalty situation. Juniata was penalized eight times for 57 yards, most of them occuring when the Indians were in possession of the ball.

Juniata took the opening kickoff and marched down the field to the LV 24 yard line. Freshman Keith Watson's 41 yard field goal attempt was no good. The Indians then shut down the LV offense in three straight plays to force a punt, where the Indians took over on their own 36 yardline.

Culver hit Cottle on his first pass attempt of the day reaching their own 49 yard line. After Junior Rick Bouch carried the ball across midfield, Mike Culver looked to his favorite receiver from season past, Mike Cottle, and connected for a 49 yard touchdown score. The extra point conversion was no good and the Indians led LV 6-0 in the first quarter.

Once again JC stopped LV in three plays and force a punt. After the Indians were stopped at their own 35 in six plays, freshman John Spahr came in to punt. However, the ball was snapped over his head for a loss of 31 yards, where the Dutchmen took over on the Indian four yard line.

The Indian 'D' held tough, actually forcing LV backwards to the Juniata 13, LV's field attempt was no good. Juniata took over on their own 20, ran three plays and the quarter came to an end.

Both teams exchanged punts then the Indians mounted a drive starting from their own 37 yard line. Freshman Dan Crossey and Senior Ian Malee led the Juniata attack, leading the Indians to a fourth and two situation on the LV 18 yard line. Culver dropped back to pass and was sacked for a six yard loss and LV took over on downs.

LV played 2 freshman quarterbacks, they were both unable to get the Dutchmen in the endzone. After another exchange of punts, Juniata took over on their own 36 yard line. Mike Culver hit Dan Crossey for a 12 yard gain, then connected with junior Frank Phelps for a 43 yard gain, giving Juniata a first and ten on LV's 17 yard line. Two plays later Culver connected with Don Betar for a three yard touchdown. Watson never got a chance to attempt the extra point for the snap fell right in his hands. JC kicked off and four plays later time ran out with the Indians leading 12-0.

The start of the third quarter had both teams exchange several punts. On JC's third possesion of the second half Mike Culver once again found Don Betar in the endzone, this time a 21 yard touchdown toss. Watson's PAT was good and Juniata led 19-0. Betar made the key play of the drive. On third and 11 Betar reached out and pulled in a Culver pass for a 25 yard gain and a first down. Two plays later Betar scored his second touchdown of the game.

After the kickoff the teams exchanged punts two more times, then LV put together its best drive of the day. Starting on their own 49 yard line LV compiled two first downs moving the ball down to the Juniata 16. On fourth and two with six minutes to playin the game LV first year head coach Jim Monos decided to go for the first down. Freshman quarterback John Lucci's pass was incomplete, and the Indians tool over on downs.

The Indians punted after a series of seven plays, a series which included another Betar grab, this one good for 21 yards. LV once again on fourth down went for the first, but failed. Juniata took over on the LV 49 yard line and mounted their last scoring drive, led by 'Cubby' Davis.

Davis, after being sacked for a five yard loss, connected with Betar for 19 yards, Cottle for another nine yards, then back to Betar for a seven yard gain, then back to Cottle for another seven yard strike. So, as you might have guessed, it was Betar's turn to catch the next pass, and that he did for a 16 yard touchdown, his third of the day, Davis' first of the season. Watson added the extra point and Juniata was ahead 26-0 with only seconds remaining on the clock. The score remained the same and the Indians go to 1-0 in the MAC.

Nuch's Notes-: There is no definite answer to the extent of the injury to Townsend. Ian Malee led the Indians in rushing, gaining 98 yards. Seven different Indian's caught at least one pass in the game. JC compiled 16 first downs, while holding LV to only six. Lebanon Valley was held to 102 yards total offense, JC gained 387 net yards. The Indians had to punt seven times. Next game-: Saturday, September 13th at College Field, Juniata will host Franklin and Marshall. Last year the Indians lost to F & M 21-0, this year they hope to avenge that loss. Game time is 1:30. Go and support your Indians and tune in at 1:20 to V103.

Volleyball Preview: Season Opener With Bucknell

By Tom Hunt

The 1986 Women's Volleyball team has a tough act to follow this year. The 1985 version advanced to the Division III Final Four and finished in third in the national tournament. That performance combined with only one player lost to graduation, has Coach Larry Bock grinning ear to ear.

The Lady Indians should again be one of the best teams in the nation. But this year's schedule is very challenging including a trip to the West Coast to face the top teams in California.

The team has already encountered heartbreak before the season. Carolyn 'Smiley' Stambaugh was tragically killed in a automobile accident a week before the opening match of the season. Smiley was a three-year letterman for Larry Bock. She will be sorely missed on the team, but Coach Bock has said that the team has begun to bounce back from the tragedy.

This year's team is still very young including 5 freshman. Leadership will be provided by returning seniors Lori Bason, Mariella Gacka, and Diana Hauger. Among the rest of the returnees are Beth Hoppel, an All-American setter last year, two-year starter at middle blocker Cathy Miller, and Jackie Rebert who started for the second half of the year including the NCAA playoffs. The freshman clsss is talented. Rhonda Bygall of Red Lion and Tonya McClucas of Bedford County will be middle blocker while Laurie Snow from Altoona and Renee Malkin from Central City provide depth at the ourside hitter position. Kris Witchey from Grand Junction, Colorado will be back-up setter.

This past weekend, the team traveled to the Naval Academy and E-Town College for scrimmage tournaments. They came home with a combined record of 9-0. At Navy, the team went 4-0 including a victory over a fine Division I team, University of Virginia. At Elizabethtown, Divison I Drexel University and Division II Shipensburg were among the Lady Indians' five victims. Coach Bock was very pleased with the overall performance but stated that there were some areas where work was needed. When asked about any individual standouts, Bock responded that while no one was outstanding, there "was no disappointment in anyone's play." Tuesday, the women scrimmaged Mansfield and Saturday, face Bucknell University in the varsity gym at 4:15. We wish them luck throughout the upcoming season.

Murrays Featured In Concert

A variety of folk, country, pop, and inspirational music will be featured in Juniata College's Oller Auditorium Saturday, Sept. 20, as the college's own Andy and Terry Murray appear in concert.

The 8:15 p.m. concert is part of this year's Parents Weekend activities, and all proceeds from ticket sales will be donated to Juniata's women's volleyball team.

Residents of Huntingdon, Andy Murray is Juniata's campus minister and assistant professor of religion while his wife, Terry, is an instructional assistant in music. Both are accomplished vocalists and when performing, Terry plays the keyboards and Andy plays the guitar.

The Murray's music, which includes many orginal selections, contains a "message" which focuses on the quest for world peace and the need for human values. Many of their songs tell the story of everyday people whose actions have added a special commitment and meaning to life.

The Murrays have recorded four albums and have performed in more than a dozen states, appearing at over 200 churches, colleges, camps, and conferences.

A graduate of Bridgewater College, Andy holds M.Div. and D.Min. degrees from Bethany Theological Seminary. He was the recipient of a Fulbright-Hayes Fellowship to India in 1978 and serves as director of Juniata's Peace and Conflict Studies Program.

Also a Bridgewater graduate, Terry Murray holds an M.Mus. degree in organ performance from Westminster Choir College where she served as a teaching assistant. She also has studied under Leonard Raver, organist for the New York Philharmonic Orchestra and professor of organ at the Julliard School of Music. The Murrays have been associated with Juniata since the early 1970s.

Tickets for the Murray's concert, priced at $3 each, ($2 for Juniata students with ID) may be purchased at the Ellis College Center information desk, from any member of the volleyball team, or at the door the night of the performance.

Philip Stoddard, Executive Director of the Middle East Institute in Washington, D.C. addressed the Reagan Administration's position on the Arab/Isreali conflict in the first of a series of World Affairs Lectures at Juniata. (Article on Page 3)

Weekend to Share With Parents

"Fleeting Rainbows, Passing Years" is the theme of this year's Parents Weekend at Juniata College to be held Sept. 19-21.

Each passing year of a child's life adds to the wealth of shining memories, which can be reflected upon, like the brillance of a fleeting rainbow. College life adds a vivid new shade to this rainbow and Parents Weekend offers an opportunity for it to be shared and remembered.

Among the activities planned will be the 10th annual "Artists on the Hill," spotlighting professional, student, and faculty artists and craftsmen. The artists will display their work between 10 a.m. and 1 p.m. Saturday on the Oller Hall lawn.

Other cultural events will include a fibre art and pottery exhibit in Shoemaker Galleries open from 9 a.m. to 7 p.m. on both Friday and Saturday. Also, a magic show by Chuck Kensinger, a 1972 Juniata graduate and director of development, is scheduled for 8:15 p.m. in the ballroom of Ellis College Center on Friday. The program also will include songs and guitar music by Juniata sophomore Mike Morder.

Three special presentations are planned by members of the Juniata faculty and administration. In addition to the lectures, "The Keys that Unlock the Future" by Dr. Jay Buchanan, campus counselor and "Juniata Abroad" by Dr. William Vocke, director of international programs, there will be individual department receptions and demonstrations.

Saturday afternoon, there will be a Presidential Reception where parents and students can meet Juniata's new first family, Dr. and Mrs. Robert W. Neff, on Detwiler

BOSTON, MASS. — Dr. A. Stewart Truswell of the University of Sydney reported in The New England Journal of Medicine on Wednesday (after reviewing 27 studies in the medical literature on the value of Vitamin C for preventing and treating the common cold) that Vitamin C has "no worthwhile" use in preventing the commmon cold. There is also little evidence that the vitamin helps significantly in treating sniffles, sneezing, and other symptoms. At best, Vitamin C may have "a small theraputic" value for cold sufferers, but "it is now fairly clear that for preventing common colds, Vitamin C has no worhtwhile effects."

BERIUT, LEBANON — Frank Reed, 53 of Malden, Mass. was the first of two American educators abducted in Beriut, Lebanon by a pro-Iranian Islamic Jihad group and accused of being spies. Reed was arrested after documents inculpating him were found on him. The abductors are a shadowy organization believed to be composed of fundamentalist Shiite Moslems with an allegiance to Iran's Ayatollah Khomeini. Joseph Cicipio, 51, an accountant at American University was the second American seized by gunmen in West Beruit. UPI sourses say Cicipio was hit with a gun butt and like Reed, was carried to a Lebanese woman. There is a total of five Americans and three Frenchmen missing or being held hostage.

'85 Yearbooks Are Coming

By Amber Ferhune Good news! Deb Little, who was appointed yearbook editor in May, completed the 1985 Alfarata layout over the summer. The books are expected to be delivered to the college by the week of September 27.

The 1986 yearbook will hopefully be completed by the end of October. Only 133 pages are left to do out of 208. Unfortunately, part of the unfinished pages are faculty pictures which are tied up in the 1985 yearbook until it comes back from the publisher. Twenty-five people attended a recent Alfarata meeting. However, more students are still needed to help with the layout and caption writing. No experience is necessary! Contact Deb Little at Box 365 if you are interested.

Some thought has already been given to the 1987 yearbook. A price raise is anticipated in order to pay for more colored pages and specpages and specrk.

A time To Share

This weekend will have a different meaning for each student. Parents Weekend is the only time set aside for our parents—two days out of the months that we are here at Juniata. The special events, the sporting events, and just being together are what this weekend is for.

It is so easy for some students, especially upperclassmen, to think of it as any other weekend. It's difficult to understand why parents are so excited to visit us at school. Having them here is so different than a visit at home. They want to see us interacting with our friends and our roommates, to see how our life is here at school. It is too easy for us to think of this as any other weekend, but it should be as special to us as it is for them.

How can our families enjoy eating in Baker Refectory? because they don't eat there with their children everyday.

Spending quality time with our parents in "our world" is what these days are meant to be. Remember that everything is not familiar to them as it is to us. Be thankful that your parents are able to attend because many are unable. This weekend is a time to be with your parents, a time to share with them and help them to understand why Juniata is our own "special" place, a place that means something different to each of us.

The history of South Africa is one fraught with conflict, oppression, and discrimination. This article will sketch the history of South Africa and those events which shaped this country's present system of apartheid.

During the first century A.D., the main, though not the only indigenous groups were the San and Khoi. Peoples of eastern and central South Africa, at the beginning of the Christian era in Europe, spoke Bantu languages. From as early as A.D. 1000, two major and related linguistic groups could be distinguished- the Nguni and the Sotho. During this era, sociopolitical structures were complex, powerful kingships rose and fell, minerals were mined, and trading centers established. By 1000-1400 an impressive society of the Shona flourished in central northern South Africa.

First European contact with southern Africa was by the Portuguese circa 1500 whose power and influence were confined to the coast and immediate hinterland. Although the Portuguese did conquer the Kongo (1665) and the neighboring Kingdom of Mbundu (now Angola) and export African slaves for their Brazilian colonies, the Portuguese attempts to subdue or convert the indigenous people were by and large ineffective.

Under the command of Jan van Riebeeck, the Dutch arrived at the Cape in 1652 on behalf of the Dutch East India Company. The settlement was intended as a staging post for India-bound ships but van Reibeeck needed cattle to supply the ships with meat and this brought the Dutch into an inevitable conflict with the San and Khoi which both possessed large cattle herds and resisted Dutch intrusions. This land dispute fermented into black/white animosities and violence ensued. Khoi resistence was quelled and many were enslaved; the offspring of the Dutch and Khoi were either absorbed in what became the Afrikaner community or were with the decendants of slaves from the East Indies to form the bulk of the 2 million Colourеds in South Africa today. The Sans' life was also drastically altered-thousands were simply killed by the Dutch and Children were taken slaves and later intermarried with the Coloured servant community.

The Afrikaner settler community expanded with an influx of European immigration and soon expansionism led to armed conflict with the indigenous population such as the 1779 Kaffir War in which the Xhosa were defeated and Boer territory expanded. In 1809, the British took over the administration of the Cape, and, due to British offical interferrence and anti-slavery measures, the Boers disliked British encroachments. The final blow came in 1834 when slaves in southern Africa, as in the rest of the British Empire, were set free. This act, due to slavery being an integral part of the Dutch settler society, was seen as undermining Boer life. In keeping with the Dutch tradition of treks in search of new land, the Dutch (Voortrekkers) traversed into Natal in which they encountered the Zulu nation and bloodily defeated them on December 16,1838.

The Voortrekkers then drew up a constitution in which the sovereign of their new republic was an elected assembly of 24 whites known as the Volkstadd (parliament). This republic was determined to maintaion the Voortrekker society and as such prohibited black political rights. The influx of Zulu refugees threatened the republic's stability and with British protests over the Boer treatmant of the Africans, the British in 1842 annexed Natal. Under the supervision of Theophilus Shepstone, the British encouraged Africans to move to designated areas or "locations" so as to make room for imported indentured Indian labourers who proved far more willing to work under conditions established by the British. This can be seen as a precursor of the present South African policy of race separation.

Due to English encroachment and annexation, the Voortrekkers moved northwards and created a new colony of small republics in the Transvall. In 1852, at the Snad River Comvention, the British approved an agreement which established the Vorrtrekkers' right to African territory. This enabled the Boers to create independent states. Racial inequality was an article of faith in the Transvall Republic's constitution, and the Tranvall was the Boers' promised land.

Boer independence, however, was ephemeral with the discovery of gold and diamonds within their boundaries which brought them once again into the economic and political spheres of British influence. Industrialization flourished, immigration flockded into South Africa, and a powerful new white labor force emerged which left many Africans landless and in search of employmment. . . Many features of South African life today, such as passes and job reservation, originated in this period of upheaval. African and Coloured "servants" were required to have labour contract and certificate of its registration. Diamond companies consolidated, the labor force was reorganized. Compounds for the African workers were established where they were required to spend the duration of their contract. The white mine employees quickly formed powerful union organizations which ensured higher pay than blacks and found a sym-

"So" That's what Peter Gabriel said when the record executives at Geffer told him that he had to give his fifth album a title other than his usual "Peter Gabriel I (II, III, IV, or V)" They seemed to have taken "So" as his answer, instead of how he felt. I imagine his next several albums will be called "what", "difference", "does", "it", and "make", respectively. But that is just like Peter. Always doing what he wanted irrespect to the mainstream—especially the music mainstream. After being overshadowed commercially and in popularity by fellow Genesis alumnus, Phil Collins, Gabriel has finally achieved a good measure of long-awaited and well-deserved success. "So" is indeed a successful album, not only in the album's vast commercial and chart success, but also in the quality of the music, vocals and lyrics.

O.K., so "Sledgehammer" isn't the most profound song that you have ever heard, but its broad appeal has made the rest of the album palatable to a large audience—which is good because it's well worth listening to. Without going into detail about each song, I've divided the album into 3 categories based on music style.

The first group of songs could be called intense, moral, or psychological. Whatever you call them, they definitely leave a lot of room for interpretation and thought. Included are "Red Rain," "Mercy Street" and "We do what we're told"—all of which are great to listen to and even think about. (Though thought isn't required to enjoy them!)

Peter Gabriel

For something certainly more mindless and "upbeat" you only have to listen to either "Big Time" or "Sledgehammer." Cool tunes if taken in moderation! (For those into trivia, Stewart Copeland really pounds the drums something fierce in "Big Time.")

Peter Gabriel continues to show off his friends in the 3rd grouping of songs which tend to be rather filled with "emotional" power. Kate Bush puts her pretty voice to work in "Don't give Up"; Jim Kerr does the same for "In your Eyes". "That voice again" picks up the pace somewhat, but still delivers feelings which could pick you up and make you cry at the same time.

No matter what "type" of music you listen to Peter Gabriel and "So" are probably worth your while to check out.

Students come to college with all sorts of expectations about relationships. Of particular importance to many is the roommate relationship. Some want their roommate to be their best friend and prefer to do just everything with that person. They are, in essence, for any number of reasons, seeking an exclusive relationship.

By contrast, many students view the roommate relationship as secondary and would prefer to establish primary relationships with individual(s) other than the person with whom they share a room.

What happens when one individual seeks a "best-friend", exclusive relationship and the other does not? Some form of conflict is certainly inevitable.

Family therapist and sociologist, John Crosby, offers an interesting discussion of three possible ways of viewing relationships: dependence, independence, and interdependence. It seems to me that an understanding of the three will go a long way in helping to resolve the conflict resulting from the different expectations people have of relationships.

—Dependence—This suggests that we are constantly seeking the support and/or assurance of another person or persons around us. While we all need each other, dependent individuals find it far too easy to be influenced and controlled by others.

—Independence—This suggests the complete opposite of dependence. As with dependence, it is not very productive in the development of a lasting, meaningful relationship. Independence implies a separation or isolation from others. In other words, perhaps not needing other people.

—Interdependence—This suggests a give-and-take situation where individuals depend on each other equally. It is a mutual reliance on another or others. Individuals are neither inferior nor superior to each other.

Relationships work best when they are characterized by interdependency. In the next article we will discuss ways to achieve interdependency in our relationships.

Have you ever had a tough time finding a parking space on campus? And then when you do find one, you return later to find that everpresent orange stub on your windshield?

And have you ever approached the administration with the question of WHY? only to be answered with the infuriating answer that there ARE enough spaces on campus. . . .if you don't mind the walk.

Oh sure there are several places on campus that you can park, but there are a large amount of places you can't park. Like Oller Hall (which is never full anyway!), or that nice new parking lot for Admissions complete with the new NO STUDENT PARKING SIGN, or 18th street where you can't park on Friday's. (I apologize to East Houses, North and any other areas I may have neglected to point out.)

But really, how many of you student drivers can wave a stack of little orange stubs from this year alone? Maybe you should give up the cars because you may end up walking further than you drove!

Could your room win a contest?

Have you put a lot of time and energy into decorating your room, or are you making plans to decorate your room so that it will be a more enjoyable place to be? If so, then why not enter the Annual Room Decoration Contest sponsored by the Residential Life Committee and Student Services.

Applications are being accepted from now until October 10 in the Residential Life/Housing Office for the Annual Room Decoration Contest. Rooms are judged based on originality, execution, and impact on evaluators. There are three categories of prizes associated with the contest. First, there is a $25.00 prize for the best decorated room in each residence hall as selected by the Residence Director and Residence Hall Association. Second, there is a $50.00 prize for the best decorated freshman room on campus as selected by President Neff and a committee appointed by the Residential Life Committee. Third, there is a $75.00 prize for the best decorated room on campus, also selected by President Neff and the Residential Life Committee.

So, take a few minutes to stop in the Residential Life/Housing Office and fill out an application form.

Plaza in front of the Kennedy Sports+Recreation Center.

Saturday's sporting events will include a field hockey game against York at 1 p.m. and the cross country team will be matched against Lebanon Valley, Messiah, and Elizabethtown. In football, the Indians will meet Moravian at 1:30 and at 2, the soccer team will play Elizabethtown. In addition, Juniata's nationally ranked volleyball team will host William and Mary on Sunday at noon.

Andy and Terry Murray will present a special concert Saturday in Oller Auditorium at 8:15 p.m. This not-to-be-missed evening of songs, stories, and humor features Juniata's campus minister, Andy Murray and his wife, Terry, instructional assistant in music. The duo uniquely blend folk, popular, contemporary, Christian and country music to create entertainment that appeals to those from 8 to 80.

The final day of Parents Weekend '86 will be celebrated with the Parents Association breakfast be followed by an All Campus Worship Service with Rev. Murray, the Campus Ministry Board, and the Concert Choir at 10:30 a.m. in Oller Auditorium.

Stoddard Critiques Middle East Issues

By Andrea Romano

"No peace stays in place", was the gloomy remark of this years World Affairs Lecturer.

Wednesday evening at 8:15, the first of the World Affairs Lectures was held in the Faculty Lounge of Ellis. The honored speaker was the Executive Director of the Middle East Institute in Washington, D.C., Philip Stoddard. Stoddard originally worked for the State Department on Middle East problems.

His presence at Juniata College was to inform those interested about the Reagan Administration's current position with the Arab/Israeli conflict.

Stoddard outlined his speech with humor in retrospect to the negative tone of the subject matter. He introduced his topic with the line, "I don't have to tell jokes. I just watch the (U.S.) government and report the facts."

This statement assimilates Stoddard's viewpoint to Reagan's Middle East policy as of 1986.

He thinks the Administration is moving too slowly in trying to clear up the conflict in the region. He critisizes Reagan because he has not seemed to take the interest in the area as Carter had previously done.

He said the government is made up of pessimists to the situation and he is no different. Their reasons of non-involvement are reason to Reagan's slow acting peace processn

They range from the idea of no threat of war to the lack of an oil crisys. Since the Carter Administration, there has been no oil shortage and the U.S. has had no need to maintain peace in the area in order to obtain barrels.

He gloomily stated that there is no real hope of another Camp David because as Reagan sees it, Israel and the Arab world will never compromise.

He, on the other hand, offered no solutions of his own. He understood Reagan's stand on the situation but also accused him of passing the buck to the next administration. He thinks Reagan could have approached the problem earlier in his first term.

After his speech, he satisfied the audience by answering a few of their questions. His only hopeful statement was that maybe someday the Palestinians and Israelis will get together for an international summit. Until then, then, the U.S. is not to worry.

New R.D. For Sherwood

By Stacey A Halderman

Father Michael, a Carpatho-Russian Orhtodox priest, is the new resident director at Sherwood Hall. He is originally from St. Louis, Missouri, and is currently serving a two-church parish in Huntingdon.

Father Michael studied at Lawrence University in Appleton, Wisconsin, to receive his B.A. in music history and German. He received his Masters of Church music from Concordia Teacher's College in River Forest, Illinois, and finished his studies at St. Sophia Ukrainian Seminary in South Bound Brook, New Jersey.

While serving his parish, Father Michael was living in a trailer that was provided by his church while the rectory of the parish was under construction. As the parish became low on funds, they had to find alternative housing. Father Michael saw the Advertisement submitted by Assistant Dean, Julie Keehner, expressing the need for a resident director, and he considered the position an exciting opportunity and a solution to his housing problem.

Father Michael enjoys many hobbies including music, composing, reading, calligraphy, bicycling, and long walks. He also enjoys his position here at Juniata. He finds that the men of Sherwood are fine people, and he enjoys the interaction with them very much. Father Michael discovered the overall open-minded attitude of the students to be a refreshing surprise, "The students are truly searching for new knowledge, not merely reinforcement of former knowledge."

His past weeks at Juniata have been very enjoyable, and he finds his position a rewarding experience. Father Michael comments, "I'd like to thank the Juniata community for making me feel so welcome and such a part of the community. It's a genuinely warm and friendly place."

Student Government Holds First Meeting

by Patricia Schofield

The first Student Government meeting of the year began promptly at 9:30 p.m. on Tuesday, Sept. 9 in the Mini-Lounge of Ellis Hall.

After the Presidential and Advisor remarks, the Budget and Management Committee proposed a memorial contribution be made in Carolyn Stambaugh's name. Student Government voted in favor of alotting $400 to this fund for a scholarship to be awarded at the Spring Convocation Ceremonies. The recipient of this scholarship will be a female who has portrayed Carolyn's very special qualities.

A chartering policy for Juniata's clubs and organizations was presented and discussed. The vote was to make this policy a standard procedure for chartered clubs and organizations.

The Student Concerns Committee was next on the agenda. They bought up the subject of extended lunch hours to help those who miss lunch due to their class schedules. Negotiations are being made with Hallmark Food Service.

The Joint Election Committee introduced the new freshmen senators : Alexander Jones, John Deppen, Doug Kramer.

Amy Coursen, head of the South African Awareness committee, discussed the South African issue and will be drawing up some letters with the committee to be sent to the trustees, asking them to refrain from any connection to company's who do business with South Africa.

The meeting adjourned at 10:40 and the next meeting will be Sept. 23.

Star Wars Lectures Scheduled

The proposed "Star Wars" defense program will be the topic of two lectures at Juniata College on Tuesday, Sept. 23 and Thursday, Sept. 25.

The first lecture will focus on the American view of "Star Wars." Speaking against the defense plan will be Dr. David Wright, a post-doctoral fellow in physics at the University of Pennsylvania. Dr. Wright was one of the organizers of the national boycott of "Star Wars" research fund by university scientists and engineers.

Dr. Wright says that the broad scientific opposition to "Star Wars" indicates that the system wil not be effective enough to protect the country from Soviet missiles, and that the development of such a system would destabilize the arms race.

Presenting a neutral view of the defense system will be Col. Robert F. Hervey, director of command and control operations and space activities in the Department of Military Strategy. Planning and Operations at the U.S. Army War College. The recipient of numerous military awards, Col. Hervey has served in France, Italy, Vietnam and Turkey.

The Soviet Union's view of "Star Wars" will be presented at the Sept. 25 lecture when Boris Ivanov of the Soviet Embassy in Washington, D.C. discusses the issue at Juniata.

Both lectures will begin at 8:15 p.m. and be held in Alumni Hall, Brumbaugh Science Center. The programs are being sponsored by the Juniata College Computer Society and the public is cordially invited to attend. There is no admission charge.

Apartheid

pathatically in the Volksraad which designated the more skilled occupations closed to blacks "for safety reason." (Unesco, p.22.) Thus, there were four main groups involved in the exploitation of South Africa's mineral resources whose relationships largely determined the future history of the territory. First, there were the British employers who remained interested in finding new supplies of cheap labor from whatever source. Secondly, there was white labour force which was well organized and percieved the blacks as cheap competitors in the job market who would force wages down. Thirdly, there were the Afrikaners (Boers) who were primarily farmers and who were determined to protect their wealthy state from social or economic upheavals (which could result in a greater equality for the blacks). Finally, there were the Africans themselves who were in a subordinated position, deprived of much of their freedom, lacking trade unions, and generally held in subjection by their new masters.

The 1871 British annexation of Griqualand was followed in 1877 by the annexation of the Transvall which fostered Boer agitation for a return to independence in 1880. This sentiment culminated in the first of two Anglo-Boer wars which resulted in a Boer victory and the Transvall becoming formally independent once more at the Pretoria Convention in 1881. The discovery of gold revived British interest in the Transvall and under Cecial Rhodes' vision of British conquest, the Anglo-Boer antagonism again erupted into armed conflict. Although the war was won by the British in 1902 there was little sense of victory due to a serious war-related economic depression and continued Boer resistence. Thus, within eight years, the Union of South Africa come into being with the Boers for the most part ruling what they saw as their own country. White parlimentary politics centered largely on two main partiew-most Afrikaners supported the Nationalist Party (Boers), English-speakers and industrial employers supported the Unionist Party (British). Both parties were opposed to racial equality and although the Anglo-Boer War left deep scars, both white groups collaborated to strengthen their control over the rest of the black population. In 1910, South Africa acquired dominion status and complete freedom from British governmental interference. Party debates focused on the path South Africa should take in its development vis-a-vis Black demands for greater participation. The Nationalist Party, which won the elections of 1948 and formed a new government, had a clear answer-that of "separate development": apartheid.

During the cementing of white dominace, African organization began to flower, though it was initially conservative and attempted to work within the existing system. One of the first African leaders was John Tengo Jabavu who started the first independent African newspaper and whose political position can be inferred from a quote stating: "We not only preach loyalty, but we preach subordination to superiors." (Unesco, p.27) In 1902, the African Political Organization (APO) was founded and in 1912 the African National Congress (ANC) was founded in response to inequitable land appropriation. In 1936, in the Native Trust and Land Act, the whites gave themselves 86% and the Africans 14% of the total land despite the whites being an overwhelming minority. Thus, although whites make up only 16% of South Africa's population they control 87% of the land. The Urban Areas Act of 1923, consolidated in 1945, restricted African's right of movement. The grand design of apartheid is the long-term plan to forcibly remove blacks from their homes and place them in barren reserves called bantustans. Between 1960 and 1984, the South African government has removed over three and one half million blacks from the "white areas" to the bantustans. The South African government has declared four of the ten bantustans "independent" which in effect has stripped the black citizens of their South African citizenship.

In 1961, both the ANC and PAC (Pan Africanist Congress formed in 1959) were banned yet remain increasingly popular. Nelson Mandela, leader of the ANC and imprisoned since 1963, is still the most popular leader among South African blacks. Increasingly, the South African government has been violent in its response to black resistence exemplified by the March 21, 1960 Sharpville Massacre in which South African police shot and killed 69 unarmed blacks who were peacefully protesting the pass laws.

Social Colloquium Sponsors Meetings

The Social Colloquium will be sponsoring a series of meetings during the 1986/87 year. Distinguished scholars from Penn State and other universities have been invited to present lectures on the contributions of social history to research in a wide range of historical periods and geographic areas. The invited speakers will also be drawing on their current research and writing to discuss new methodologies and concepts in the field of social history. All interested students, faculty and members of the public are invited to attend.

Meetings during the Fall semester will be held at 3:45 PM in the Rare Books Reading Room, 3rd Floor West Pattee Library. Coffee, tea, and cookies will be available for an informal get-together beginning at 3:15 on each meeting date.

September 17: Professor E-tu Zen Sun, History Department, Penn State University, "The History of Chinese Technology: Changing Perspectives".

October 20: Professor Caroline W. Bynum, History Department, University of Washington, "Holy Feast and Holy Fast: The Religious Significance of Food to Mediebal Women".

November 19: Professor Joan Brumberg, Department of Human Developmint and Family Studies, Cornell University, "From Anorexia Mirabilis to Aborexia Nervosa: The Emergence of a Modern Disease".

This year's Social History Colloquium is being funded by the following colleges, departments, and programs at Penn State University: Pattee Library, Institute for the Arts and Humanistic Studies, Women's Studies Program, Black Studies Program, History Department, Latin American Studies Program, Medieval Studies Program, the College of Liberal Arts, and the Graduate School.

Business Fraternity At Juniata

by Jennifer Nicholson

The Epsilon Lambda chapter of Phi Chi Theta, a professional business fraternity has been established at Juniata College.

The national fraternity's purpose is to "promote the cause of higher education and training for all individuals, to foster high ideals for everyone pursuing a career in business and to encourage fraternity and co-operation among people preparing for such careers."

This fraternal chapter is the evolution of the Juniata Executive club. The chapter was established at Juniata to increase job opportunities for graduates and "to align ourselves with a national chapter to gain more recognition for Juniata," according to Jerome Dvorak, chapter president. Dvorak further explained that members of the fraternity will be able to expand their network through the 139 college chapters and 37 alumni chapters across the nation.

The Phi Chi Theta chapter will function similarly to the Juniata Executive Club. The chapter will sponsor the traditional Mud Volleyball and are planning other activities such as the world's largest Monopoly game, according to Dvorak. The chapter hopes to bring in professional speakers in marketing, accounting, finance, and general management.

Students who are at least of second semester freshman standing with Business in their Program of Emphasis and the college's minimum cumulative grade average are qualified to apply for membership to the fraternity.

The chapter's first inductions were held on Sunday, September 14. Fifty-three Juniata students were inducted. Congratulations to the following members of Phi Chi Theta:

Jerome Dvorak - President
Baron Keefer - Vice President
Chris Williams - Treasurer
Jill Ranck - Secretary

Peer Advisor Program Enjoys Success

by Debra Ollinger

The peer advising program has begun its third year this fall. Members of this year's junior class were the first freshmen to participate in the program, since then, the number of peer advisors has doubled and the program has become vital in the adjustment to college life.

"Peer advising deals with intricate aspects of the transition from high school to college and living away on a student to student level," according to Dr. Jay Buchanan, campus counselor and advisor of the group.

Each of the sixty-eight peer advisors is assigned 4-5 freshmen. PA's, as they are referred to, engage in training sessions designed to out-line their approach to other students, but are diverse enough to allow for individual variation.

Peer advising has proven to be extremely helpful to new students adjustment. It is not in competition with academic advising or resident assistants, but rather is to serve as an additional source of support to the student.

Although peer advising is helpful, it cannot and does not expect miracles. "Our goal is to make a difference. If each PA can make a positive mark on at least one student in his/her group—then we've succeeded," said Dr. Buchanan.

This year peer advising began during the summer. Each PA sent an introductory note to his/her assignees, which seemed to be the catalyst in the near 100% turn out for initial settings.

Peer Advisors will still deal mainly with issues relating to independence, responsibilities, relationships, conflicts and values, but the group itself has become more united. They are now a recognized campus organization bearing "We Do It With Freshman" T-shirts.

Dr. Buchanan added, "Although most campuses have a peer counseling program we think ours is exceptionally good. The people we have working as PA's are good kids who can and have dealt with the problems of adjustment. They're doing a great job."

V-Ball Squad Opens With Victories

By Tom Hunt

This week, Mansfield University and Division I school Bucknell University, became the latest victims of the young J.C. women's volleyball team. Coach Larry Bock's team began began the week with a scrimmage against Mansfield before opening the regular season Saturday against Bucknell.

Tuesday's scrimmage gave Coach Bock one last chance to experiment with his lineups. The 1st two games involved little experimentation on Bock's half. Using the same personel, the team cruised to easy victories. Jackie Rebert and Mariella Gacka provided the offensive firepower while defensive specialist Dana Worthington added superb passing.

In the third game, the combination of starters and reserves produced another victory. The reserves were given a chance to display their talents. The team suffered two consecutive close losses due to inexperience. Sophomore Sue Gelston was the most experienced player to see action in the 4th and 5th games. The starting six took the court for the last two games and won both easily. The 5-2 scrimmage set the tone for Saturday's opener against Bucknell University.

The team was not at full strength for the Saturday match. Freshman Rhonda Bygall, expected to play at middle blocker, injured an ankle during the week and wassidelined for the match. Sophomore Heather Pruim, from Castle Rock, Colorado, was tabbed as her replacement and made her presence felt immediately. Several quick kills by Pruim started the team rolling towards a 15-4 first game victory. Mariella Gacka added several kills of her own to the Indian offense. Exceptional passing by Cathy Miller and Jackie Rebert made setter Beth Hoppel's job very easy.

Juniata jumped out to an 11-0 lead in the second game on the serving of Miller and Hoppel. After numerous side-outs featuring good defense by sophomore starter Dana Worthington and freshman reserve Lori Snow, the Lady Indians won the second game 15-2. Diana Hauger served the final point as Pruim and Hoppel roofed a Bucknell University hitter. Coach Bock substituted freely in the third gamen, giving the bench valuable playing time. At one point in the game, Mariella Gacka was on the court with one sophomore and four freshmen. An ace and a service winner by Sue Gelston highlighted the 15-9 win and completed the three game sweep.

This week, the team travels to Somerset to face Seton Hill College on Wednesday. Friday and Saturday find them traveling north to a tournament at Penn State University. To complete the Parent's Weekend activities, the Lady Indians entertain William and Mary College on Sunday at 12:00. Come out and support them this weekend.

Juniata Avenges Loss to F & M Goes 2-0 on the Season

By Mike Antenucci

Under sunny skies the Juniata Indians made their home debut on College Hill with an exciting 21-11 victory over the Franklin and Marshall Diplomats.

After a scoreless first quarter, in a game that was developing into a defensive battle, Juniata put the first points of the day on the board with 5:18 remaining in the first half. The Indians went 63 yards in seven plays, capped off by freshmen Dan Crosey's one yard plunge into the endzone. The big play of the drive was a screen pass from Mike Culver to Ian Malee that was good for a 46 yard gain. Five plays later Juniata scored and led 7-0 after Keith Watson added the extra point.

During the drive, Senior Quarterback Mike Culver broke the school record for career passing, surpassing the old mark of 4,249 yards set in 1965 by Don Weiss. Culver's 198 passing yards on Saturday helped him chalk up 4,414 total career yards.

Juniata kicked off then forced the Diplomats to punt in four straight plays. The Indians were stopped in their next series and had to punt from their own 22. John Sparhs punt was blocked, cought in mid-air by F&M, and returned to the 11 yard line.

Once again, as they did a week earlier, the Juniata defense stayed tough, keeping F&M out of the endzone. On fourth and six Sean Broadman kicked a 24 yard field goal and F&M narrowed the score to 7-3. One minute later the first half came to an end.

At the half JC had 6 first downs to F&M's 4. The Indians piled up 143 yards of offense, while holding the Diplomats to only 83 yards. Juniata controlled the ball 17:09 in the 30 minute half.

Juniata received the second half kickoff and two plays later fumbled the ball, the diplomats recovered at the juniata 48 yard line. JC held it's ground and forced the Indians to punt. On the following series the indians took a 14-3 lead when Culver connected with Junior Mike Cottle for a 24 yard touchdown. Dan Crossey , during the 67 yard, four play drive, rushed for 26 yards. Watson added the extra point.

In the last series of the third quartet the Indians found themselves with their backs against the wall. On third and 19 from their own five. Rick Bouch quick kicked 77 yards. F&M took over on their own 18 yard line.

The Diplomats started to mount a drive, reaching the Juniata 45. However, on 3 and 16 Senior Defensive back Clayton Carlin recorded the first Indian interception of the season to stop the drive. Two plays later Juniata turned the ball back to F&M, the fumble was recoverd on the Juniata 36 yard line.

Four plays later the Diplomats scored their first touchdown of the season. Quarterback John Travagline connected with Ken scalet in the end zone. Travagline completed a screen pass to Scalet for the two-point conversion. Franklin and Marshall closed the lead to 14-11 with 11:30 left in the game.

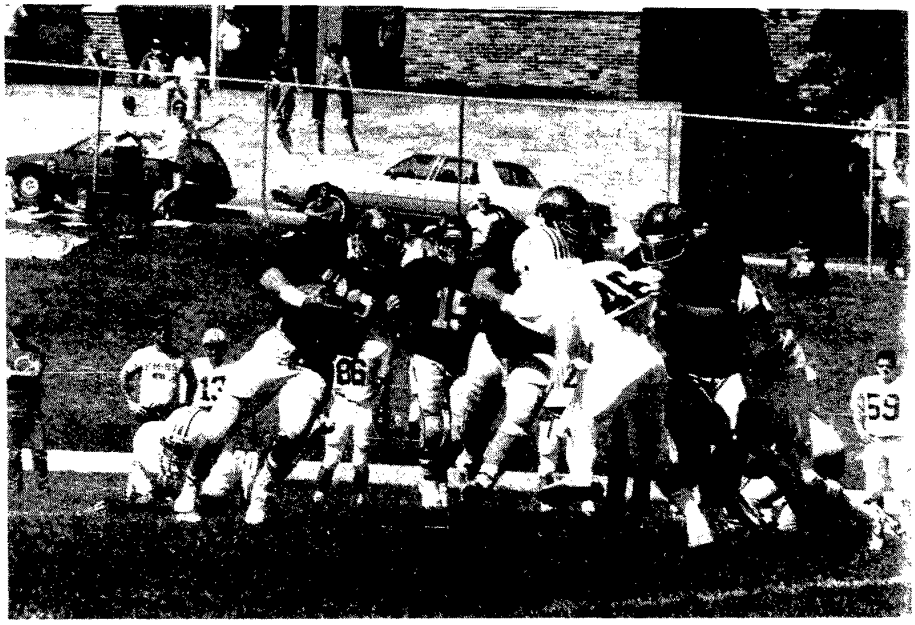
After an exchange of punts Juniata started a drive leading to the last points scored in the game. Morgan Johns gained 34 yards on a screeen pass from Culver for an Indian first down. Culver than ran for another first down. Three plays later Culver hit Cottle in the end zone, Watson added the extra point, and Juniata led 21-11 with 6:14 remaining in the game.

The Indians stalled F&M's next drive and the Diplomats hopes for a comeback when sophomore Tim Kirsh intercepted a Travagline pass. Juniata managed to run seven plays, controlling the clock, and ruining Franklin and Marshalls chances for a comeback.

Nuch's Notes Juniata is now 2-0 overall, and 1-0 in the MAC, while F&M dropped to 0-1. JC managed 13 first downs, 3 less then gained against Lebanon Valley. The Indians had 366 total offensive yards (753 yards for the season), while giving up 225 yards to F&M. Both teams were penalized seven times and Juniata punted seven times. JC wasonly 5 for 14 on third down conversions and the offensive line also gave up 5 sacks.

Dan Crossey was the leading rusher in the game, picking up 88 yards on 15 carries. QB Mike Culver connected on 14 of his 22 passes for 198 yards. His Favorite receiver was Mike Cottle, 8 receptionsfor 80 yards. Bob Crossey led the defensive surge with 12 tackles, giving him 25 for the season.

Next week Juniata hhost Moravion at 1:30 on Parents weekend. Last year the Grey hounds defeated the Indians in Bethlehem 16-7. Last week Moravion lost its season opener to Widener 3-0. Juniata travels to Widener in two weeks.



Senior Fulback Ian Malee carries the ball into the F & M defensive backfield. Juniata won the game 21-11. Phot by Steve Costalas.

Homecoming '86

by Amber Terhune

Homecoming Weekend 1986 will be held on October 3 and 4. To make Homecoming more exciting and memorable for JC students, the Homecoming Committee has centered many activities around a campus-wide residence hall competition. A scavenger hunt, requiring teams of four males and four females, will take place on Thursday evening. On Friday, teams of six males and six females from each residence hall will participate in afternoon games of tug-of-war, Simon Sez, an obstacle course, and individual relays. A run through town is tentatively scheduled for 10:00 Saturday morning. During the football game at 1:30 against Albright, each residence hall may set up a booth to raise money for a charity. The residence hall with the most points will receive a VCR as a permanent part of their lounge. Attend your next RHA meeting for specific rules and regulations and find out and find out how you can get involved!

During registration for alumni on Friday and Saturday, Shoemaker Galleries will host an art exhibit. The Juniata/Coca Cola Classic Volleyball tournament will be played Friday from 4-9 p.m., immediately followed by an old fashioned pep rally. This will be held in South's parking lot which includes a bonfire, skits and a band.

The volleyball tournament continues Saturday at 10:00 a.m. with semi-finals at 6:00 p.m. and finals at 7:00 p.m. The parade will start at 11:00 a.m. with the floats illustrating the theme, "Juniata Celebrates the Nifty 50's". The cross-country meet against York also starts at 11:00. Half-time at the football game will include crowning the Homecoming Queen and also the presentation of the spirit award to the winning residence hall. At 10:00 p.m., the Homecoming dance starts in the intramural gym.

Combining alumni and student activities will hopefully make Homecoming Weekend enjoyable for everyone! If you would like to get involved and lend a hand with the preparations please contact Laura or Yvonne at 643-1475. They would appreciate the help!

Geological Survey at J.C.

The 150th anniversary of the first Pennsylvania Geological Survey was observed September 25-27 as Juniata College co-hosted the 51st annual Field Conference of Pennsylvania Geologists.

The conference theme was an examination of the geology of Huntingdon and Bedford counties that was first Geologic Survey of Pennsylvania traversed the valleys of the Little Juniata River and Yellow Creek.

Some 210 geologists attended the 51st conference and visited several of the rock exposure visited by the 1836 team. One of those sites, Pulpit Rocks along the Alexandria Pike (the original Pennsylvania Turnpike), was one of the first sites examined by the 1836 team and is now owned by Juniata College.

Friday, September 26 at 9:30 a.m., those who attended the conference converged on Pulpit Rocks to witness an historical re-enactment of the visit of those three early geologists, H.D. Rogers, J.C. Booth, and J.F. Frazer. In addition, the conference dedicated a plaque erected at the site in honor of the beginning of geological work

Mountain Day?

Yes it's that time of the year again here at Juniata. You can feel the mystery in the air. The leaves are turning colors. The T-shirts have already been ordered. You keep hoping it will be the proverbial "tomorow" – preferably if you have a test. All this can only mean one thing – Mountain Day is on its way.

Even though the exact date of Mountain Day remains the biggest mystery of the year, some things have not been kept so secret. This year's Mountain Day will be held at Greenwood Furnace.

Maps and directions will be available at a later date. As usual, buses will begin leaving at 9 a.m. and will continue to leave for Greenwood Furnace as soon as they are filled.

There are some new activities that will accompany the traditional Cloister vs. Sherwood football game and the North-South vs. Off-campus football game. One of these new additions will be the freshmen-faculty volleyball tournament. RHA competitions will feature a number of different relay races. Four of these races will start at 10 a.m. and the remainder at 11 a.m. RHA's that do not organize teams will lose points, so get a team together!

At the Tug of War's this year, we'll all be seeing a new face when Dr. Neff supervises them for the first time. If football, volleyball, tug of war or any of the other activities can't satisfy your lacrosse fever, bring your stick and take to the field.

According to Mountain Day chairperson Missy Iezzi, "Food service has gone out of the way" to create a new menu. Let's keep our fingers crossed. More good news, Mountain Day T-shirts should be in within days.

"The Big Guy" Visits Our Office

The Juniatian Staff was recently graced with a visit from "the big guy". That's right, President Neff came down to visit during one of our late night publication sessions. He made sure that we knew that he was off his schedule and couldn't stay very long, but the fact that he still made it down impressed me.

You know, he was almost like a real person. That sounds funny, but I think I can explain. The president like many other administrators live sheltered lives in their dark offices, seldom coming into direct contact with a bulk of the student body.

President Neff listened to (if he liked it or not) some common complaints voiced by one of our editors. He showed genuine concern and gave us the feeling that he would personally look into the problems.

I hadn't seen much of President Neff around before his visit and honestly didn't really care, but I now see that he really does care about the college and is down to earth enough to actually listen to the "little people" here.

He didn't visit us hiding under a cowboy hat, he came to listen and observe. I think he might work out O.K., let's keep him for a while.

Dr. M. Marty Addresses American Values System

Dr. Martin J. Marty spoke at the first J. Omar Good Lexture of the year, which was held Wednesday, September 17. Dr. Marty is the senior editor of The Christian Century, editor of The Context, and co-editor of The Quarterly Church History. He is also the Vice President of the American Academy of Religion. Dr. Marty has written over thirty books, and his most recent work, entitled Pilgrims in Their Own Land: 500 Years of Religion in America, recaps the changes and problems with religion in America. This renowned historian and commentator of the American religious scene spoke to the campus on the Articles of Peace: The Combat Zone Over American Values.

The intense conflict and debate over values continues to spur interest and excitement in American life today. A strong value system sets the "national morale" and establishes a strong and active civic and public life. Preference and value selection are the key words in values. They represent a doing belief that a certain side of conflict is socially or personally perferable to an opposite side of conduct. Values determine a person's role in society, as will as the circumstances which surround it. A principle part of the value selection is the combat zone of values.

The combat zone of values enables a person to gain power in society, and it is divided into six sections. Public education shapes society's values because this has historicly been the place where people come to discuss values, even if a conclusion cannot be reached. Parents and leaders place a great deal of responsibility on school to solve the problems that the rest of the society cannot. The mass media of communication can both distort and shape socity's values. The media asks the question: what does it mean to demean someone?, what is a human being and what does it mean to distort a positive value. The changes in family have taken place because of changes in culture—women being both homemakers and career women, extended families have disintegrated and families do not share ideas anymore.

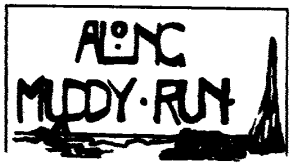
The next combat zone is the clinic or hospital. Technology has greatly advanced society, so mouch so that it now can decide if not all shall live and who shall die. The latter can be done through organ transplants, genetic engineering, among other methods. Values can also shape the outcome of business in the corporate world.

The final combat zone is the individual human character which simply meant that there is a distinct difference in the values and morals of every person.

"What it comes down to is the determination of values is who owns America, in the sense of who has the right to project the values that others have to relate to," is the basic question of value selection says Dr. Marty. A complex society like ours does not need common terms of discourse for each man or woman to follow. Every man should determine his own values. Each person must be attentive to the rights, morals and values of every person. Many Americns want their deepest values to come from TheBible and from religious leaders. Dr. Marty believes that the group owns American because society is divided into groups or sects which have passed the rules that regulate our society.

The Articles of Peace are defined in terms of what other think and how they can communicate with others. As a result of the Articles of Peace, society should attain some idaas that would strengthen our value system. Among them are: restore public in republic, counterorganize if you do not like something, discuss American values, and most importantly encourage multiple loyalties.

Dr. Marty stressed the cmmon values that make our society rely on each other. He also stressed the importance of having values in our lives, and each person can contribute to the overall values of society.



By Sue Mitchell

My parents always told me to count my blessings, because someone, somewhere was worse off than me. We do not have it so bad here at J.C. and things could be worse. A close friend of mine spent last year studying in Spain, and when I heard some of the hardships she had made me remember what my parents had told me.

First of all, there are no kegs in Spain. The only place that you could find them was in bars, along with twenty spanish men eating sardine sandwihches and who thought that your penny loafers were cute. This is no place for a respectable U.S. citizen to wander.

Furthermore, there are no pretzels. You could sipping on some cheap spanish beer and when you look for something to munch on, all they have are chips that are deep fried in olive oil and taste more like olives deep fried in potato oil.

Another factor is their perception of someone who had a little too much to drink. To them, that person was the lowest form of life on the face of the earth, and to us, the lower the better. So, when you find yourself down and out here in Huntingdon, count your blessings.

in Pennsylvania. The dedication ceremony included welcoming remarks by Juniata College President Robert W. Neff.

After leaving the Pulpit site, the geologists visited numerous other geological sites in Huntingdon and Bedford counties.

According to Dr. J. Peter Trexler, chairman of Juniata's geology department, the Huntingdon County region played a key role in the 1836 survey. "Rogers, Booth and Frazer began the survey in Huntingdon because of its location in the center of the state," Trexler said. "Huntingdon also was selected because of the rock exposure along the canal." Trexler added that Pulpit Rocks was one of the first sites visited by the geologists and a lithograph of Pulpit Rocks was used on the title page of the survey.

As part of the Sesquicentennial observance, the U.S. Post Office in Huntingdon will be using a special cancellation in recognition of the First Geologic Survey.

Could your room win a contest?

Have you put a lot of time and energy into decorating your room, or are you making plans to decorate your room so that it will be a more enjoyable place to be? If so, then why not enter the Annual Room Decoration Contest sponsored by the Residential Life Committee and Student Services.

Applications are being accepted from now until October 10 in the Residential Life/Housing Office for the Annual Room Decoration Contest. Rooms are judged based on originality, execution, and impact on evaluators. There are three categories of prizes associated with the contest. First, there is a $25.00 prize for the best decorated room in each residence hall as selected by the Residence Director and Residence Hall Association. Second, there is a $50.00 prize for the best decorated freshman room on campus as selected by President Neff and a committee appointed by the Residential Life Committee. Third, there is a $75.00 prize for the best decorated room on campus, also selected by President Neff and the Residential Life Committee.

So, take a few minutes to stop in the Residential Life/Housing Office and fill out an application form.

Some call him preacher . . . some call him gunfighter . . . and hell follows with him. Produced, directed, and starring Clint Eastwood, "Pale Rider" marks the revival of the western. It's been well over a decade since Hollywood's produced a western. Now, with Eastwood at the reins, the western rides back in style.

It begins with a small mining camp that becomes a target for a corporate takeover. The few settlers, unwilling to fall prey to the malevolent company, stand up to the giant. However, both outnumbered and out gunned, they are slowly coerced to give in to company rule. It seems all hope and their only home is lost . . . until one day into the darkened camp rides a drifter on a pale horse. With him, he brings the courage to survive. But, this drifter soon finds himself face to face with mercenaries sent to kill him.

"Pale Rider" is Clint Eastwood at his finest, with that famous close-up of his piercing eyes blemished with anger just before he strikes at his assailant, Eastwood commands the screen. It's nice to see the western back in the saddle and on all four feet once again.

Faculty React To Semesters

The reactions of faculty to the new semester system ranged from "I like them" to "I liked terms better." The key factor seems to be the material taught. In classes that require a lot of reading or writing programs, the instructors were mostly pro-semester. Professor Janet Lewis (philosophy dept.) "likes them," because "On the semester system, I can say 'read 40 pages for next class.' " Dr. Dale Wampler (Director, Computer Center) also likes semesters better, especially for his Introduction to Computers course. "The slower pace helps students learn a new tool." Dr. Kim Richardson (education) didn't like "bombarding" students with work under the term system. She likes the extra time between classes to think about material. "I come to class fresher when I've been away for a day." She is also seeing evidence of more student preparation for class. "When students come to class, I'm getting a lot of good participation." Professor Bernice Heller (Spanish dept.) agrees: "I think there's a lot more pressure on the teacher with class everyday. You need time to absorb things." She likes semesters better than terms, "but change takes some adapting."

Other instructors were happier with terms. Professor Chris Peterson, (business dept.) likes terms better for his finance classes; "Courses develop too slowly—I prefer the intensity of terms." Dr. Robert Zimmermer (biology dept.) finds his lab courses harder to schedule. "I find it difficult to do a science course with labs because now I have 2 or more lab courses to teach in a semester.

Professor Betty Ann Cherry (history dept.) sums it up. "When repetition is the key, terms work better, but with courses that need a 'soak' time, the semester system works better."

Students To Produce Award-Winning Play

By Michele Johnson

On November 21 and 22, Juniata College will host a student production of the Pulitzer Prize winning play Bus Stop, according to Professor Doris Goehring, co-director of the play.

The cast of characters in order of appearance includes: Sue White as Elma Duckworth, Michelle Sciranko as Grace Hoylard, Ed Hauder as Will Masters, and Rebecca Abrahms as Cherie. Also included in the list of characters is Stephen Meyers as Dr. Gerald Lyman, Eric Dahl as Carl, Rick Bellagh as Virgil Blessing, and Rush Blady as Bo Decker. Co-directing the play with Professor Gohering is Bill Hofeit. Ann Summy is the student director for the play.

Bus Stop is a three act romance. In a howling wind and snow storm, a bus is stranded at a small but warm roadside diner. Four of the travelers have to hole up until the roads are cleared. Cherie is being pursued, made love to, and finally kidnapped by an over zealous cowboy with the subtlety of a headstrong bull. This romantic and belligerent cowhand follows close on the heels of the harassed charteuse. In the diner, another romance is developing between the owner of the diner and the bus driver who find time to get to know each other better. A steady middle-aged professor finds a young waitress to play Juliet to his Romeo and begins to see himself for what he really is as she finds romance for the first time in her life.

The play will be performed in Oller Hall at 7:30 p.m. William Inge is the author.

D.J. Seminar Rescheduled

by Mike Barnett

The V103 DJ seminar/picnic planned for September 27 has been tentatively rescheduled for October 25 at 12 p.m.

The pre-football game picnic will include volleyball, beverages and communications professionals, speaking on careers in radio, broadcasting tips and the projected future of the industry. Scheduled to speak are Juniata graduates Randy Kotz of WYSP in Philadelphia and former V103 station manager Brian Check of WCAV in Philadelphia.

Anyone interested in V103 is encouraged to attend. Sign-up with meal sticker number in the V103 station lobby in the basement of Ellis. For more information or to become a V103 staff member (on-air or off-air) contact Chief Announcer, Joe Newhart.

Indians Cage Hounds; Widener Next

By Mike Antenucci

Incredible, outstanding, awesome! That's the only way to describe the football game played this past weekend on College Hill between Juniata and Moravion.

The Indians upped their record to 3-0 (2-0 in the MAC) by defeating the Greyhounds 14-13. This was a game that was plaqued with many missed oppertunities, big plays, and second string quarterbacks. Fortunately for the Indians second string means "Cubby" Davis, which means 7 for 11, 139 yards, and the winning touchdown toss.

To say the game was exciting would be an understatement, every play kept you on the edge of your seat. On Juniata's first possession and first play from scrimmage, freshman Dan Crossey broke loose around left end and raced into the endzone for a 69 yard touchdown. Keith Watson added the extra point and Juniata led 7-0 with 12:56 remaining in the first quarter.

However, the following series saw Moravion drive down the feild, compile four first downs, eat up 67 yards on 18 plays, and control the ball for close to eight minutes. On fourth and one sophomore tailback Paul Krouse dove straight ahead, crossing the goal line for the Greyhound score. The PAT was good and the score was knotted up at seven.

The middle periods were the scoreless periods, but both teams had chances to points on the board. At the start of the second quarter Juniata put together a 17 play drive, however, the Indians had nothing to show for their impressive surge, which was put to a halt on a missed 23 yard feild goal attempt.

After an exchange of punts Moravion found themselves with their backs against the wall. On third and four sophomore QB Wade King was caught in the backfeild by JC defensive lineman Tom Yeager, who caused the fumble that was recovered by his teamate Tom Kalinyak. Six plays later the Indians missed a 29 yard feild goal attempt.

Yeager wasn't finished causing turnovers. Three plays after the missed feild goal, Yeager battered a King pass in the air than intercepted it. However, two plays later the first half would end with the score Juniata 7 Moravion 7.

Juniata's first drive of the second half was ended on an interception and Moravions first possesion was ended on downs deep in Juniata territory. Two plays later Moravion would get the ball right back on a fumble. Moravion, starting on the Indians 22 yard line only managed 1 yard in 3 plays. On fourth a nine, Perry's 38 yard FG atempt was no good.

The Indians next series was another non-promising effort. A punting situation, for the third week in a row, put the Indians in a hole. From their own 33 Juniata Freshman punter John Sparh had the ball snapped over his head. Sparh recovered but was tackled on the 19 yard line.

As they did against LVC and F&M, the JC defense stopped the offensive unit after a punt miscue. Once again Perry missed another feild goal attempt, this one from 32 yards out.

Juniata was forced to punt on their next series after running only 3 offensive plays. However, saftey Mark Dorner had different ideas than the Moravion offensive, and on the Hounds second play of the series Dorner intercepted a Wade King pass.

Chris "Cubby" Davis stepped into the QB spot for the Indians and on his first attempt hit Don Betar for a gain of 43 yards, for a Juniata firstdown on the Moravion 4 yard line. However 2 plays later the Indians fumbled the ball right back to Moravion.

Moravion than mounted their second scoring drive of the game. In 10 plays the Hounds moved 93 yards and capped off the drive when Bob Masessa dove in the endzone from 3 yards out. The extra point failed, and would come back to haunt Moravion. Moravion led 13-7 with 9:19 left to play.

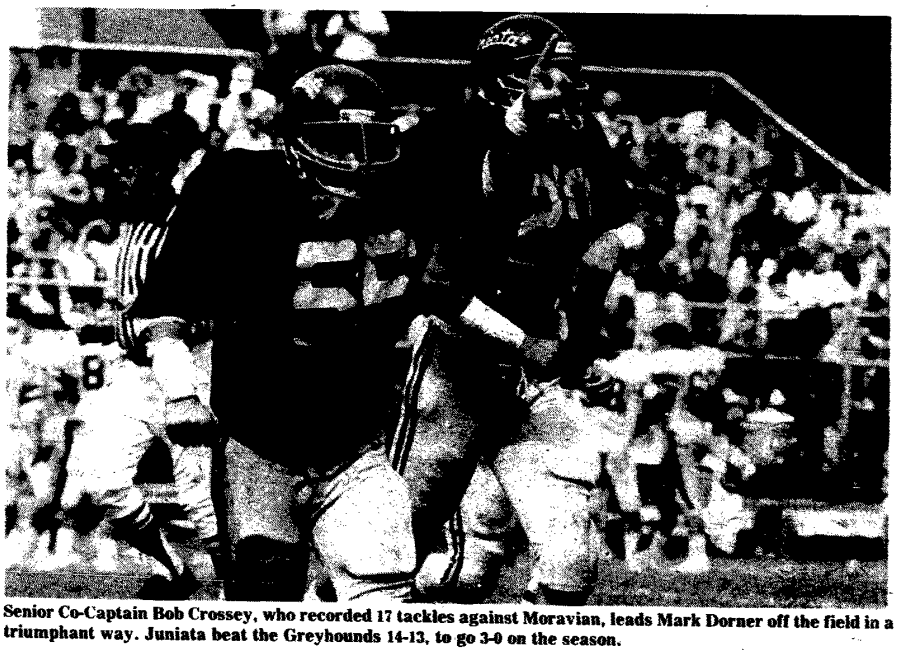
After an exchange of punts Juniata took over on their own 13 yard line with four minutes remaining in the game. Following two first downs, on a second and ten situation from their own 39, Davis took a deep drop and hit Morgan Johns who was tackled on the drop and hit Morgan Johns who was tackled on the lays later Davis hit tightend Jim Metz in the right side of the endzone for the tying score. Freshman Keith Watson added the go ahead point with 1:41 left in the game. The drive was good for 87 yards on 7 plays.

Moravion marched down to the Juniata 35 and with seven seconds left had to attempt a 52 yard feild goal. The kick fell short and Juniat went 3-0 in front of a crowd of 3650 people.

NUCH'S NOTES-: Juniata managed 19 first downs, and on 37 rushing attempts gained 155 yards. JC's leading rusher was Dan Crossey, who carried 18 times for 138 yards. Mike Culver was 6 for 16 for 46 yards and 1 interception. Juniata had 185 yards passing on the day. Morgan Johns led the receiving core with a pair of catches for 68 yards. Seven different Indians caught passes. Juniata managed 340 total offensive yards (1093 yards on the season for an average of 364.33 yards a game).

Defensively Juniata made 46 unassisted tackles on the day. Bob Crossey led the way with 17 tackles, Yegear had 12, Kalinyak and Bryan Warren each had 11, while Greg St. Clair and Mark Dorner each had 9. The JC defense has only allowed an average of 8 points per game.

Next week Juniata travels to Chester to play 3-0 Widener. Last week Widener defeated LVC 31-0. Last year Juniata stunned Widener 17-15. Game time is 1:30 and will be broadcast (we hope) on V103. Two weeks form now, Homecoming weekend, Juniata hosts Albright.



Senior Co-Captain Bob Crossey, who recorded 17 tackles against Moravian, leads Mark Dorner off the field in a triumphant way. Juniata beat the Greyhounds 14-13, to go 3-0 on the season.

Volleyball Summary

by Tom Hunt

The Juniata College Women's Volleyball team faced stiff competion this past week including 3 division I schools and recorded two defeats to run its season record to 3-2. The team began the week with a 3-1 match win over Seton Hill College at Somerset. Seton Hill is an NAIA school which provides scholarships for atheletes and would be ranked in the top 20 nationally according to coach Larry Bock. With Freshman Rhonda Bygal still sidelined with an ankle injury, sophmore Heather Pruim played middle blocker for the Lady Indians. Mariella Gacka recorded 19 kills during the four game match.

During the week the team competed in a tournament at Penn State University. Juniata was the only non-Division I team competing. Friday's match was against the University of Wisconson. The Lady Indians lost to the Badgers 3-1 by scores of 3-15, 15-10, 7-15, 14-16. Coach Bock commented that the match was very well played by both teams. Wisconson was much taller than the Juniata team which helped reduce the effectiveness of our blocking.

It was also a match for adjustments as Bygall returned to action after a 10 day layoff and Pruim was moved from middle blocker to outside hitter.

On Saturday, Juniata met the University of Virginia for the second time this season. This time, though, the Cavaliers came out on top by the scores of 12-15, 16-14, 15-11, 15-10, and 10-15.

The five game marathon lasted two hours and forty-five minutes. Coach Bock said, "These two teams match up very well. They played some great volleyball. And even though we lost, it was the type of match you are happy just to be involved in."

Sunday, the team returned to College Hill to face the College of William and Mary as their last match of the tournament. The parents weekend crowd was treated to an incredible comeback by the Lady Indians. The first game was a see-saw affair which featured a large number of sideouts before William and Mary won it 15-13. The second game was a shocker to the crowd as W & M shut out Juniata 15-0. W & M's frontline, which averaged just 5'10", did a great imitation of a concrete wall as repeated Juniata spikes never crossed over the net.

Then the Lady Indians took control after that second game whitewash. Heather Pruim seemed to find a groove at the net, coming up with crucial kills when a sideout was needed. JC won the third game 15-12, as Pruim registered a kill on game point. The momentum began to build in the fourth game. After W & M scored the first two points, the JC offense started rolling. Cathy Miller scored a kill on a quick set from Beth Hoppel and sophomore Jackie Rebert crushed a line shot passed the block as the team built up a 10-3 lead. The team cruised through the rest of that game, winning 15-7, to force a decisive 5th game.

Several Juniata mistakes at the start of the 5th game helped W & M build an 8-3 lead. Dana Worthington served two points to cut the lead to three. After W & M scored one point, Rebert recorded two kills and Mikker a stuff block to bring the team to within one at 8-9. W & M scored 3 straight points to build the lead back up to 4, but it would be the last points they scored Sunday. Pruim began the comeback with several hits off and throuhg the block. Then, Rhonda Bygall did were own concrete wall imitation, bringing the Lady Indians to match point play, Bygall blocked 3 W & M spikes, including the clincher of the 15-12 game.

Heather Pruim recorded 31 kills for points or sideouts during the match. Rhonda Bygall registered 11 blocks for Juniata. Coach Bock feels that "Success os measured by the number of obstacles overcome" and this coming weekend provides the Lady Indians with yet another major obstacle.

Following an MAC match against Albright on Wednesday, the team travels to Chicago on Thursday to face 3 top ten teams from Division III: Colorado College, Elmhurst College, and Illinois Benedictine. This will be another obstacle for them to overcome in their quest for the national title.

More Games for J.C.

by Andrea Zavod

Card players shuffle your decks, pool shooters chalk your sticks, as Juniata's game room is expanding!

Responding to a need for more room in the Totem Inn and a more appropriate place for the pool tables and video games, Centerboard's Recreation Committee has recently proposed to move the game equipment to the Mini-Lounge in Ellis Hall.

In addition to moving the recreation equipment, the committee has also proposed to purchase additional equipment to include, pocket billiards, darts, table tennis, board games such as backgammon and chess, and card tables.

Don't be surprized if the next intramural signups include space for dart teams or ping pong partners. The committee hopes to organize activities on an intramural level and to form leagues in the various activities. Just the same way volleyball and basktball teams are formed, students wil be able to form, for example dart teams and compete individually in chess competition.

The ultimate goal of the committee is to be involved intercollegiately. The Association of College Unions International (ACUI) sponsers regional and national competitions in chess, darts, spades, table tennis and others. The most known cmpetition is "the varsity sport of the mind," the College Bowl; which can usually be seen on educational television.

According to Bill Huston, Director of Programming and advisor to Center Board, the program will increase the services to students and it is an attempt to keep pace with other schools comparable to Juniata, like Bucknell and Gettysburg. Huston met with the program director of the ACUI subregion and found the equipment proposed for purchase has been successful in other schools.

Waiting approval for the redesigning of the rooms, Huston hopes to start the project during this semester.

Huston welcomes any suggestions from students and anyone interested in being involved in the committee is encourgaed to stop by the information desk and speak with him.

London-Interior and justice ministers of Western Europe met in London Thursday in the first of three conferences to explore ways to deal with terrorist attacks that have cost many lives as well as millions of dollars.

The next two meetings will concentrate on more intensive baggage checks for diplomats that are suspected of violation immunity privileges.

United Nations-Negotiations between the Soviet Union and the United States about Nicholas Daniloff, the American reporter accused of spying, are at a serious stage, however, neither nation's top diplomatic officials has much to say.

There weren't any settlements over Daniloff's continued detention on Moscow that threatens a second summit between President Reagen and Mikhail Gorbachev.

China-Chinese archaeologists found a 3,000 year old mummy clad in colorful woolen knitwear, furs and leather boots near the Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region of Western China where the arid nature of the country allows even the clothing to preserved still intact. A total of 50 mummies buried with pottery and wooden utensils were unearthed from more than 80 tombs.

Pittsburgh-Fourteen U.S. Postal workers were charged of selling heroin, cocaine, marijuana, LSD and two other drugs after authorities received tips from fellow post office employees on Wednesday night after a one-year investigation by the U.S. Postal inspectors.

The sales were made to undercover agents and occured primarily at the air mail facility at the Greater Pittsburgh International Airport, the main branch of the Pittsburgh post office on the North side and the bulk mail center in Warrendale.

J.C. and the Nifty 50's

"Juniata Celebrates the Nifty '50s" is the theme of the 1986 Homecoming Weekend at Juniata College. Scheduled for Friday and Saturday, Oct. 3 and 4, the weekend promises to be filled with activities for all ages.

Special recognition will be given during the weekend to the 30th anniversary of the Juniata Indians' appearance in the Tangerine Bowl. Members of the original football team, including Coach Hicks, will be the special guests of the campus.

Kicking off the festivities on Friday will be an old-fashioned pep rally—complete with skits, a bonfire and band—at 9 p.m. in the South Hall parking lot.

A new "addition" to the celebration will come in the form of a "Town Run" on Saturday. Visitors and community residents are invited to watch Juniata students, representing their residence halls, compete in completing an unusual and fun "obstacle" course throughout the borough of Huntingdon. This event will begin at 10 a.m.

Saturday's Homecoming Parade, a traditional highlight of the weekend, will begin at 11 a.m. and will feature the Homecoming Court, floats by Juniata classes and various clubs and organizations, the Juniata Band, the Cloister Kazoo Band, participants in the Town Run, and local fire company apparatus.

The 1986 Homecoming Queen will be crowned at half-time ceremonies during the college's football game with Albright College. Kick-off is at 1:30 p.m. on College Field. Earlier in the day, Juniata Men's Cross Counry team will host York College at 11:00 a.m. on College Field. The varsity Soccer team is at home against Kings

Getting Involved Means Being Busy — Satisfaction

Sometime today between typing my HOBO paper, editing my Writing for Business and Industry assignment and putting the finishing touches on some Homecoming preparations I stopped myself to ask, "Is it really worth it?" planning Homecoming I mean. . .getting involved. . .falling behind in my classes. . .making phone calls every spare minute of the day. . .my day.

Then every time something falls together, or someone begins to show some interest, or someone offers a new idea,I think, yeah it is worth it. The satisfaction of seeing some people work together is worth it.

Sure Homecoming will always be Homecoming, but I decided when I took the responsibility of heading this year's celebration that I would try to do something different, something challenging, something that just might unite the campus for one weekend.

So here I am with all the plans I have made, hoping and praying that everyone will make the effort to get involved. . .or interested. And who knows maybe they will have some fun in the meantime.

Students do get involved, in Mountain Day, All Class Night and Storming of the Arch. But no one seems to be interested in anything different, in trying something new. Maybe they don't have to the time, maybe they don't feel like it or maybe they just don't care.

Well I care and every person that helped with this year's Homecoming celebration from the administration and faculty, to the students and Huntingdon residents, cares. Now if only every Juniata College student cared all of our efforts will be worth it, and maybe more people will get involved in the things that Juniata can offer. I don't mean classes and sports, I mean the things that take a little extra time and effort.

Maybe we can all start to care. And after this weekend, no matter how successful it is, I know that I will look back on all of our efforts and know that it was worth it.

From the Pen of. . .

by John Deppen The South African situation is a terrible tragedy, and it grows bloodier every day. In this situation there are a number of groups who are struggling to either maintain the status quo or radically change it.

On the white side, most Afrikaners belong to the National Party. It is hard-nosed, but considered "verligte" (enlightened).

"Verkrampte" (narrow-minded) groups are putting pressure on the National Party. There is the Conservative Party whose support is growing; the Reconstituted National Party, which is to the right of the Conservative Party; and on the extreme right is the Afrikaner Resistence Movement, led by the ultraracist Eugene Terre Blanche. The leading opposition in parliament to South African President P.W. Botha is the Progressive Federal Party.

On the non-white side, the largest coalition of groups is the United Democratic Front (UDF). The UDF is a legal group in the eyes of the S.A. gov't. On the other hand, the African National Congress (ANC), whose chief is Nelson Mandela, has been out-lawed. While Mandela is in jail, Oliver Tambo leads the group from outside the country. The ANC advocates violence in the struggle against apartheid.

Another group is the Azanian People's Organization (AZAPO), a group which excludes whites. It was founded after the death of black activist Steve Biko.

Inkatha, a Zula group, is South Africa's largest political association, with a dues-paying membership of 1 million. It is headed by Chief Gatsha Buthelezi.

South Africa's future lies not only in the action taken by the West; it lies largely in the paths taken by these groups. They each represent an aspect of the South African situation which must be dealt with in order for South Africa to work its way out of the turmoil of apartheid.

Computer Society Voices Opinion

To the Editor:

There are a few facts that should be brought to light concerning the lecture that was to have taken place last Thursday evening on the Stragetic Defense Initiative. This series of lectures on SDI was sponsored by the Computer Society. However, the clubs which sponsored these lectures had NO part in arranging the petition concerning American political prisoners in Russia, which was to have been presented to Mr. Boris Ivanov, the scheis Ivanov, the sche speaker for Thursday. Mr. Ivanov was invited to Juniata, ast, to merely speak on the topic of the American Strategic Defense Initiative. We realize that one has a right to voice his concerns and opinions. However, we hope that in the future, the person who organized the petition will act with more concern and respect towards the clubs who sponsor the events.

Respectively,

Author of Petition Sends Thanx

To the Editor:

As the author of the petition regarding Andrei Salharov, Nicholas Daniloff, etc . . . I would like to extend my deepest thanks to all those who cared enough to take the time to sign it.

I also thank my friends who helped me in this effort.

Furthermore, I extend gratitude to Professor Rhoads and Drs. Vocke and Murray for their time and helpful advice.

Counselor's Corner

Dr. Jay Buchanan

SIGI- System of Interactive Guidance and Information- can help you in the important areas of career planning and decision making.

As a freshman, you are going to be making some critical decisions over the next several months. SIGI can help you with those decisions. It can help you examine your own rewards and satisfactions associated with occupational choice.

At the sophomore level, SIGI can aid students who are considering POE changes. Interest patterns change and we find out more about our capacities intellectually. Many students will be looking at career paths quite different from those they had as freshmen.

SIGI can be of benefit to juniors and seniors as well as freshmen and sophomores. It is never too late to look at and change one's career plans. SIGI can serve to reinforce current plans and/or it can introduce options perhaps not previously considered.

Special features afforded SIGI users include occupational information. Each year the software program is updated to insure that only accurate and timely information is presented. Additionally, users can access information on hundreds of occupations job prospects through the 1990s, salaries, special requirements for entry.

But most of importantly, you can schedule SIGI very easily and at your own convenience. The program consists of five systems and takes approximately two hours to complete. It comes with a printer so you can take hard copy with you for future reference. Stop and schedule an appointment with SIGI! Just see Denise Scalia in the Career Planning and Placement Center. Remember, it's alright of be undecided regarding career path but it is not alright to do nothing about it.

Students Speak

"What do you think of the Saturday morning Post Office hours?"

Scott Rubel (sophomore): "I think they should be open an hour after dinner for the students, especially the football players who usually have a game on Saturday morning."

Keith Dyke (freshman): "I think it's too short! It should be open longer for students."

Chris Branton (junior): "Nobody is up early in the morning. I believe they should extend the hours into the afternoon."

Karen Thompson (freshman): "I think they should be open longer because hardly anyone is up early on Saturdays. Evening hours would be appropriate."

O'Keefe Offers Outlook for One's College Career

Addressing a group of high school graduates recently in Connecticut, Armstrong Rubber Company's Chairman Frank R. O'Keefe, Jr. offered some observations on making the most of a college career.

Mr. O'Keefe advised students not to be overly concerned with job prospects they might face upon college graduation. "Concentrate instead, with equal intensity, upon learning, reading, discussing — with ample time for recreational and social activities," he said, during "Business Week 1986" sponsored by the Connecticut Industry and Business Association.

"You have some wonderful living and experimenting to do before a career becomes the central issue," he advised. "Use the next few years well. You will probably never again have as much time to read, to explore, discuss and to grow."

According to Mr. O'Keefe, the most important lesson in college is learning how to learn. "Remember that so much of what we consider certain knowledge today will not be so certain by the time you finish college."

"That's why learning how to learn is so important. For me, this means learning how to find new and appropriate answers to new questions — and not dishing up the old, no longer valid, answers."

Mr. O'Keefe concluded that students entering college should relax. "Don't buy all the gloom and doom that is handed out," he said. "Be careful of running with the herd. The only absolutely certain thing you can say about the future is that is lies before you. And it can be a lot of fun. So find out what you would like to do; do it, and have fun."

Mr. O'Keefe joined The Armstrong Rubber Company, a Fortune 500 international corporation in 1980.

$ Dollars And Sense $

by Larry Bock

College costs in the United States have risen at rates exceeding inflation during each of the last five years. Even with increases in financial aid from state and institutional sources, there's an ever increasing strain on families to cope with educational expenses. As net (unaided)costs have gone up, some unique financing alternatives have been made available to protect the accessibility of post-secondary education.

During the 1985-86 Academic year the Pennsylvania Higher Education Assistance Agency (PHEAA) introduced a pilot financing program called the PHEAA Supplemental Loan. The program is in full scale operation this year and has received an extremely enthusiastic response from participating students and parents. Supplemental Loans are available to all U.S. students attending Pennsylvania colleges and universities (regardless of their home state). The amounts that may be borrowed vary, but generally can be up to the full tuition, room and board costs at a particular school. . .at Juniata this could amount to $10,800. . . per academic year. Repayment of Supplemental Loans begins immediately and has a maximum term of ten years with an annual percentage rate of 9.5%. The primary borrower is the student but there must be a creditworthy co-applicant (usually a parent) willing to negotiate the loan. Either the student or co-signer must then make monthly interest and principal payments.

The PHEAA Supplemental Loan appears to be the best alternative for students and parents seeking additional financing for higher education (certainly much better than the old PLUS Loan at this time). Prudent borrowing with a long term, low cost, unsecured vehicle like the Supplememntal Loan can be an effective way to bring down yearly college costs.

For more information, inquire at the Financial Aid Office.

Breakdancing on bicycles. High speed bike chases. Romance on two wheels. Quicksilver does for ten speeds what Back to the Future did for skate boards.

Kevin Bacon (Footloose) plays Jack Casey, a "bellied up" stockbroker, who trades in his banal three-piece suit for a bright new ten-speed. He begins delivering for a messenger service agency called Quicksilver-winding his way through the streets of San Francisco on a ten-speed bike. Like a guided missle, he darts between cars, dodges on-coming traffic, and dashes through red lights. However, Quicksilver soon shifts gears and Jack Casey becomes entangeled with a flustered brunette and an overwrought drug dealer. From this point on, Casey finds himself peddling on a coarse unpaved road.

. Although the plot grows rather predictable, Quicksilver still provides ample entertainment. So, screech on the breaks and glide to the aisle to see Quicksilver.

Tussey Terrace Gets a New R.D.

by Andrea Zavod What does Chester, N.Y. have in common with Huntingdon, PA? According to Chester native Nora O'Sullivan, now Residence Director in Tussy-/Terrace, it's just as small, but "there are less 'townies!' " But, as the saying goes in Huntingdon, "People Like it Here," and so does O'Sullivan, now more than ever since being here at Juniata College.

A 1985 graduate of Lock Haven University, O'Sullivan brought her degree in Special Education to Huntingdon two years ago, and landed herself a teaching position at Huntingdon Area Middle School.

O'Sullivan also spends much of her free time volunteering for the Special Olympics. Involved so much in fact, she's the area "J" manager of the Special Olympics. Area "J" which consists of Huntingdon, Fulton, Mifflin and Juniata counties, is responsible for the Special Olympic track and field meet here at Oller Field.

Having been manager since June, O'Sullivan has been very busy in coordinating promotions for the organization. She has recently finished producing a video tape of the Special Olympic program and has been visiting local organizations to raise local interest and support for the program.

O'Sullivan hopes to get the college involved with the Special Olympic program. Right now, in coordination with Juniata's RHA, O'Sullivan has arranged for her students to come to the college and watch weekend sporting events. This is only the beginning says O'Sullivan as she and President Neff are discussing other possibilities to get the college involved. One idea is to hold the Adult Special Olympics on a weekend and have college students help organize and carry out the day's events.

And about being a staff member at Juniata, O'Sullivan says she ". . .loves it. The staff here at the college has given me a lot of support and reassurance. . .they make me feel very comfortable." As for activities here on campus, O'Sullivan can't wait to see Jello Wrestling, and when Mud Volleyball was mentioned, O'Sullivan said, "I want to play!"

As an RD, O'Sullivan works closely with the Resident Assistants of Tussey and Terrace Residence Halls. She helps organize Hall activities, and is always around to be an informational resource to all the students. O'Sullivan is also involved with the RHA, and enjoys meeting and talking with the students. As a matter of fact, O'Sullivan says that's the best part about being on campus. Said O'Sullivan, "I love to meet people."

Rick Monahan, RA on 2nd Terrace, once told O'Sullivan, "You're not a thinker, you're a doer." What she does is use that left-over college spirit and enthusiasm towards her job, the community and our campus. Welcome Nora, we're glad to have you!

Crack Attack

by Cricket Julius

Crack attack! What's that? It has a catchy name, but unfortunately it doesn't represent a fresh, new product on the market. In fact, crack is the greatest threat to health in the U.S. today. It's a cheap, highly addictive drug quite similar to cocaine. Crack is cocaine in the form of small chips that a user smokes, usually in a water pipe or in a regular or makeshift pipe. One experience can lead to addiction! This drug is usually sold in small vials, each containing one to three chips, or pellets, at an average of only $8 to $20 per vial.

Because it's smoked, crack is far more potent and takes effect much faster than powered cocaine. Inhaling crack produces an almost instantaneous and intense cocaine high. The euphoria lasts only for five to twelve minutes. Users described it as extremely pleasurable. What a perfect, cheap alternative to a cocaine high, right? Unfortunately, the high is almost always followed by a "crash." Users may feel irritable, depressed, nervous, or paranoid, they may sleep and eat much more than normal and feel a compulsive desire for more crack.

The real threat lies in this drug's ability to turn the user into an addict in a very short amount of time. The major danger of crack is that within a few days to a few weeks it can take control of your brain and your life.

In order to keep this drugs popularity from spreading, the public should be aware of danger signals for someone using crack: academic problems, loss of interest in customary activities, a new set of friends, mood swings, memory problems, chronic coughing.

If someone you know is using crack, seek professional help. Education is the best source and only effective defense against this drug. Let's "crack" down now before this problem becomes too hard to handle!

Circle K Returns To JC Campus

by Andrea Zavod

Did you have a Key Club in your high school? If your did, you probably knew that it was a division of the Kiwanis Club in your community. Just as the Key Club operates in the high school, so does the Circle K at the college level.

Juniata's Circle K, a division of Kiwainis Club of Huntingdon is back in full swing this year, and is looking forward to being involved in many school and community activities.

The Circle K is a social service club found in every state and seven countries. According to President Cary Larrick, the organization is for anyone interested in community relations. Larrick says the goal of Circle K and the Kiwainis organization is to improve the environment in which we live.

With their charter reinstated by Student Government, the Circle K is going full steam to make plans for the upcoming year. So far Larrick and her officers have scheduled three bloodmobiles, have arranged to help with the Special Olympics and have tentative plans to help other groups on campus, such as Social Service Club, the JEC and a community organization, the Huntingdon House.

Larrick also has planned for guest speakers from the business community to come to campus to speak with sudents. The speakers will address issues important to college students such as what employers look for in a college graduate.

This year with an initial membership drive bringing 33 interested students, Larrick is backed by an eager group officers and chairpersons.

Officers include Larrick,-President; Dan Suchovic,Vice President; Kim Ross, Secretary; and Patty Sycos, Treasurer. Committee chairpersons include Sarah Crockett, social service; Lori Dobbins, membership; Rich Brnich,finance; Molly Bagwell, fundraising and Amber Terhune, public relations.

Larrick emphasizes the fact that any student regardless of major is encouraged to get involved. Those interested in becoming involved with Circle K activities may drop a note in Circle K box 1027 or are welcome to come to the next meeting.

Remember the first bloodmobile is October 8 from 11am to 5pm in the ballroom, upstairs in Ellis Hall.

Homecoming Weekend 1986 will be held on October 3 and 4. To make Homecoming more exciting and memorable for JC students, the Homecoming Committee has centered many activities around a campus-wide residence hall competition. A scavenger hunt, repuiring teams of four males and four females, will take place on Thursday evening. On Friday, teams of six males and six females from each residence hall will participate in afternoon games of tug-of-war, Simon Sez, an obdtacle course, and individual relays. A run through town is tentatively scheduled for 10:00 Saturday morning. During the football game at 1:30 against Albright, each residence hall may set up a booth to raise money for a charity. The residence hall with the most points will receive a VCR as a permanent part of their lounge. Attend your next RHA meeting for specific rules and regulations and find out how you can get involved!

During registration for alunmi on Friday and Saturday, Shoemaker Galleries will host an art exhibit. The Juniata/Coca Cola Classic Volleyball tournament will be played Friday from 4-9 PM immediately followed by an old fashioned pep rally. This will be held in South's parking lot which includes a bonfire, skits and a band.

The volleyball tournament continue Saturday at 10:00 AM wity semi-finals at 6:00 PM and finals at 7:00 PM. The parade will start at 11:00 AM with the floats illustrating the theme "Juniata Celebrates the Nifty 50's". The cross-country meet against York College also starts at 11:00. Half-time at the football game will include crowning the Homecoming Queen and also the presentation of the spirit award to the winning residence hall. At 10:00 PM, the Homecoming dance starts in the intramural gym.

Combining alumni and student activities will hopefully make Homecoming Weekend enjoyable for everyone! If you would like to get involved and lend a hand with the preparations please contact Laura or Yvonne at 643-1475. They would appreciate the help!

Star Wars Lecture Held

by Alayne Unterberger

On Tuesday, Sept. 23, the Computer Society sponsored a lecture in which Dr. David Wright and Colonel Robert F. Hurvey gave their views on the strategic defense initiative (Star Wars or SDI).

Dr. Wright is a physics professors at the University of Pennsylvania and Colonel Hervey is the director of the Command & Control Strategies Department of the Army at the Carlisle War College.

Col. Hervey began by giving an overview of SDI. As he stated, SDI was introduced by Pres. Reagan in his speech of March 23, 1983 in which he defended SDI as a "total-umbrella defense". Consequently, a series of panels and commissions were created to review the possibilities of the strategic defense initiative. There are four phases of SDI: research, systems development, transition and the final phase. Colonel Hervey stressed the fact that right now we are in the research phase, which in no way violates the ABM Treaty we made with the USSR in 1972. However, the other three phases would indeed violate this treaty.

The colonel then approached the major issues to be considered in connection to SDI. The first issue he discussed was the technical side; he brought up the question of the program being technically feasible and our need to further investigate new technologies which may be beneficial to SDI. The second issue is the question of the program's strategic desirability. When thinking abut military stability, he suggested that we should consider whether or not. "Star Wars" would diminish or enhance our nation's stability. Colonel Hervey then went on to the last issue, the political impact of SDI on US-USSR relations, saying that this point receives most focus and suggested that more importance should be given to the other two.

Dr. Wright began his presentation by stating that, in his opinion, SDI would make the US less secure. He emphasized that, although the various components of SDI might work, the system itself would not. Dr. Wright then went on to state the problems he saw with Star Wars. First, he asserted that SDI is a defensive system designed to shoot down missiles in flight. He went on to explain what the entails: detection, locating the missiles, distinguishing the missles from decoys and actually shooting and destroying the missiles in flight. He added that this whold process must be done within minutes.

Next, Dr. Wright distinguisehd between the two goals of SDI: defending cities & defending missile sites. When speaking of defending cities, as Pres. Reagan and Sec. of State, Weinberger assert that SDI does, Dr. Wright considered the idea "totally unfeasible." He then explained that to defend cities, SDI would have to be a "perfect defense" and used the example of SDI being 98% effective, which would result in 200 warheads being let through.

He went on to explain that, due to ever-increasing technology, SDI would never be completed. Also, Dr. Wright affirmed that SDI could never be tested due to the fact that the system would have to be completely computer-run.

When speaking on defending missile sites, Dr. Wright stated that SDI would "enhance deterrence" and that it would be the equivalent of Mutual Assured Destruction (MAD). This could be very destabilizing and could further the arms race since the USSR could view SDI as a first-strike weapon. Dr. Wright concluded by expressing his opinion that US Foreign policy is ridden with paradoxes: optimism with SDI and pessimism with treaties.

Could your room win a contest?

Have you put a lot of time and energy into decorating your room, or are you making plans to decorate your room so that it will be a more enjoyable place to be? If so, then why not enter the Annual Room Decoration Contest sponsored by the Residential Life Committee and Student Services.

Applications are being accepted from now until October 10 in the Residential Life/Housing Office for the Annual Room Decoration Contest. Rooms are judged based on originality, execution, and impact on evaluators. There are three categories of prizes associated with the contest. First, there is a $25.00 prize for the best decorated room in each residence hall as selected by the Residence Director and Residence Hall Association. Second, there is a $50.00 prize for the best decorated freshman room on campus as selected by President Neff and a committee appointed by the Residential Life Committee. Third, there is a $75.00 prize for the best decorated room on campus, also selected by President Neff and the Residential Life Committee.

So, take a few minutes to stop in the Residential Life/Housing Office and fill out an application form.

Indians Continue To Roll Defeat Highly Ranked Widener 24-9

By Mike Antenucci

In a heavy rain storm, saturated field, the Juniata Football team sloshed Widener University 24-9. With a victory the Indians increased their record to 4-0 (3-0 in MAC) as they continue their quest to capture the MAC title.

It is possible to say that Juniata was responsible for all the points put on the board, including Wideners. The Pioneers were forced to punt on their first possesion, however, Juniata was flagged with too many men on the field, allowing the Widener drive to continue. Three plays later, fullback Pat Barr rumbled 8 yards into the endzone for what would be the only Widener TD of the game. After Bob Freece added the extra point Widener led 7-0 with 10:40 to play.

The Indians were not to be denied. In less than four minutes, Juniata marched 76 yards down the field on 11 plays. The drive was capped off when Mike Culver-who, during this drive set a school record for total yards gained in a career both running and passing combined- found Dan Crossey open in the endzone for a 14 yard score. Keith watson added the PAT and the score was tied at seven. The two key plays of the drive were, the catch made by Jim Metz on 3rd and 8 to keep the drive alive, and the personal foul against Widener for a late jit.

Juniata then stopped Widener cold, forcing a punt from deep in Pioneer territory. JC with good field position put together another inpressive scoring drive. Going 59 yards in 10 plays the Indians ended the surge by catching Widener off guard. With a 2nd and 15 situation Culver dropped back to pass, but instead of going deep he shuffled it foward to Dan Crossey who had 15 yards of clear field leading to the endzone.. After the PAT was added Juniata ked 14-7 with :38 seconds left to play in the 1st quarter.

Widener started to drive on their next series, marching down to try and get a first down. They were stopped short and JC took over on downs.

This time the Poneers would help the Indians scoring cause. On a punting situation, Widener's Mike Humanick mishandled the ball on the 13 yard line, where JC's Randy Martin recovered. Two plays later on 3rd and 11, Dan Crossey was hit short of, but fumbled the ball into the endzone, where JC's Don Betar recovered it for an Indian touchdown (even though everyone thinks it was Bill Snyder). Watson added the PAT and Juniata led 21-7 with 7:37 remaining in the 2nd Quarter.

On the insuing kickoff, Widener's Kim Harris fumbled the ball on the 32 yard line where JC special teamer Frank Gay pounded on it for the recovery. Three plays later, after the Indians offense was stopped, freshman Keith Watson came in the game for a 49 yard field goal. The ball cleared the crossbar, and Watson was the new record holder for the longest field goal made in school history. Juniata led 24-7 with 5:53 left in the 2nd qtr.

A last ditch drive by Widener in the first half was ended when DB Graig St. Clair picked off a Joe Bakey pass- the first half ended JC 24 Widener 7.

On WU's first possesion of the second half, the Pioneers marched inside the Indian 5 yard line. However, on 1st and goal from the one, Pat Barr fumbled and JC recovered in the endzone for a touchback. After an exchange of punts, Juniata was plagued by the punt for the fourth time this season. The bad snap over Spahr's head was good for a 14 yard loss and a WU first down on the JC seven yard line.

Of course, we all know the script from here: Juniata defense. On the 3rd play of the series, Joe Bakey rolled right to pass- Lou Komer put on heavy pursuit from behind causing a fumble which was recovered by Bob Crossey.

On their next series Juniata was once again forced to punt from deep in their own territory. This time the slippery ball went through Spahrs hands and into the endzone, where Juniata was forced to take a safety. Juniata now led 24-9 with :42 second, remaining in the 3rd qtr.

The 4th period was scoreless. Three times Widener was stopped on fourth down situations. The Indians were stopped by an interception, punted once, then just sat on the ball to run out the clock and the hopes of a Widener unbeaten season.

Nuch's Notes-: For the fourth week in a row, the punting unit has either had a punt blocked or a bad snap. Juniata compiled 16 first downs to Widner's 14. The Indians only gained 64 yards on the ground. Leading rusher was Ian Malee, who carried 10 times for 47 yards. Mike Culver was 17-25-149, throwing 2 TD's on the day. Dan Crossey was the Indian leading receiver, catching 5 passes for 53 yards. Tight end Jim Metz had 3 key catches—2 for Juniata first downs.

The Juniata defense forced 5 turnovers. Widener had a total of 7 turnovers—the other 2 were on special teams. JC sacked Widener QB Joe Bakey 4 times. Dave Ritter recorded 2 1/2 sacks, Tom Kalinyak had 11 tackles, and Bryan Warren had 7. Bob Crossey now has 48 tackles on the season for an average of 12 a game.

JC Women Win Two In Chicago; Coca-Cola Classic Up Next

By Tom Hunt

When one looks at the record, this past week was merely a repeat of the previous week for the Juniata College Women's Volleyball team. The Lady Indians compiled two victories and two defeats as they did the week before. But this time, the competition was all Division III schools including three teams among the top eight in the nation. And despite an overall 5-4 record, the Lady Indians showed that they will be a force in Division III by the end of the season.

The 1st team of the week was a very weak MAC team from Albright College. Resting the starting team for the weeekend tournament in Chicago, Coach Bock took 3 sophomores and 5 freshman to Reading. And the underclassmen responded well to the challenge as they trounced Albright 15-5, 15-4, 15-9. Coach Bock expressed pleasure in their performance. The following day, the team loaded themselves into a van bound for the Windy City. In Chicago waited three of the best Division III schools in the nation.

Friday night's opponent was Illinois Benedictine College, the number two team in the nation. But rankings didn't mean anything , this time. Juniata defeated IBC in three straight, 15-10, 15-13, 15-10. Middle blockers, Cathy Miller, a junior, and Rhonda Bygall, a freshman, controlled the match with timely hitting & blocking.

Saturday, Juniata opened against Elmhurst College, the defending Division III national champs. The Lady Indians lost a close, hotly contested match by scores of 12-15, 15-7, 8-15, and 13-15. Their last match was against Colorado College. Colorado was returning a top 8 team from lats year almost completely intact. Aain, Juniata played tough but came out on the short end of the match 15-17, 5-15, 15-7, 5-15. The Lady Indians held game point in the first game at 14-13 and 15-14 but Colorado came back to win it. Coach Bock attributed the loss to Colorado's great defense which picked up everything J.C. hit.

Overall, Coach Bock was happy with the team's performance and called the weekend "very productive despite the wins and losses record." The midlle attack and blocking coupled with the setting of junior Beth Hoppel were the strong points. However, Coach Bock noted that there were some break downs during serve reception, but no major mistakes. He feels that it's a matter of more playing time together before the girls get rolling again.

Juniata hosts the Coca-Cola Classid Friday nite and all day Saturday. This year's Classic features 17 teams including, nationally ranked Ohio Northern, Western Maryland, IBC, and Grove City, the defending champs. Play begins Friday at 4:00 p.m. and 7:45 p.m.. Admission is free with I.D.. Come out and watch our lady Indians attempt to win their own tournament for the second time in three years.

Senior Co-Captain Chuck Kreutzberger takes ball from opponent during Indian Soccer action last week. The Indians have two games planned for Homecoming weekend. One vs. Alumni and one at 2:00 versus Kings College.

Neff Speaks on J.C.

by Buffy Heisey

In an interview with President Robert Neff, he shared his impressions of Juniata and his hopes for the future. He has been involved with higher education for the last thirty years. Now he's surrounded by Juniata tradition and he's enjoying it.

When asked to comment on Juniata students, he replied, "I've been around students from the 50's, 60's and 70's, and in terms of courtesy, involvement and commitment—this generation is the best." He believes though, that this generation isn't as clear on its future as previous ones were. He feels there is an underlying sense of insecurity in planning for life long goals.

In the short time he's been here, he's been impressed by many aspects of Juniata. Among these are the following: the planning of Parents Weekend, the quality of persons in leadership positions, residence hall involvement, the friendly character of the school and the student's sense of perserverence and pride.

President Neff is concentrating on four areas for the future. The first is his concern for marketing the college and the awareness of different markets. Neff added, "Juniata needs a larger circle of friends. In order to become more of a regional college, it needs to become better known by states that border Pennsylvania." The second concern is to interpret ourselves better. He elaborated on this subject by saying, "We need to better understand Juniata's gifts in order to define ourselves to the students we might attract." The third is the channeling of finances. He said, "There will be greater financial support for scholarships, faculty development, and the educational side of the program." The fourth area was to turn our location into an advantage.

"We should see ourselves as a regional development in Pennsylvania. It is a beautiful setting and it offers many outdoor opportunities," commented Neff. His other goals include maintaining the quality of campus life, strong athletics, student involvement, academic excellence and the sense of community. With the help of Pres. Neff, the faculty, and the students—this will be a year of improvements and greater opportunities for Juniata.

This past weekend Adriene Rudeen was crowned Homecoming Queen, 1986. Here she is congratulated by President Neff.

Students Refer Students

by Buffy Heisey

The Admissions Office is sponsoring a student referral campaign! A student referral is simply a current student recommending a high school junior or senior for Juniata'a prospective student mailing list.

If every student were to fill out just one of these cards with the name of a friend or relative who might be interested in attending Juniata, 1100 potential freshmen would be added to the mailing list. RHA points will be awarded to the first, second and third place residence halls who generate the most prospective student referrals that eventuate in applications for admission for Fall, 1987.

Cards are being distributed by RHA representatives. Additional cards can be found at Ellis Information Desk. Intracampus mail will return these cards to Admissions. A student referral is an easy way to share information about Juniata with friends while promoting its academic excellence.

World News Update

by Lisa Clapper

Washington—The Senate voted 78-21 to override President Reagan's veto against South Africa on Thursday. South African leaders are threatening to stop buying grain from the United States and to block imports by our neighbors. Currently there is $265 million in United States agricultural exports.

Oklahoma—Flooding continues in the Midwest and Plain states; however, the hardest hit state is Oklahoma where thunderstorms from Hurricane Paine caused the worst flooding in the state's history.

New York City—The federal government added to their forces to fight crack, the most addictive form of cocaine, making the total rise to 24 forces. Before the increase is official, congress must accept the $10 million bill for the task forces.

CASE Plans Activities

by Alayne Unterberger

In conjunction with the National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week (NCAAW), the Committee on Alcohol Study and Education (CASE) has been busy planning a number of activities to educate the campus about safe drinking.

Things will be started off on Tuesday, October 29. CASE has planned to have Mr. John O'Neill, a recovering herion addict and member of the Treatment Alternative to Street Crimes (TASC), who has been described as a "dynamic" speaker give a Keynote lecture. Then, on Wednesday, Oct. 30, Mr. O'Neill is scheduled to lead a number of more informal discussions in the residence halls on drug related problems.

On Thursday, before dinner, the group is sponsoring a non-alcoholic bar in Tote to serve "mocktails"—the term given to the most popular drinks without the alcoholic content. Waitresses and waiters will be provided to create the pub-like atmosphere found in nice bars during happy hour. This event is scheduled from 4:30 to 6:00 so stop up and have a few before dinner.!

Cloister Wins Competition

by Laura Mumaw

Cloister triumphed over this weekend's Residence Hall Competition. With a total of fourteen points they were awarded a VCR for their lounge.

There was incredible enthusiasm and support for the events this weekend from all Residence Halls on campus.

The Scavenger Hunt on Thursday nite gave Cloister five points for first, South—three points for second and East one point for third.

Friday afternoon the Obstacle Course, held in front of East, went along as scheduled despite the pouring rain, five inches of mud and an over-zealous football coach. This left North in first place, Cloister in second and South in third.

Meanwhile in the multi-purpose rooms, Steve LaCrone led a Simon Says game. Cloister and North both settled for third, and T-N-T beat out East Houses for first place.

Finally the town run began as scheduled at 10:00 am near the Sears Dept. Store. Teams had to do such things as feed a baby-bottle to a diapered team-mate, run in hip waders and pass a lifesaver with a toothpick between their teeth. Cloister won this event to clinch their victory.

J.C. Tradition is the Talk of the Campus

It's that time of the year again. Yes, everyone is running around like crazy, looking in the Pathfinders to find the scheduled day's events, trying to get the inside scoop from the janitors, and even partying during the week, hoping that the next day will be Mountain Day.

Who really knows when Mountain Day really is? Well, it could have already been! We know that it's not on a Friday, figuring that too many people will head for home, making it a long weekend. Is it on a Monday or how about a Wednesday? Of course, we know that a large number of classes are held on these days, so maybe the college would rather see us miss fewer classes and hold this prestigious day on a Tuesday or Thursday.

Either way, Mountain Day keeps the students guessing— and last year kept the college wondering if they would ever be able to keep this traditional day. Let's hope that they don't wait too long.

To say the least, this day atttracts a lot of attention. If everyone in the college who said the words 'mountain day' actually attended, the whole student body would be there- but that never seems to be the case. But, be this as it may, watch how angered we all will get if Mountain Day gets taken away from us.

From the Pen of. . .

by Alayne Unterberger

Today, it's one of the most focused-on areas of the entire world. You can't watch television or pick up a magazine that doesn't have something about South Africa in it. But, what is really goin on in South Africa today?

Since the introduction of apartheid in South Africa, conflict has been a way of life. The South African government, under the leadership of the National Party, has imposed state-of-emergency periods many times in an attempt to control the tensions in the country. In July of 1985, the government issued a state of emergency that lasted until March of 1986. Then, on April 18 of this year, President Botha announced that the pass law regulation that required blacks to carry pass books (identification) would no longer be valid. In this same speech, Botha declared that there would be no futher arrests under the Pass Law and that those jailed in violation of the laws would be released. The Group Areas Act which requires that blacks remain in bantnustans and prohibits their travel was kept in force. However, Botha proposed that a "common identity document" be made for all racial groups.

The African National Congress (ANC) which has been outlawed for many years, continues to be heard in South Africa. On May 19, the government launched raids against the ANC. Botha once more issued a nationwide state of emergency on June 12, the same day that a huge Anti-Apartheid march occurred in NYC. Unrest continued to mount and the South African government then imposed a total embargo on reporting events in the country. In July of 1986, the South African government lifted all restrictions on Winnie Mandela, wife of ANC leader Nelson Mandela who has been jailed for over twenty years. Later, on July 29, Pres. Botha stated that he would never "commit suicide by accepting threats and prescriptions from outside forces." (Keesings Contempory Archives, 1986)

More recently, the United States, despite Pres. Reagan's veto, passed a sanctions bill on South Africa. The U.S. Senate adopted a bill that bans imports on South African textiles, steel, uranium, coal and agricultural products. One of the most controversial parts of the bill is that it bans new US investments, new bank loans and bans South African Airways from landing in the US. (The House bill had called for total disinvestment and a comprehensive trade embargo on South Africa.) The latest information on the number of people detained under the latest state of emergency is 12,000. Pres. P.W. Botha has suggested that a National Council be created, which would include black representatives, to propose constitutional reforms. However, most feel that this idea is "farfetched." (Time, August 25, 1986)

But, day by day, the tensions continue to grow inside and outside of South Africa. US firms are continuing to disinvest under pressure from the media and various groups.

Letters to the Editor

Thank You

Dear Editor,

Now that Homecoming 1986 is a memory, I would like to thank everyone that helped make it happen.

— The faculty and administration, especially Physical Plant, the Athletic Department, the Alumni Office and Dottie Hershberger and the Public Relations Department.

— All of the fire companys that helped at the last minute to transport our Homecoming Court.

— The down-town Huntingdon merchants who allowed us to carry out our Town Run.

— The students who pulled through when we needed it the most, Jayne Ayers, Pam Greenauer, Diane Matlesky, Chris Querry, all the cafeteria decorators, and especially John Valori for his bravery and stamina when things got really tight.

— And finally I would like to thank Bill Huston and Linda Price for all of their help which I can't begin to list. And a special thanks to my co-chairperson Yvonne Maldonado, thanks Gooch!!

— My apologies to all of you I may have overlooked. Thankyou to everyone who participated, you really made it worth it.

To the Editor:

The September 26th issue described the Field Conference of Pennsylvania Geologists which met in Huntingdon to celebrate the 150th anniversary of the beginning of the Pennsylvania Geological Survey. Juniata College was co-host of this conference, along with the State Survey.

We particularly want to acknowledge the major contribution of five students who served as road guards for the conference, competently directing traffic and rounding up straying geologists as the two hundred conferees examined a number of road cuts along busy highways. These students, worthy of our special thanks for their role in the success of the conference, are: Chris Brown, Scott Cox, Andy Hiscock, Brian Shaffer, and Paul Young.

Sincerely,

Peter Trexler, Robert Washburn, and Laurence Mutti

NOW!

Editor's note: The following article is a first-hand account of bulimia, written by a recovering bulimic on Juniata's campus.

I feel really horrible. I have a sore throat, swollen glands, blurry vision, a red, blotchy face and bad breath. The worst part of it is, I could have avoided all of this unpleasantness— I knowingly did this to myself.

Fifteen minutes ago, I was standing in a public restroom with my fingers down my throat in an attempt to vomit up two hot dogs, half a pizza, and a dozen or so cookies that I had just swollowed. All I kept thinking the whole time I was heaving was, 'This is the LAST time. The LAST. I promise.' Maybe that's true, but I really doubt it. I've told myself that a million times, sometimes meaning it, sometimes not, but never quite believeing it. Sometimes I wonder if it'll ever be true.

I started vomiting after eating about 5 years ago— I read about how to do it in a magazine and thought I'd found a good thing, that maybe now I could eat all I wanted and still not gain weight. Well, I was wrong, very wrong. Twenty-eight fillings and twenty pounds later, I think I'm beginning to realize just how bad the whole thing can be. I have virtually destroyed my teeth, I live with a constant sore throat and aching stomach and I have managed to gain weight, not lose it. Add to this the fact that I have formed a psychological addiction to a habit that I have been unable to break and you've got yourself one dandy picture— a portrait of a mess. What you are looking at is a bulimic.

Bulimia. Not a nice word. It wasn't a term I connected with my behavior until nearly a year ago. Up to that point, I would read articles on the disorder and think that it sounded familiar, but that it couldn't possibly apply to me — my case was no where near so extreme. This from someone who had been vomiting 3 times a day, 7 days a week for close to 4 years!

Then, one afternoon, something happened that made me realize just how weird my behavior had gotten. I was in a restaurant with my family and had just eaten a very large dinner. I almost ran to the bathroom afterwards—any amount of food made me feel uncomfortably full, and I just couldn't stand the feeling. When I got there I had to wait in line for close to forty minutes. I bawled out loud, I was so frustrated. People were looking at me, but I didn't care. When I finally got into the stall, I just sat down and cried because I knew that there was something definitely very wrong with me. I thought about how much I had changed, both physically and emotionally, over the last few years, and something clicked. I knew what was wrong with me. I knew that I was bulimic.

Since that day, many positive things have happened. First of all, I have learned to discuss my problems, bulimia among them, with more and more people. There are those who can't or won't understand, and that can be painful, but then there are those who are willing to listen without passing judgement or offering unnecessary advice. It's times like these when you kind the people on whom you can depend; I really know now who my friends are. This has taught me to trust, which in turn has given me better feelings about myself and the world around me. As a result, I have become less dependent on bulimic behavior for comfort. Still, I have not yet been able to completely free myself from the disease. I am now vomiting 2 or 3 times/week, and although this is a very sharp decrease, the physical damage I am doing to myself is increasing. My vision is becoming blurry after each purge session, and is staying blurry for up to an hour afterwards. I have to spend a few extra minutes every morning covering up the mass of bright red spots around my eyes and on my temples and forehead— violent heaving has broken blood vessels in those areas. I am always getting colds and flues, a result of my weakened immune system. Emotionally, too, I am suffering. I can't enjoy situations where food is served because I am afraid that once I start eating, I won't be able to stop. Even sleeping offers no escape— I either have insomnia or nightmares. In other words, I am falling apart. Friends have been urging me to see a doctor, and a therapist. I think that I will. It's time to get my life in order.

Students Speak

By David Kantner

When do you think Mountain Day will be and why? Who, if anyone will be (was) correct?

Greg Pike (junior): "It has to be Monday or Wednesday of next week because the following week is full of mid-terms. I hope that it's Wednesday, October 8th."

Jim Berardinelli (freshman): "This Tuesday (Oct. 7th). Just a hunch."

Laura Dickinson (junior): "I think it will be Thursday (Oct. 9th) because there aren't any events scheduled that day and I don't have any assignments due."

Charlene Porta and Amy Marnecheck (senior, junior): "Monday because there are no athletic events on that day and Tuesday and Thursday classes only meet twice a week."

Andrea Gillan (junior): "I think it will be on Thursday (Oct. 9th) because the weather won't be right for Monday, too rainy." (Andrea was interviewed during the weekend rain storm)

Phil Schlegal (junior): "Thursday viewed during the it's near the end of the week and it's the last chance before mid-terms."

Janice DellaGuardia (freshman): "From listening to what upperclassmen have ben saying, I'll guess that it's this Thursday (Oct. 9th)."

JC Welcomes A New Residence Director

by Andrea Zavod

Go ahead, pat yourself on the back, you deserve it. In just one month's time, Juniata college has won the heart of yet another newcomer to our campus.

To Lynne Schade, Residence Director in Lesher Hall, coming to Juniata was ". . .eye opening and a culture shock." A 1985 graduate of Penn State, Schade adds, however, "Juniata is full of nice people. . .with endless enthusiasm towards activities and each other."

Schade has nothing but praise for the college community. "It's a great experience. . .I'm more aware of the people and community and what they have to offer. Being here has changed me."

Being here in Huntingdon isn't much of a change for Schade. A native of St. Mary's PA, Schade says "it's a little bigger than Huntingdon." Located about 2 hours north west of Huntingdon, Schade says it's a close knit community with, ". . .mostly bars and churches."

For those interested in alcohol trivia, St. Mary's is home of the 2nd smallest brewery. The beer, Straub beer, and the 12 oz. bottles called "Greenies" is what makes the beer and brewery famous. Says Schade, "I was weened on them!"

Having been raised in a community oriented area, Schade feels right at home with her position at the Huntingdon County Child and Adult Development Center—with a BS in Individual and Family Studies, Schade is employed at the center as Program Director of Day Care and Early Intervention.

As Program Director, Schade is responsible for various supervisional duties such as supervision of four center directors (Petersburg, Mt. Union, Orbisonia and Huntingdon), classroom activities for day care and as a liason between all Center activities and the administration.

Also as program director, Schade attends local organization meetings and acts as a liason between companies and other human service organizations within the state.

Her main responsibility is to know what's going on with programs within the state and nationally so as to get ideas for what's best for children in day care facilities.

The more Schade works at the Center, the more she loves it, but then again working at the Huntingdon Center isn't new to her. Schade received valuable experience as an undergraduate intern at the center. She contends that an internship is ". . .the best experience in college," and encourages students to "put 100% effort into an internship and you'll get 100%+ back from it." The Center welcomes and encourages students to inquire about their internship program.

Not only is Schade working to benefit the community, but could also help any I.M. team in need of players. An avid sports buff, Schade plays: softball, racquetball, volleyball, flag football etc, etc. . . Lynne Schade just might be who you're looking for!

Lynne Schade, the new RD in Lesher is here to stay. Be proud J.C. we've convinced somebody that Huntingdon isn't so bad after all!

A Genuine Fake Diploma Mill Opens In Cincinnati

Last year, it cost nearly $1800 for U.S. Congressman Claude Pepper, D-Fl., to get a mail-order doctorate.

If he'd only waited a few months, Pepper— who was trying to dramatize the prevalence of "diploma mills" for a fee— could have become a doctor of Aztec Cuisine or Yodeling for just $13, says Christopher Wigert, the "Dean of Deans" at Fergle University in Cincinnati.

"I got up early one morning and started thinking of strange universities and the catalogue business," Wigert explains. "There's a gap in between the Harvard University catalogue and Spiegel's."

One need only send Wigert $13 for an official Fergle U. t-shirt and a diploma— thus saving thousands of dollars in tuition and hundreds of hours of study time at a regular college.

"We're talking about $100,000— just for a B.A.— at some of the finer institutions," he says. "Here at Fergle, you can skip all that and go right for your Ph.D."

As for the low, low cost of an education, Wigert says it can't be beat.

"We're definitely in a class by ourselves. Even Harvard can't compete," he notes. "Take Bennington(College), which costs about $15,000 an hour. For what students spend for a few days there (for a bachelor's degree), they can come here and get their Ph.D."

By sending their kids to Fergle, he adds, parents "can save enough money to buy that new house or that new car."

However, the campus is small, Wigert says— about the size of a five by seven inch post office box— so don't expect a huge dorm room.

In the month or so that the "school" has existed, Wigert reports nearly 25 alumni association members, but says he hopes to increase the number.

"By 1990, we hope the association will get as big as the combined populations of North Dakota, Wyoming and Alabama," Wigert continues.

Fergle's motto— Disce Aut Morere (Learn or Die)— makes Wigert cringe a little, but "where else can you get a great education and a shirt besides," he asks.

Although the idea behind Fergle U. is strictly for laughs, consumers have in the past been taken in by mail-order diploma mills, says David Smith, director of the Society for Values in Higher Education.

"It's hard to believe someone offering a Ph.D in Aztec Cuisine could be taken seriously, but it has happened," he says. "Consumers can be misled by what fake credentials are going to do for them."

"The word 'doctor' gets translated into a resume or on a business card and that person is known as 'Dr. So-and So'. Then doors are opened," he warns.

Earlier this year, the "open doors" included those at the White House and other levels of govenment. FBI figures show about 200 federal employees hold phony academic or medical degrees.

Despite a maximum penalty of $10,000 in fines and a five-year prison sentence for claiming false credentials, the FBI discovered nearly 500,000 Americans— one out of every 200 employees— use them for getting jobs.

To dramatize how easy it is to get such "degrees", Rep. Pepper last year had one of his staff members answer an ad in Popular Mechanics magazine, pay the $1800 fee, and submit four brief book reports.

The congressman is now "Dr. Pepper", holder of a Ph.D in psychology from a Los Angeles "university".

"The danger of misuse outweighs the humor of the situation," Smith asserts. "Even if 99 percent (of the people in the country) consider this sort of thing as just a joke, if only one percent cause some kind of harm through misrepresentation, is it not then unethical?"

"It should show us how thin the line is between the humor (of the situation) and the (serious business) of education," Smith concludes.

Senior Danielle Rupp and escort Jay Moreau didn't allow the rain to dampen their homecoming spirits.

The Sophomore float added to the 50's theme at Homecoming 1986 by slicking back hair, rolling up jeans and wearing shades.

The loyal fans, parents, court and alumni try to keep dry while waiting for the homecoming ceremonies to begin.

Senior Ann Cameron and escort Frank Brineer.

Last year's homecoming queen Nancy Briggs and escort, President Neff start the ceremonies.

Senior Lisa Leininger laughs at escort Dan Sunderland as he tries to make his drenched flower look better.

Could your room win a contest?

Have you put a lot of time and energy into decorating your room, or are you making plans to decorate your room so that it will be a more enjoyable place to be? If so, then why not enter the Annual Room Decoration Contest sponsored by the Residential Life Committee and Student Services.

Applications are being accepted from now until October 10 in the Residential Life/Housing Office for the Annual Room Decoration Contest. Rooms are judged based on originality, execution, and impact on evaluators. There are three categories of prizes associated with the contest. First, there is a $25.00 prize for the best decorated room in each residence hall as selected by the Residence Director and Residence Hall Association. Second, there is a $50.00 prize for the best decorated freshman room on campus as selected by President Neff and a committee appointed by the Residential Life Committee. Third, there is a $75.00 prize for the best decorated room on campus, also selected by President Neff and the Residential Life Committee.

So, take a few minutes to stop in the Residential Life/Housing Office and fill out an application form.

Movie Review

by Norman Miller

If the Russians had a top secret super-sonic aircraft, who would you send to steal it? . . .Reagan? . . .Rambo? . . .Richard Nixon?? . . .of course not. If one of them didn't bungle it up the other most certainly would. To steal the world's most powerful aircraft you would send someone with charisma and the talent to implement it. You would send Clint Eastwood.

Eastwood, in a change of pace, slides out of the saddle and into a cockpit. He plays a retired American officer secluded from the hustle and bustle of the big city. However, the U.S. government soon tracks him down and persuades him to double as a Russian and penetrate the Soviet complex which encases the world's most futuristic fighter—Firefox. Like a cunning fox, Eastwood manages to break into the Soviet complex. However, after he succeeds at this, the movie just begins. From this point on, outstanding special effects take precedence and Firefox makes TopGun looks like a movie about hang-gliding. With non-stop suspense and riveting action, Firefox is a sure-fire hit.

New Faces For J.C. Food Service

by Stacey A. Halderman

While attending meals, the Juniata College community may have noticed some new faces. These new faces are members of the new Juniata Food Service. John Gerrity, the man in charge, is a veteran of food service and is looking forward to a successful year serving the Juniata community.

Mr. Gerrity is originally from Dushore, Pennsylvania, and graduated from the State University of New York in Carrton, New York, in hotel and restaurant management. Before serving Juniata, Mr. Gerrity was employed at the University of Notre Dame for over five years. His experience at Notre Dame was progressive, and he hopes to incorporate that same progressiveness here at Juniata.

Basically, Mr. Gerrity's philosophy is to establish a standard and repeat that every day in the consistent quality of food service. There have been no drastic changes, but only a few subtle menu changes. One important factor for Mr. Gerrity is to break the bordom. For example, he would like to establish every Wednesday night as Italian cuisine night. Not only will spaghetti be served, but another type of pasta. Decorations will help add a special flavor and create a different atmosphere for the students. He would also like to introduce a special dinner in the spring called "April in Paris." The students will be served French cuisine in a French atmosphere of music and decorations. Right now he is in the process of learning what the community would and would not like.

It is important that the student body give their input so the food service can serve them better.

Indians Handle Albright 21-3 Western Maryland's Turn Next

By Mike Antenucci

What better way to cap off a Homecoming weekend than with a victory on the gridiron. Well if that's the way you look at Homecoming-than it was very successful; for the Juniata football team continued their winning ways and stayed undefeated as they beat Albright 21-3.

The first score of the game came early in the second quarter. The scoring drive carried over from the first quarter, as Albright took a 3-0 lead when defensive end/feild goal kicker Chris Kenworthy split the uprights from 20 yards out. The 14 play drive included four first downs for the Lions, one coming on a fouth and two situation deep in Indian territory.

The next two Indian drives were stalled, one by punt, the other by an Albright interception. The lions had a chance to put points on the board, starting on the JC 32 after the turnover with fourth and nine from the JC 13, the Lions sent in Kenworthy to attempt a 30 yard feild goal, but the ball sailed wide to the left and the JC defense held.

With just 1:30 remaining in the first half, Juniata had possesion of the ball on their own 30 yard line, first and ten. JC had broken into Albright territory but had only 11 seconds showing on the clock. So on second and three from Albrights 44, Mike Culver went deep across the middle to wide receiver Frankie Phelps for the Indians first touchdown of the game. Keith Watson added the PAT and JC led 7-3 with 7 seconds remaining. The half ended on the ensuing kickoff.

The Indians came out storming in the second half, but their first drive was stalled just shy of midfeild. However, the lions were penalized for having to many men on the feild and the JC drive continued. Three plays later Culver hit Mike Cottle in the endzone on a timing pattern, giving the Indians a 13-3 lead. Watson added the extra point and JC, with 11:29 remaining in the 3rd quarter, led 14-0.

On Juniata's next sereis the Indians marched into Albright territory. Keith Watson, on 4th and 4, placed his tee on the 38 yard line to attempt a 48 yard feild goal. Last week Watson kicked a 49 yarder (school record) however, this week his long attempt fell short.

Albrights next drive was ended when JC's Tom Yeager recovered a fumble. Than Juniata was forced to punt on 4th and 9, this the last play of the third period.

After an exchange of punts Albright managed to put together a drive. After 3 first downs Albright QB Mike Corvetti rolled right a threw into a crowd of Indians. Mark Dorner intercepted the ball and returned it to the Lion 24 yard line, setting up JC's final score.

Six plays later QB Mike Culver kept the ball and surged over the goal line. Watson added the PAT and Juniata led 21-3 with 3:19 remaining. Each team had 1 more series, but the game ended with the Indians holding that 21-3 margin. Juniata is now 5-0.

NUCH'S NOTES: Juniata compiled 17 first downs to Albrights 11. JC rushed for 153 yards and threw for 157 more (total of 310 for the game, 1581 for the season). QB Mike Culver was 14 for 29 with 1 interception and 2 TD's. On the season Culver is 67 for 119, with 3 interceptions and 9 TD's.

Albright was held to 180 yards of offense, on the season the JC defense has only giving up 901 yards (for an average of 180.2 yards pre game). Bob Crossey led the "D" with 13 tackles, giving him 59 for the year. The Indians defense has allowed only 7.2 points per game in 5 games.

This week the Indians host Western Maryland. Game time is 1:30 and will be broadcast on V103. The following week the Indians travel to Wilkes.

Once again, as they were all day, the JC defense is in the Albright backfield. The Indians held Albright to a total of 180 offensive yards. In five games JC hasn't given up more than 1000 yards.

Tom Yeager, Tom Kalinyak, and another (unidentified) JC defender converge on Albright QB Mike Crovetti. The JC "D" has only given up an average of 7.2 points per game this year.

Freshman running back Dan Crossey is stopped after a short carry for the Indians. Crossey was the leading rusher for JC, carrying the ball 14 times, gaining 49 yards. Dan also continues to be Juniata's leading rusher for the season with 313 yards on 76 attempts.

MAC POW: Mike Culver

Juniata quarterback Mike Culver was named Middle Atlantic Conference "Player of the Week" for his outstanding performance in the Indian's 24-9 victory over Widener University.

The senior signal caller completed 17 of 25 passes for 149 yards and two touchdowns in the pouring rain to improve Juniata's mark to 4-0.

Culver holds virtually every passing record at Juniata including the career passing yardage record and the total offense record.

"I think the Widener game was Mike Culver's best game ever. He has had a lot of yards in a lot of games but what he did in this game was not only put the ball in the end zone, but he did the little things great too!

He ran the ball club very well, he audibled well and kept the ball in bounds in the second half to use the clock.

Business Frat Phi Chi Theta Hosts Lecture

by Lynn Merritt

On Thursday, October 9, the Epsilon Lambda-Phi Chi Theta fraternity brought Mr. Santa Croce to the college to lecture on "Motivational Management." He is the Vice President and General Manager in the Health Care Department of the SAGA Corporation, which was recently taken over by the Marriott Corporation.

It seems that more and more people want to become managers in the business sector. Out of a hundred percent, only five percent of that group will be leaders, and the other ninety-five percent will be followers. Thus, it is the job of the manager to motivate his workers and make them feel like winners. A successful manager has a successful group of workers if he conveys to them that they are an important part of the company. The main component or tool in being a good manager is to have the ability to motivate people—including the workers, the boss, the supplies and the family. All aspects of a person's life must be equally managed to be successful.

Mr. Santa Croce said, "You lead, I will follow." Many people believe money is the motivating factor in obtaining an occupation or profession, but he believes that good, stable leadership gives people the incentive to work hard and excel. He gave several other methods to be a successful manager.

Management is getting the job done through others, and in order to do this a manager must know what wins on a job. The manager should know what his boss expects of him before he can place demands on others. A good manager, one of the elite five percent, can draw the best effort from others. The company should always be the main priority, and the workers make up the company; thus, the manager should constantly show care and concern for all his or her employees. Strict guidelines should also be set; and when an employee breaks a rule, the manager should immediately confer with the employee. All of the above is done to make the worker feel important and eventually be a more productive employee. One of the most important things a manager can do is to get involved with his workers. They should always be open, honest and willing to answer any questions or solve any problems. More than anything else a manager must be a hard worker. If he or she is a hard worker, they can make any staff productive. In essence the entire staff will be winners. These are the main components of being a good manager and having a productive staff. Managers are the elite five percent in society who must be diligent workers who want to make winners of their staffs. There are many motivating factors for success, but having a good leader is the most important. Mr. Santa Croce's philosophy is if you have a good leader, a good is certain to follow.

Recess Closes Halls

As is stated on the academic calendar, the residence halls will be officially closed during the fall recess. If, however, for extenuating circumstances students need to remain on-campus, permission must be obtained through the Residential Life/Housing Office, 206 Founders Hall.

Students are reminded that they will remain on-campus at their own risk. Also, students should be aware that Baker Refectory will be closed following breakfast on October 18 through lunch on October 21, 1986.

If you have any questions, please feel free to contact Mr. Deike, 206 Founders Hall.

Juniata Bids Farewell to Julie

by Alayne Unterberger

Yes, it's true. Julie Keehner will be leaving us on the twenty-fourth of this month. Julie will be off to Roanoke, Virginia to serve as Dean of Students at Hollins College, an all women's college of about 1100 students.

Stressing that she is not the least bit unhappy here at Juniata, Julie Keehner stated that her philosophy is that one should leave when he/she is feeling good about his/her accomplishments, and success. Obviously, Julie fits this image and feels that, "I am ready for a top position."

Some of the reasons why Julie is so happy here at Juniata is that the students here are "warm, enthusiastic and have a hunger to learn." She considers herself fortunate in that the students at Hollins share these same characteristics, especially the enthusiasm.

When asked to sum up her feelings, Julie commented, "I am certain that my successor will be blessed with the best students I've been exposed to and I'd like to thank them for making the experience a positive one." Thank You, too, Julie.

When the world is upside-down.

Learning From Each and Every Goodbye

Some people don't believe in saying goodbye. They think it will be forever and that it's bad luck.

Well, sometimes you have to say goodbye. At the time it seems like the end of the world. Nothing seems to make sense. All the things that were said, suddenly seem like lies. Time seems to take forever.

Slowly, though each day passes and you realize that the goodbye wasn't that bad. Everything seems to come into focus. The promises that were made don't seem like lies anymore, but just dreams that faded.

After awhile you realize that life without that someone doesn't have to be that bad. You learn that you really can endure, that you really have worth and the learning goes on, because with every goodbye you learn.

Ronald T. Hersh

To the Editor,

Ronald T. Hersh, II, a sophomore from the East Houses, received Vigil Honor, the highest honor in the Order of the Arrow during the Witauchsoman Lodge 44 Fall weekend held recently at Camp Minsi, Mount Pocono, PA.

Ronald was recognized for his outstanding devotion and unselfish effort on behalf of scouting and the order. He was inducted into the Order in 1982 and served on the Executive Board. Most recently, Ronald spent the summer as an archery instructor at Camp Minsi.

Ron is an Eagle Scout from Troop 311 St. Theresa's Church, Hellertown, PA. He has held various troop leadership positions including Jr. Assistant scoutmaster. A highlight of Ronald's years in scouting was attending the National Jamboree of Fort A.P. Hill, Virginia.

Sincerely,
Dorothya Hersh

American Cancer Society

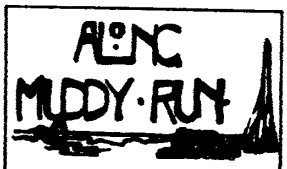
To the Editor:

November 20, 1986 marks the 10th anniversary of the Great American Smokeout, and we'd like you to help us celebrate.

Participation in last year's Smokeout topped all previous records. An estimated 23 million Americans- more than 4 out of 10 cigarette smokers- tried to kick their habit for a day, according to the official survey conducted for the American Cancer Society by the Gallup Organization.

Despite the success of last year's event, 54 million Americans continue to smoke year after year, and 320,000 people will die this year because of it. Please help us reach smokers by running these ads, created for the American Cancer Society as a public service by McCaffrey and McCall, Inc., New York, as frequently as space permits. Help us make this the year more Americans than ever before blow smoking out of their lives.

Sincerely,
American Cancer Society



by Greg Pawlikowski

Oh, Mountain Day, oh Mountain Day, why do you do it,
Like years in the past, it seems like you blew it.
You fool us and trick us and cause us much sorrow,
And soon we don't care if your day is tomorrow.
For those who don't live in a school-owned apartment,
You fill out a form to receive some announcement.

We wait in our beds for a morning phone call,
The phone does not ring so we get on the ball.
We hustle to class, the fall weather so cool,
We try the locked door as we look like a fool.
To add to the mess there's no note on the door.
it has been torn off by a student before.

Deciding to go you arrive on the site where,
You watch some play football, it looks like a fight there.
While hearing bones cracking you think it's a pity
Why couldn't our football team play the committee?
I'm glad that it's the last year
I'll go through it,
Oh Mountain Day, oh Mountain Day, why do you do it?

Vigil Held for Anti-Apartheid

By Alayne Unterberger

In commemoration of National Student Anti-Apartheid Protest Day, a group of concerned students held a candlelight vigil Friday, October 10. The vigil began at 6:45 PM on the lawn in front of Oller Hall.

Despite the chilly weather, about twenty brave souls attended the vigil. A number of readings were selected to illustrate the anti-apartheid movement in South Africa and the United States.

Amy Coursen read an introduction and greeting. Next, quotes from Mohatma Gandhi were read by Lisa Williams and Jude Vachon. John Deppen then presented key statements by Nelsm Mandela and Archbishop Desmond Tutu, leaders of the anti-apartheid struggle in South Africa. Excerpts from Dr. Martin Luther King's "I have a Dream" and "I've Been to the Mountain" speeches were read by Aileen Querry. A short poem by Albert Dempster, a Nigerian, was read by Alayne Unterberger.

The vigil concluded as Amanda Efon read a few words by Robert Kennedy from a speech that he gave to a group of South African students more than twenty years ago; encouraging them to stand up for their ideals. People were then given an opportunity to discuss the issue as music dealing with the apartheid movement played in the background.

"Yank" Moves into Cloister

by Andrea Zavod

They tried. J.C. really gave it their best effort. They gave him his walking papers less than six months ago, congratulated him, gave him the initial push into the real world and what did he do? Made an about-face and headed right back to Juniata College. It really doesn't matter why, but for whatever reason, 1986 JC graduate Bob "Yank" Yanckello is back at good 'ol JC and he's making the best of it.

Former off-campus resident, student, football player, now Residence Director in Cloister, Student Services Assistant, and assistant football coach, "Yank", as we all know him, has had to make quite an adjustment to his new role on campus.

As a student, Yank studied management, was an off-campus Student Government Senator for two years, participated as a student representative for the Retention Committee and was a four year letter winner on Juniata's football team.

Yank's athletic talents don't stop on the grid-iron. As a member of Varsity track, Yank threw shot put and discus and was a member of the weight lifting club. For those looking forward to Men's 'A' League Intramural Basketball, be warned—Captain Yank's Hustler's will be back. This winter, with eight returning championship team players, Yank and his Hustler's are looking to make it three in a row.

No longer a student, now Yank sits on the other side of the desk as Student Services assistant. Working under Arnie Tilden, Julie Keehner, Randy Deike and Bill Huston, Yank has various responsibilities including working on a fitness trail project, attending and taking minutes at Student Services staff meetings, sitting in on hearings and attending conferences. His most important responsibility, however, is to Julie Keehner, as the Residence Director of Cloister. Being an RD, Yank's main purpose for returning to JC, is what also brings him back to residing on campus. Long ago, when Yank was a sophomore, he moved himself to 600 Washington Street, a private three bedroom house, where he could enjoy the space, the privacy, home cooked food and the company of endless friends, his best of course being his 4 year old half Lab-half Shepherd, Chaka dog. All this, lost to a small apartment in Cloister.

Sure he might have lost his luxurious living room and the privacy of his own home, but he didn't lose his 'house.' Cloister is Yank's new 'house' and what makes it great according to Yank is the residents of Cloister. They also think of Cloister as being one big house, and their friendliness and closeness has made the adjustment to campus living that much easier for Yank.

Perhaps the most difficult transition was that from football player to football coach. As a player, Yank experienced both the highs and lows of Juniata football. As a sophomore, Yank started on a team that went 2-8 in the MAC's. As a senior co-captain, he led the offensive line and the Indians to an 8-3 record, second in the MAC's. Yank says he could never have enough of football,". . .if you can't play on the team, you become a part of it—you coach." Taking over Al Hartman's defensive line, Coach Yank doesn't find much difference in being on the other side of the ball. "You're still in 'the trenches', down in the dirt, it's just a slightly different look at the ball game. On offense, the longer you're in the field the better job you're doing. On defense, the better you do your job, the quicker you get off the field." Football is still the "greatest" to Yank and always will be as long as he can be involved.

After all this, it's guaranteed that Yank has learned a lot from his newly found roles on Juniata's campus. Says Yank, "being here this year has opened my eyes a lot about school and student service's function. I've found you can't take for granted the things you took for granted as a student. I'm in a job setting, using skills I've developed, but at the same time everything that I'm doing is an excellent learning experience."

Whatever the future holds for Yank, lets be glad he's here. If he can give to Student Services, the residents of Cloister, and the players on the football team just half of the enthusiasm and spirit he has for the campus, we really can't blame the person who didn't try hard enough to get rid of him last year.

Student Government Minutes

by Patricia Schofield

The Student Government meeting began at 9:30 Tuesday, October 7.

President Danielle Rupp opened the meeting and gave the floor to Stephanie Seidle. Stephanie, chairperson of the Residential Life Committee informed us of the new ice machine policy. Each RHA will handle the ice machine hours. The assignments will be done alphabetically by Residence Hall. If the RHA assigned fails to cooperate, they will not receive their vending machine money.

A lip sync contest and powderpuff football game are in the planning stages for the Residential Life Committee.

The floor was then given to Sue Gulla, chairperson for Student Concerns Committee. She expressed a concern for more lights on campus, especially around residence halls. Plans about a sidewalk to line the road to East were discussed.

Jay Moreau, Budget and Management Committee gave the bad news of no inner campus phones.

We received a new club, the Entertainment Club, presented by Mike Morder. It was agreed to be chartered by Student Government. This club will use campus talent for events.

The Student Leadership Development Committee announced there will be a monthly leadership module, Tuesday October 14.

Becky Culler, Joint Lecture Committee, announced plans to acquire comedians for campus entertainment.

Student Government/Center Board liason, Deb Dechert announced the costume dance planned for Nov. 1.

Amy Coursen announced the Candlelight vigil planned for Friday night in front of Oller Hall.

The meeting adjourned at 10:30, the next meeting was decided upon to meet on October 28.

RHA Elections Held

Residence Hall Associations elections were recently held campus-wide.

The purpose of the Residence Hall Association includes organizing and promoting activities within the residence hall, maintaining a certain standard of living with the residence hall, and raising and keeping an accurate account of funds for the residence hall.

Each RHA elects officers and two representatives from each floor, tower, building, etc.

Congratulations to the 1986-87 Residence Hall Association members!

Indians Crush W & M Green Terrors 30-13 — Share Lead In MAC With 4-0 Record

By Mike Antenucci

After two weeks of playing in hazardous weather, the Juniata football team found themselves playing in ideal football conditions. The Indians took advantage of the nice day and continued their quest for an undefeated season by upending Western Maryland 30-13.

This was a non-MAC contest so the game had no bearing on the Indians record within the conference. Juniata remains, along with Susquehanna (who this past weekend beat Widener), the only unbeaten team in the conference.

Juniata got things going early. After winning the coin toss and kicking off to the Green Terrors the JC "D" stopped WM cold on 3 plays. The Indians started their first drive with great field possesion from their own 41. With Dan Crossey being the work horse the Indians fought into WM territory. Then on a 2 and 1 situation Mike Culver went to the air and found Frankie Phelps 36 yards later for the Indian touchdown. The PAT failed and JC led 6-0 with 10:39 remaining.

After putting a halt to the WM offense in 3 plays again, the Indians were on the move one more time. On four plays JC moved 51 yards for their second score of the game. The drive was capped off when Culver hit Don Betar in the endzone for the 29 yard touchdown. This was Betar's first TD catch since he tied the school record of 3 TD grabs in one game 5 weeks ago. Keith Watson added the extra point and the Indians led 13-0 with 7:12 remaining in the first period.

The rest of the first period was scoreless and the next points put on the board would be by Western Maryland. To say that the Indians practically guided the Green Terrors in the endzone would be an understatement. The JC "D" showed some uncharacteristic play and were hit hard by two penalities which allowed the Terrors to put 6 points on the board. The 14 play 72 yard drive was capped off by WM's Matt Donner who kept the ball from the QB position and ran it in from 3 yards out. The PAT was good and JC led 13-7 with 12:08 to play in the first half.

The Indians bounced right back and marched down into WM territory. After compiling a couple of first downs the Indians were faced with a fourth and goal from the nine. Keith Watson came in and booted a 27 yard field goal and the Indians led 16-7 with 7:56 to play in the first half.

The Juniata defense showed that they were not to be taken lightly after giving up the TD as they came out and stopped WM cold, and forced the Terrors to punt in 3 plays. Two plays later Mike Culver hit Frankie Phelps on the flanker screen, Phelps used his great speed and out ran the defense for the 54 yard TD score. After Watson added the PAT the Indians led 23-7 and took that lead into the the half.

Juniata recorded the only points of the third quarter, scoring right off the bat. On 9 plays the Indians went 64 yards. The drive was capped off when Culver hit Don Betar from 8 yards out. Watson added the extra point and the Indians were in front 30-7. This would be all the points the Indians put on the board for the rest of the game. However, the JC coaching staff got many of the backups in the game, giving experience to those who will be the future of Indian football.

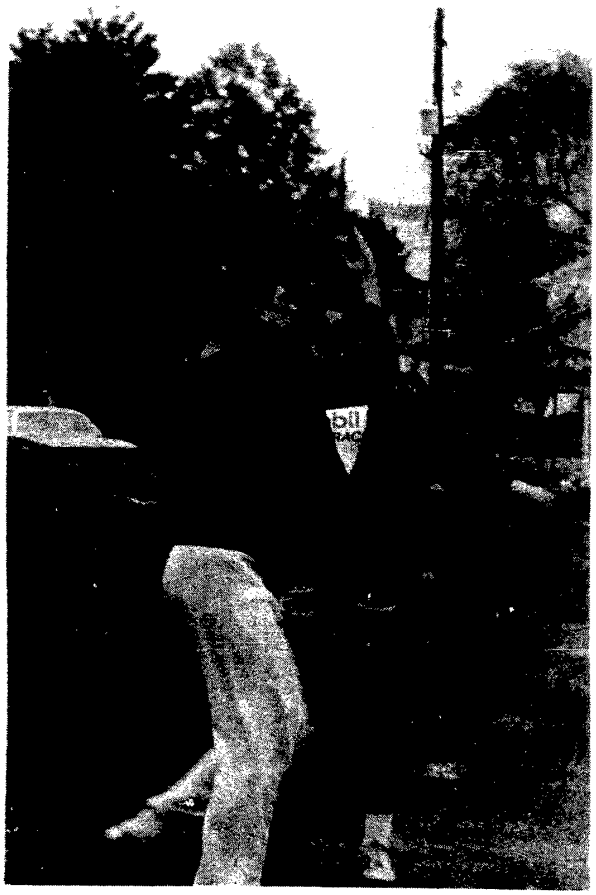
The only other score of the game came late in the fourth quarter when Matt Donner hit wide receiver John Stonebraker in the enzone from nine yards out. The drive took 7 plays and was good for 39 yards. The score came with only 4:10 remaining in the game. The extra point was no good and JC led 30-13.

WM showed their non-quit attitude on the ensuing kickoff when they recovered an onsides kick. The Terrors dove into Indian territory to the JC 4 yard line. On the last play of the game Donner looked to put some more points on the board for the Terrors, but his pass was incomplete and Juniata walked away with the victory.

NUCH'S NOTES: Juniata compiled 16 first downs in the game, 9 on the ground, 7 in the air. JC gained 208 yards rushing on 35 attempts. Dan Crossey was the leading rusher carring the ball 9 times for 62 yards. Eight different Indians rushed the ball during the game. Mike Culver was 11 for 17 for 231 yards. Culver also threw 4 touchdown passes, giveng him 13 for the season. The Indians also played 3 different QB's during the game.

On 63 offensive plays Juniata managed to gain 446 yards (an average of 7.1 yards a play). Don Betar made 5 grabs for 103 yards and scored 2 touchdowns. Frankie Phelps had 3 catches also for 103 yards and also scored 2 touchdowns. JC cotrolled the clock, having possesion of the ball for 26:58 to WM 18:02.

Defensively for the Indians Bob Crossey and Bryan Warren from the linebacker positions had 10 tackles each. Tom Yeager had 9 tackles and Tom Kalinyak had 7, including 2 sacks. Mark Dorner recorded the other JC sack and also had an interception, Tim Kirsh also picked off a Matt Donner pass.



Senior Tom Reese shows some uncharacteristis hustle in this past weekends IM softball action. A teammate looks on in awe, and can't beleive Tom caught the ball.

V-Ball Honors

Three Juniata volleyball players were recently named to the Juniata/Coca-Cola Classic All-Tournament team.

Beth Hoppel, a junior on Juniataa'a tenth ranked volleyball team, along with teammates Cathy Miller and Jackie Rebert earned all-tournament honors for their outstanding performances in the prestigious 17-team tournament.

Hoppel is a 1984 graduate of Bishop McCort High School. The 5'7 setter earned All-Conference and All-American honors last year and District Academic honors. The team leader, Hoppel led the Indians to a third place finish in the NCAA Final Four Tournament in 1985. Earlier this year, she earned all-tournamentt honors at the Penn State Invitational. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hoppel of Johnstown.

Cathy Miller, a junior middle blocker, is a 1984 graduate of Cambria Heights High School. Miller is the team's leading blocker. In 1985 she earned Academic All-District honors for her outstanding athletic ability and exceptional performance in the classroom. This is her second year on the Classic All-Tournament team. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Miller of St. Benedict.

Jackie Rebert, the team's leading hitter, debuted on the Classic All-Tournament Team this year. An explosive hitter, Rebert, as a sophomore, is regarded as one of the premier players in the nation. A 1985 graduate of Spring Grove High School, she is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. dale Rebert of Spring Grove.

Juniata finished second in the Coca-Cola Classic, dropping a 2-0 decision to Illinois Benedictine in the finals. The Indians are tenth in the NCAA Division III poll with a 12-5 record.

John Cafferty and The Beaver Brown Band play Friday night in Memorial Gym. Tickets on sale in Ellis at College Info. Center.

John Cafferty at J.C.

"John Cafferty and the Beaver Brown Band" will be appearing in concert at Juniata College, Friday Oct. 31 at 8:15 p.m. in the Memorial Gymnasium of the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center. "Used Furniture," a popular local group comprised of Juniata College students, will be the opening act.

"John Cafferty and the Beaver Brown Band" got their start thirteen years ago in Rhode Island and are probably best know for recording the soundtrack to the movie "Eddie and the Cruisers," and the album "Tough All Over." Some of their best known hits include "Wild Summer Nights," "Tender Years," "On the Dark Side," "Small Town Girl," and "C-I-T-Y." Last year the band was named the NACA (National Association of College Activities) Concert Performer of the Year. They earned this title for their many successful college tours.

The public is cordially invited to attend. Tickets are on sale at the Ellis College Center Information Desk at $10 each. If the show is not sold out tickets will be available at the main entrance to the gymnasium in Gibbel Lobby. Doors open at 7 p.m. For more information call (814) 643-4310.

The Pittsburgh Dance Alloy, a professional modern dance repertory company which has delighted audiences throughout the Northeast and Canada with its polished, provocative performances, appeared Wednesday, Oct. 29, at Juniata College. Curtain was at 8:15 p.m. in the Oller Auditorium. Their presentation was the second performance of the college's 1986-87 Artist Series.

Founded ten years ago by several visionary members of the Pittsburgh dance community, the company was developed to meet the need for a professional, continuously operating modern dance company in Pittsburgh. The Alloy is actively committed to the development and presentation of today's dance expression. By creating a fertile climate for the emergence of new dance, the company works at the forefront of the contemporary scene, regularly producing and performing the works of important and emerging choreographers within a national network of dance activity.

The Oct. 29 presentation featured such diverse works as "How Can I Hold You With These Long Arms?," "Working," "What Can I Do For You?," "In Our Own Image," and "House of Drawn Shades." Music for the dancers ranged from jazz, great Thelonius Monk to "The Boss," Bruce Springsteen, to the Penguin Cafe orchestra.

The company's eight members are polished dance professionals of major academic and technical achievement, and have been recruited from various parts of the United States with dance degrees from major university dance departments.

Moscow—The Soviet Union accepted the U.S. offer of a truce in the diplomatic expulsions war that has strained relations between the superpowers on Saturday.

Eighty Soviet diplomats have been expelled from the U.S. and 10 U.S. diplomats from the Soviet Union, but the Kremlin also ordered 260 Soviet employees at the embassy in Moscow and the consulate in Leningrad to give up their jobs.

Calcutta, India—When a strong minority of Bangladesh's Oct. 15 presidential vote tilted toward a murderer of a sheikh, many discerned a signal that the beleaguered country was shifting toward Islamic fundamentalism.

One official, Lt. Col. Syed Farook Rahman, does not deny that he and four other army officials gunned down the charismatic sheikh Mujibur Rahman, revered by millions of Bangladeshis as father of the nation, with most of his family in a midnight massacre August 15, 1975.

Inner Circle Back Again!

by Linda Lloyd

Are you looking for a change in Saturday night dining? Are you tired of Baker Refectory seven days a week? Then Inner Circle can provide just what you're looking for!

Inner Circle is Juniata's finest in restaurant style dining serving a variety of delicious entrees such as shrimp scampi, prime rib of beef, chicken cordon blu and many more! A complimentary non-alcoholic cocktail bar begins the evening and while waiting to dine you will be entertained by quality, live entertainment from college students and outside entertainers.

The first dinner will be Saturday, November 15 with seatings at 6:00, 6:15, and 6:30 in the Faculty Lounge. Take your meal sticker number and approximately $3.50 to the information desk for reservations. Students and faculty alike are invited to enjoy this evening of fine dining, relaxing atmosphere, and enjoyable entertainment.

Inner Circle is always looking for entertainers and people with creative ideas and time to contribute to the organization. If you are interested in helping, contact Elizabeth Radcliffe at 643-3368 and look for informational posters about future meetings.

So take advantage of the opportunity to get away from the hustle and bustle of Baker and dine with friends in a relaxing atmosphere with excellent food and entertainment. This could be the beginning of a terrific Saturday night!

C.A.S.E. Organizes Alcohol Awareness Week

Juniata College's Drug and Alcohol Awareness Week will be Nov. 5 thru Nov. 7. The week has been organized by C.A.S.E., the Committee on Alcohol Study and Education.

The week's events include lecures by John O'Neill. O'Neill, a former abuser himself, is a dynamic expert on the topics of drugs and alcohol. His expertise covers what is current on the streets (including crack) to pharmacological and sociological understandings. A frequent lecturer on college campuses, O'Neill is currently associated with TASC (Treatment Alternatives to Street Crime) where he helps youthful offenders and abusers.

In addition to the lectures, CASE, led by Mara Blake-Ward, has also planned Residence Hall programs and a non-alcoholic Happy Hour in Tote.

For a full Drug and Alcohol Awareness Week schedule, see page 3.

Halloween Weekend Promises Excitement

It is not unusal for a small college community to need an occasional "jolt" of excitement. At Juniata, traditionally "great" weekends (i.e. Madrigal Weekend, All Class Night Weekend, etc. . .) provide that "jolt" like clockwork.

However, that does not mean there is no room for more, new excitement. It is very easy to fall into a rut and let our present traditions provide the "jolts" we need. It is, on the other hand, highly commendable for organizations to dare to put the time and effort into providing the college community with a new type of excitement, a new tradition.

We, the Juniatian staff, have been hearing many students say, "This weekend is going to be a great weekend." We'd just like to say thanks to Bill Huston and Centerboard for bringing us John Cafferty and the Beaver Brown Band in concert. Through their time and effort, there's some new excitement around here. Thank You, cause it's just what we need.

Counselor's Corner

Dr. Jay Buchanan

In one of our recent articles on relationship enhancement we suggested that relationships work best when characterized by interdependency, rather than by dependency or independence. Let's examine some possible ways of achieving just that, interdependence in our relationships.

Many of us are familiar with the writings of Leo Buscaglia, professor of education at the University of Southern California and popular author and lecturer. He has written a number of books including Loving Each Other: The Challenge of Human Relationships. He appears regularly on public television and has made several video tapes including, Loving Relationships.

His research indicates that the number one ingredient in lasting, meaningful (interdependent) relationships is communication. Big deal, you say, we already know that!! The trouble is that, while we all know the importance of communication, far too many of us are not very good at putting it into practice.

According to Buscaglia, communication is defined as ". . . the desire to be open, to share, to relate, and to actively speak and listen to one another." Let's focus in on the latter aspect of the definition by asking the question, "How good are we at listening, really listening, to each other?"

Effective listening means not only hearing what is being said verbally, but, more importantly, picking up on what is being communicated non-verbally. It is critical to remember that as much as 65% of a message is conveyed by non-verbal behavior (facial expressions, tone of voice, posture, eye contact).

Tuning in effectively to non-verbals often times reveals that the sender is presenting what is known as a mixed or double message. Very few of us can say that we have never engaged in sending these kind of messages where we say one thing and mean just the opposite.

Finally, Buscaglia suggests that true listening does not necessarily mean advice giving. To be good listeners does not mean we have to solve someone's problems or attempt to fix things. All too often, in our desire to help, we fail to hear what the other person is really saying.

From the Pen of . . .

by Amy Coursen

Understanding the actions of nations is always difficult. Situations are always complex, there are many players involved. To discern the causes of the Republic of South Africa's actions in the international arena takes not only knowledge of the facts but also the ability to interpret what its actions mean.

South Africa's primary foreign policy goal throughout the 1970s was to reinforce its common political, economic and strategic interests with the western industrialized world in order to safe-guard itself from the perceived encroachments of international communism in Africa. (2, p. 280) Now, as a result of tremendous public pressure from within Western nations, governments are calling for political and social change in South Africa, making the South African government feel even more isolated than it has in the past. Today, the government feels it must protect itself from all sides.

In southern Africa, South Africa protects itself with the South African Defense Forces (SADF). SADF occupies Namibia which the United Nations has proclaimed independent for the past 20 years. Although a trust mandate was granted to South Africa giving them the right to control Namibia, this mandate was revoked by the U.N. in 1966. The mandate revocation was upheld by the International Court of Justice in 1971. There is no serious dispute over the standing of Namibia in international law. South Africa is illegally occupying the territory of Namibia. (1, p.63). The SADF, since 1975, has also maintained troops in southern Angola. Futhermore, South Africa has attempted to enforce control over Zimbabwe and Mozambique (2, p. 271). South Africa is a military threat to its neighbors and is seen as aggressive in this respect.

For South Africa to continue its military aggressiveness seems self-destructive because they are fighting on so many fronts. It seems the most productive actions the government could take would be to concentrate on domestic reform. South Africa's international conflict would deminish if internal change could come quickly. Still, the government seems to feel that their international aggressive actions are in their best interests. But the route the South African government is taking to ensure its survival, looks as if it could be the one that could destroy them. Unless. . . .

Alumni Profile— Robert S. McMinn

by Buffy Heisey

Huntingdon is the home for many Juniata alumnus, among them is Robert S. McMinn. Robert McMinn is a '79 JC graduate. He resides with his wife, an '80 JC grad and his two small children.

While attending Juniata, Robert McMinn was involved in various intramurals, ski club, and concert band. He graduated with his major interest in Economics and a minor interest in Political Science. He futhered his education by attending a management intern program from the University of Nebraska.

Presently McMinn is the manager of office services at Valley Rural Electric Cooperation in Huntingdon. Valley Rural is a member owned electric distribution system. It serves 15,500 accounts in a seven county area surrounding Huntingdon. McMinn says, "Juniata's atmosphere with small classes prepared me for work in a small organization where you get to know everyone." Writing skills have become increasingly more important in all occupations. "In terms of the kinds of courses I took, the ones that were analytical helped me. Writing skills were what really helped. Being able to communicate effectively is a very important part of my work," said McMinn when asked what gave him an advantage in the job market. McMinn commented, "Coming from a small high school, I hesitated to get involved. I would have been better prepared if I would have been very active in college. It is an enormous opportunity to train yourself for things you are going to do later on. It is a real competitive advantage."

McMinn is a member of the Alumni Council. The Alumni Council is a support group to provide communication between alumni and the college. He has been involved in fund raising for the annual support fund. Valley Rural keeps up with the college by providing internships for students.

When asked about future plans, McMinn added, "I'm going to stay in Huntindon. I still have growing to do in my position and it still interests me." McMinn commented on Huntingdon, "It is easy for students to have a negative view of Huntingdon. But, it is not a fair assessment. The community is a little more alive than it seems to be from the students point of view. It is an advantage to live here for local people who have attended the college. It gives them a special chance to keep up with the college." "At Homecoming and Reunion Weekend a lot of our friends come to our home. We have twenty or twenty-five people every Homecoming," said McMinn. Huntingdon is a haven for JC graduates. McMinn comments, "There are so many JC graduates in Huntingdon. I still meet new graduates—they're everywhere. It's a very nice thing."

Band Concert in Oller

by Russ Miller

From marches to folk songs to show tunes, this year's Juniata Band concert on November 1st promises to be exciting and well worth going to see. The concert opens with one of John Phillip Sousa's stirring marches, The Free Lance March, which is also known as On To Victory. The band, under the direction of Ibrook Tower, will then play various songs including American Overture for Band, Folk Song Suite, and many others. The band will close the concert with a medley of Broadway show tunes entitled Star Spangled Spectacular which includes such favorites as Give My Regards to Broadway and Yankee Doodle Dandy. When asked about the upcoming performance Mr. Tower said that he has enjoyed working with ". . .such talented and cooperative musicians" and has high hopes for the concert's success. So come out to Oller Auditorium on Saturday, November 1st at 8:15 PM for an enjoyable evening of music!

Burn Baby Burn

by Crickett J. Julius

So how do you stay fit and look great? Well, if you want to look good and be completely healthy; you should exercise and follow a nutritious, balanced diet at the same time. Everyone seems to be interested in the health craze these days and they've got good reason. Researchers have claimed healthy, physically fit people live longer than those who aren't engaged in some form of exercise. Also, exercise is good for you-Did you know that it puts you in a good mood? That's due to the fact that strenuous exercise causes the brain to release natural haarmones that lift your spirits.

Motivation as well as dedication are key factors in any activity. All types of exercise boost energy by strengthening muscles and burn those dreaded calories we all hate. Then ask yourself, what routine is right for you? For some, isometric exercise routines are popular, but these won't usually reduce weight. You lose fat while firming up. One of the best calorie-burning methods today is aerobics. Studies indicate that aerobic fitness helps alleviate everyday stress. It also helps you look good and feel good. A person with an average percentage of body fat will burn between 275 and 350 calories/hour. Any form of aerobic exercise works the cardiovascular system as well as many of the other muscles. Bicycling burns 178 cal/hr, swimming—270 cal/hr, jogging—500 cal/hr, racquetball—510 cal/hr all are aerobic related activities.

Because we aren't all suited for aerobics, what are some other ways to burn those fat cells? Well, the relation between calories and exercise is straightforward. Roughly, you'll burn 100 calories by: playing football for 30 minutes, walking for 19 minutes, jumping rope for 11 minutes, or even chopping wood for 13 minutes.

Acheiving maximum fitness is like climbing a mountain: It takes a long time to get there, but once you've hit that peak, you feel like you're sitting on top of the world. Now that you've got the incentive, set your goal for a healthy, new "you"!

Birth of John Cafferty

"What happened to us," says singer/songwriter/bandleader John Cafferty, "is a real-life Rocky story." It's also a rock & roll story without precedent: A band spends a decade on the road honing its craft and building a reputation for terrific live performances without ever landing a record contract. They record a soundtrack album to finally get on vinyl and then watch as actors 'play' their music in the movie. The film's a dud at the box office, but the album sells anyway—not enough to make the band a name of its own, but enough to win them a record contract. They make an album of their own. Just before it's scheduled for release, the movie goes on cable TV; suddenly, record stores are deluged with requests for the year-old soundtrack album. Before the year is out, the band has a platinum, Top 10 album and two hit singles, and fans finally learn the name of John Cafferty and the Beaver Brown Band.

Old-fashioned virtues like hard work and perseverance have been evident from the time Beaver Brown was formed thirteen years ago in Narragansett, Rhode Island, a beach town across the bay from the ritzier resort of Newport. (Five of the current members were then on hand; an eight-year veteran of the band, Michael "Tunes" Antunes is the "newcomer"). Cafferty and Kenny Jo Silva wanted to perform older rock & roll and blues songs; they got a batch of friends—all bandleaders in their own right—and started Beaver Brown. Their repertoire was long on Wilson Pickett and Fats Domino, Chuck Berry and Elvis Presley and Mitch Ryder—long on fast-paced, high energy rockers and R&B tunes.

An immediate hit with the college kids in Narragansett, the band shared a nine-bedroom house by the beach and slowly widened their territory. "We played every bar you could play in Rhode Island for a long time," says Cafferty. "Then we branched out to Cape Cod and Boston, and basically just stayed around that area for a few years. Finally, we got a job in New Haven, Connecticut, and one things led to another and pretty soon we had a bunch of dates in New Jersey and New York, then Philly, Maryland, Virginia. . .for a long time, we just went up and down the east coast playing night after night.

At the same time, Cafferty began to write songs, many of them inspired by his own days as an east coast surfer. In 1980, the band recorded a single, "Wild Summer Nights," backed with "Tender Years." Expecting some local airplay, they found themselves in heavy rotation across the Northeast; WNEW-FM, the dominant progressive AOR station in New York, even broadcast one of the yet-unsigned band's torrid live sets from New York's Bottom Line, where they regularly drew sold-out houses. Live broadcasts in a few other cities did similarly well, and within a month the single had sold out its pressing of 10,000. Still, no record contract.

Finally, in 1981, veteran producer/musician Kenny Vance brought movie director Martin Davidson to a Beaver Brown show. Knocked out, Davidson offered them a job writing and performing music in Eddie and the Cruisers, the story of a fictional rock legend playing timeless, '50s-influenced east coast rock & roll. Antunes appeared in the movie, while Cafferty wrote new songs, contributed "Wild Summer Nights" and "Tender Years" and scored the film. Eddie and the Cruisers fared poorly at the box office when it was released in late summer, 1983, a fact that made the soundtrack's sales of 175,000 units fairly amazing. The LP's success landed them a record deal with the same CBS-distributed Scotti Brothers label that had released the movie LP, and in early 1984 they went into a New York studio to make their own first album.

But before that album could be released, the Eddie and the Cruisers movie debuted on cable television in July 1984. It played eight times during that month on HBO, twice on The Movie Channel, and also saw a lot of action on local cable systems. Within a month's time, the album had exploded, "On the Dark Side" was racing up the singles charts and MTV and video shows across the country were bringing the face of John Cafferty and the Beaver Brown Band into millions of homes.

"We were on tour at the time," remembers Cafferty, "pretty much playing the same places we'd always played, waiting for the new album to come out. Then, all of a sudden, there were almost as many people outside trying to get in as there were inside dancing."

By September 1, the album was gold; by October 1, the one million platinum mark had been passed. A second hit single, "Tender Years," would follow, as would a sold-out national tour, and the soundtrack LP would sell almost two million copies. And through it all, John Cafferty and the Beaver Brown Band would keep their feet firmly planted on the ground, moving ahead, doing the only thing they ever really wanted to do.

"We're like a lot of bands," says Cafferty, "in that we worked real hard for a real long time. Where we're different, maybe, is that we were lucky enough to get our chance. And when we got it, we were ready."

Elegy written on Applying to Grad Schools:
In Huntingdon did Brethren men
A stately private college decree
Where Juniata, the stately river ran Past mountains measureless to man
Down to a town, good tavern free

To enter studies on the hill
Juniata, where truth sets free
To drink deeply the Pyrian Spring
Of whose drafts the sages sing
She hath quite captured me.

Four years gone by that seem so short
Great opportune flown past
To be a student
Earlier, that would have seemed quite prudent
But, alas, many a night spent trashed

As seniors we can scarse pretend
To be the best examples
But underclassmen please take note
Lest your grades be trampled.

Study, study while you can Always feed the book
The time will come
When you too are done
And you'll know you're better than you look!

Pud Starts Sixth Year at J.C.

by Andrea Zavod

Will Richard Christopher Coller please step forward. You know who he is. . .it's probably on the tip of you tongue. A 1985 Juniata graduate, Chris 'Pud' Coller is on campus for his sixth year, and like hiu nickname, being here fits his personality perfectly.

After four years of studying Biology and secondary education, Pud remained on campus in 1985 as the Residence Director of Sherwood Hall and with a year of experience under his belt, Pud has returned this year as RD of East Houses.

What makes JC so appealing to Pud is the area surrounding the college. He enjoys the "smallness" of Juniata, he feels comfortable here amongst a campus full of "exceptional people." As far as he's concerned there's nothing better for him than to be involved with a college campus like this.

Being an RD is one way Pud stays in touch with students on campus. Though being RD means a certain isolation from hall residents, Pud feels he has been able to adjust to the roles of an RD relatively easily. He's been able to separate his new supervisional roles from his student days and adds that having great RA staffs in both Sherwood and East has made his job enjoyable.

his Masters degree and to continue coaching football, but for now, Pud enjoys being on campus, dealing with students, helping them as well as himself grow with experience.

The best part about being an RD to Pud is the opportunity to stay on campus—to be in an atmosphere where he feels most comfortable. With his 'open door policy' his aim is to maintain that comfortable atmosphere for everyone including himself. Says Pud, "I'm going to stay here as long as I can."

Another way Pud stays young is involving himself with the football team. Between his playing days, and most recently his coaching days, Pud has been around the game as long as he can remember. The son of a semi-pro coach, Pud's position as an assistant coach for Juniata is like a dream come true. "I've always wanted to coach. It's been the best job because I can have fun doing it."

He finds himself in the fortunate position of being involved with an outstanding program here at Juniata. About JC's program, Pud says, "I'll probably never have the opportunity to work with a better group of coaches or players again."

Pud's immediate concerns lie with the final three weeks of the football team's regular season schedule. He has ambitions to earn

Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Scores are Posted

ALCOHOL

As campuses around the country gear up for the third National Collegiate Alcohol Awareness Week, the scores from the second are just getting posted. Grades have shot up, though they're still not passing: 59% of Americans can pass the E.A.T. (Equivalence Aptitude Test), up from 17% just four years ago. Passing means knowing the simple but crucial formula (and you don't need a calculator): the most common servings of beer (12 ounces), wine (5 ounces), and spirits (one and a fourth ounces) contain equal amounts of alcohol.

Why is passing the E.A.T. and participating in Awareness Week so important? To be responsible, we need to know the facts, not myths about alcohol. All those prep courses won't help the student who gets behind the wheel thinking he's had "just a few beers." Far too many accidents are caused by such misinformation. Maybe that's why 50% of all driving fatalities are caused by drunk drivers. And why two-thirds of all those arrested for DWI "just had beer."

Knowing some other common sense college survival tips may also save lives during the school year:

1. Don't drive after your tailgate party or happy hour - whether you've had beer, wine, or spirits. One American dies in an alcohol-related traffic accident every thirty-five minutes. Better walk an extra mile or spend the night at a friend's than risk taking lives on the road.

2. Eat something - never drink on an empty stomach. Eat before you go to a party, eat while you're there. Solid food like cheese can slow down the alcohol absorption rate. If you're throwing a party, serve lots of munchies and plenty of mixers.

3. Don't be pushed into drinking more than you can handle and don't pressure your friends to keep up with you. Everyone has an individual tolerance. Let your friendu pace themselves.

4. Keep a watchful eye: Cocktails should contain no more than one and a fourth ounces of spirits, wine is commonly no more than a 5 ounce serving and a typical serving of beer is 12 ounces. If you're mixing your own drink, use a shot glass to measure your liquor.

5. Know yourself - and your mood. If you rarely drink, chugging a few beers will affect you faster than it would affect someone who is accustomed to drinking. Your mood can also influence the way you react to a drink. If you're depressed over a test, drinking will depress you further.

Just as there are helpful tips to remember, there are also some common and dangerous myths about alcohol that should be dispelled:

1. Myth 1 - You can pace yourself by switching from liquor to beer or wine. Wrong. You can consume the same amount of alcohol - and can get just as drunk - from the most common servings of beer, wine, and liquor.

2. Myth 2 - Coffee can sober you up if you're drunk. Wrong again. Coffee may wake you up, but it won't sober you up. If you drink one too many and then have a cup of coffee and drive, you are just a wide-awake drunk behind the wheel. Also, taking a cold shower won't do the trick either. That's only going to make you a wet drunk.

Indians Football – Behind The Scenes

Family Support As Crucial As Team Support

Coaching football at Juniat College, located in Central Pennsylvania, isn't a 9 to 5 job. Head Coach Rob Ash and Defensive Coordinator Brad Small check in around 8:30 a.m. on most mornings and usually don't close their briefcases until 10 or 11 p.m. at night. Sometimes the flicker of the football projector may continue well into the dawn hours.

Perhaps Monica Small, Brad's wife, put it best when she said, "Coaching football isn't a job, it's a lifestyle. It effects the lifestyle of the whole family. But it sure seems that the investment of energy put forth is worth the many outcomes."

The hard work and dedication of Ash and Small, and their five part-time assistants, is paying off in this 1986 season. The juniat football team is ranked fifth in NCAA Division III football with a 7-0 mark, their best start since 1973 when the gridders earned a trip to the Amos Alonzo Stagg Bowl.

Football at Juniata is a family affair. Everyone gets into the picture; parents, in-laws, wives and children all play an integral role in the success of Insian Football.

Take Margaret Ash for example, in nine seasons she's never missed one of her husband's games. "I can't imagine a Saturday in the fall without a football game. I like to be involved. I'm interested in the game and find football to beexciteing," she said. In addition to being his number one fan, she helps make team travel arrangements and runs the concession stand at home games.

Even her parents get involved. Over the past six years, Mr. and Mrs. Burke, Margaret's parents, have had the Juniata team to their house in Berwin, PA, for dinner once a year. "Every year when we go to Widener or Delaware Valley my parents have a dinner for all the players. My dad makes his speciality, Barbeque Brisket. He's definitely a loyal Indian fan," said Margaret.

"I don't think any football coach could be successful if he didn't have the support of his wife because of the time involved. Margaret gets excited about the season, she likes the game and really gets involved,"said Ash.

Like Margaret Ash, Monica Small is also involved in Juniata's program. In nine seasons with Brad, she's missed one game. "Because my sister got married I missed the Widener University game this year," she explained. "It's easy to get excited about the games. From the time I get up on Saturdays I get invovled in the emotion of the day. I'm so wrapped up in all of it; I just can't miss it. I like the sport a lot, so that helps too," Monica said.

Football at the Smalls has always been a tradition. Brad's father, Clinton Small, is a very prominent high school coach in New York. Clinton and his wife Isabele, came from Towanda, New York on opening day of camp at Juniata. Three generations of Smalls were represented the day Juniata palyers checked in for practice. "Athletics, in general, and football in part, have always played a significant role in my life. As the son of a very successful high school coach, I kearbed early in life that success in this game is linked to an uncomprising committment to the young men that play it," said Brad.

The Smalls have a 14 month old daughter, Kimberly, who is probably one of the youngest spectators in the Middle Atlantic Conference. Kimberly was born on August 14, 1985 and attended her first football game on September 7th, 1985 when her daddy coached against Lebanon Valley College.

She's not the only youngster to cheer for the blue and gold; 28 month old Scott Ash learned the "high five" from his dad's players and sits at the training table with the team every Saturday morning before the home games. "Scott raelly admires these guys and they are great with him. His favorite place to be is the gym with the players," said Margaret.

Allthough both wives are highly enthusiastic about Juniata football, they admit it's not always easy.

"I admire the dedication most coaches have for their profession. It's easy for me to get interested in Brad's work. I enjoy sharing this important part of his life with him; however, it's sometimes an adjustment to spend some time alone during the season and when he's recruiting," said Monica.

"Monica's support of my football interest is unyielding; I am well aware of the sacrifice she makes while encouraging me to live the lifestyle that this committment requires," said Brad.

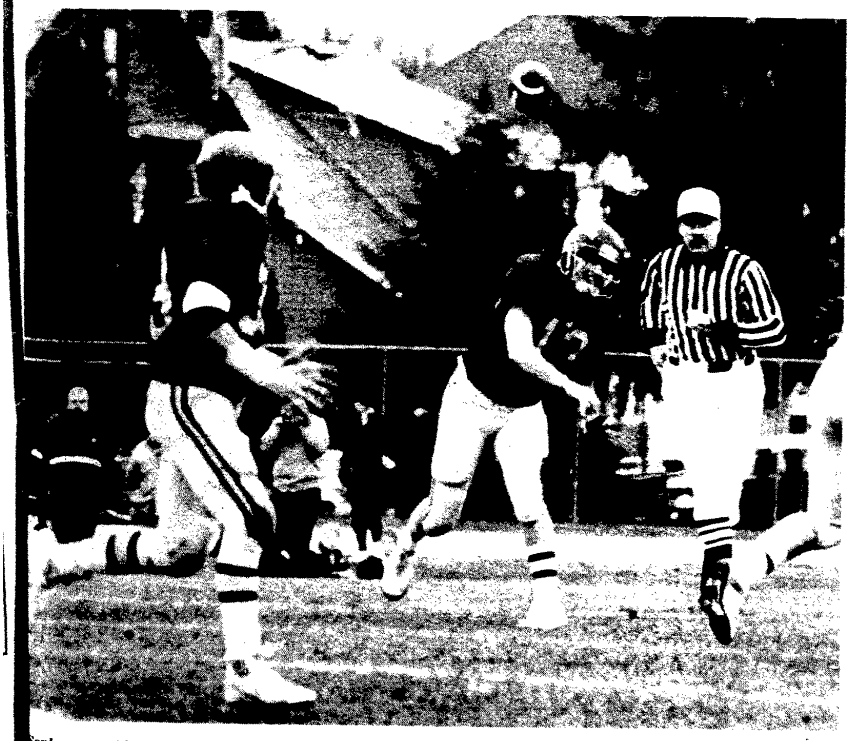
Margaret shares the same feelings as Monica about her husband's dedication to his job. "It's definitely exciting, but the constant ups and downs are difficult. I know coaching takes a lot of time, but Rob makes a great effort to balance his personal life and professional life. He loves his job and I'm happy for that."

"Sometimes my family has to sacrifice things. It's important to me that they accept that, otherwise there would be a lot of pressure there," Rob saod.

With several weeks left in this highly successful season, both coaches will continue to work long hours, but that's okay with Margaret and Monica.

"I think it's a fantastic year! They (the team) deserve to be ranked fifth in the country. This team had some great guys who really who really strive for cohesiveness. They're willing to put the time into what it takes to be a championship team," Margaret said.

"I think these guys are terrific. Even though the palyers are tough asnails on the field, the old barbaric stereotype doesn't fir with this team. They present themselves in a mannerly and polite fashion. They are uplifting and energetic," Monica added enthusiatically.



Sophomore QB Chris 'Cubby' Davis puts one up over the middle late in Delaware Vailey game this past weekend. The Indians combined a stingy defense and wide open offense to manhandle the aggies on the road to a 30-8 victory.

Indian player avoids tackle attempt as he moves the ball up the wing during soccer action this past weekend. The Indians ended up locked in a 3-3 tie with the strong squad from Albright.

Indians Scalp Delaware Valley 40-8

Currently Ranked 5th In NCAA Division III With 8-0 Record

By Mike Antenucci

Dominant. That's the only way to sum the victory chalked up by the Juniata Football Team this past saturday. The Indians, playing basically flawless football, improved their record to 8-0 and can only move up or remain the 5th ranked team in Division III. The 40-8 stomping of Delaware Valey brought new life to the Juniata defense which gave up 31 points in JC's victory over Wilkes two weeks ago.

The Aggies could muster no offense what so ever and the harvest of running backs (7) which Del Val used were virtually plowed down by the Juniata "D". The Defense set up the First Indian score when Junior saftey Greg St.Clair recovered a Clay Butterworth fumble on the JC 43. Three plays later Mike Culver connected with Dan Crossey out of the backfield on a flanker pass. Crossey made some brilliant moves, used his blockers well, and walzed into the endzone untouched. After Keith Watson added the extra point Juniata led 7-0 with 5:09 remaining in the first quarter.

The Indians next score, an impressive offensive drive (85 yards on 13 plays), was capped off when Senior fullback Ian Malee marched 7 yards into the endzone. Like Crossey on the first score, Malee too, was not hit by one Del Val defender on the play. The Indians picked up 5 first downs on the drive, Culver used 4 recievers, 2 running backs, and kept the ball 3 times himself. The key play of the drive was a Culver to Morgan Johns pass on a 3rd and 10 situation for the Indians.

On the ensuining kickoff Del Val's Dave Mrazz fumbled the ball on his own 26, where JC special teamer Brain Warner recovered. The following play, only 14 seconds after the Ian Malee TD, Culver went to his Aireal attack one more time. This time Frankie Phelps hauled in the 26 yard pass, using his great speed to get behind the defender on the left sideline. Watson added the PAT and Juniata had a commanding 21-0 lead with 12:06 remaining in the first half.

Del Val's offense was contained again by the Juniata "D", and rairly did the Aggies cross the midfield stripe. The Indians started their last drive of the half from their own 33. On the ninth play of the drive the Indians were faced with a 4th and 1 situation. With the ball on the DV 4, and the Aggies expecting run, Culver rolled to the right, threw a pass between two defenders, and connected with Malee in the endzone. The extra point attempt failed and with no further scoring in the first half, Juniata took a 27-0 lead into the lockeroom.

Mike Culver, after earning MAC Player of the Week honors for the second time this season, due to his efforts against Wilkes, was 10 for 12, passed for 139 yards, and threw 3 touchdowns. However, Culver was not to play a down in the 2cd half and was replaced by Cubby Davis, the Sophomore QB (and passer of the winning TD in the Moravion game 5 games ago) from Hollidaysburg.

As we have learned to expect from their previous performances this season, The JC "D" created another big play and 6 more points. This time Mark Dorner was the spokesman for the "D", as he stepped in front of an Aggie reciever, picked off a Butterworth pass on his own 24, and raced 76 yards, untouched, in to the endzone for an Indian score. After Watson's PAT JC was up 34-0 with 9:32 left to play in the third.

The last Indian score of the day was set up when Steve Cambell recovered a John Spahr punt that was bobbled by the Aggie return man Mike Williams. Juniata took over on the Del Val 21 and score 3 plays later when Davis hit his target, Freshman, Roy Smith. Smith, making his first varsity reception of his college career, scored from 19 yards out on a 3rd and 8 situation for JC.

The Del Val touchdown was scored against the JC 2cd team "D" with only 6:35 remaining in the game. Tom Lewankowski raced 19 yards up the middle capping off the Aggie drive. Del Val, after a Two-point conversion made the score 40-8. There was no further scoring and the Indians are now 8-0, with only 3 game remaining, however, the next 2 games (lycoming,Susquehanna) are the most important!

NUCH'S NOTES

Virtually (to our knowledge) every Indian in a uniform played in the game. . .JC used 4 QB's (Culver, Davis, Spahr, and Claude Bloom), 11 different rushers, and 9 recievers. Juniata managed 17 first downs, rushed the ball 42 times gaining 138 yards. Mike Culver was the leading rusher carring 5 times for 48 yards. JC, between 3 QB's passed for 189 yards (Davis was 5-7, for 50 yards, and 1 TD).

Thirty different JC defenders made at least one tackle in the game. Tom yeager and Mark Dorner led the way with 9 and season leader Bob Crossey had 6. The "D" sacked the Del Val QB 6 times. TYeager had 2 and Ray Witmer was credited with 1 1/2.

Juniata hosts Lycoming in their last home game of the season. Last year this game was the one which would decide the conference championship.

Culver Is P.O.W

Juniata quarterback Mike Culver was named Middle Atlantic Conference "Player of the Week" for his outstanding performance in the Indian's 38-31 victory over Wilkes College. Earlier this year he received the same honor for his performance in a 24-9 victory over Widener.

The senior signal caller completed 15 of 25 passes for 233 yards and two touchdowns; he kept the ball 17 times, chalking up 104 yards rushing to improve Juniata's mark to 7-0.

Culver holds virtually every passing record at Juniata including the career passing yardage record and the total offense record. With his performance two weekends ago, he surpassed the 5,000 yards passing mark, collecting a remarkable 5,230 passing yards in three years as a starter.

The Indians are currently ranked fifth in NCAA Division III football. Their recent win over Delaware Valley this past weekend gives them an 8-0 start; the best for a Juniata grid team since 1959.

Vol. XXXVIII, No. 10 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | November 13, 1986

The Louisiana Reperatory Jazz Ensemble will play Friday night, Nov. 14, curtain is at 8:15 p.m.

Artist Series Presents Louisianna Jazz Ensemble

The Louisiana Reperatory Jazz Ensemble, an aggregation of professional instrumentalists performing classic New Orleans jazz on origina! instruments and in the authentic styles of the 1880-1930 era, will present the third program of the Juniata College 1986-87 Artist Series on Friday evening, Nov.14.

Curtain is 8:15p.m. in the Ballroom, Ellis College Center, 18th and Scott Sts., Huntingdon. The public is cordially invited to attend. Tickets for the performance will be available at the door.

Established in New Orleans in 1980, the Louisiana Reperatory jazz Ensemble (LRJE) has performed in the Soviet Union,France,and the Netherlands,and across the United States, including the Doubleday Lecture at the Smithsonian Institution,Washington,D.C. The Ensemble includes among its members leading New Orleans jazzmen ranging from 27 to 74. Most notable among its members is Frederick Starr, who plays a turn-of-the-century clarinet and the C-melody saxophone, and who also just happens to be a jazz scholar and president of Oberlin College.

In addition to Starr, other performances in the Ensemble include: Eddie Bayard, cornet, a veteran of many years' performances on Mississippi River steamboats; John Chaffee on Banjo, mandolin and guitar; John Joyce, drums, a Juilliard graduate and musicologist who hass performed with Pete Fountain; Fred Lonzo, trombone, who has toured and recorded widely since age 16; Sherwood Mangiapane, age 74, called "a master, one of New Orleans' greatest bassists of all time," who began his professional careera ma1925; and John Royen, a specialist on the Harlem-style "stride" ' piano.

The repertoire of the LRJE consists of blues, stomps, rags, hymns, cake-walks, spirituals, and marches. There is no set program for the Juniata performance; the music will flow from the mood of the evening and the Ensemble.

Seven performers in various combinations call on 14 instruments to recreate the all-but-lost sounds of such immortal bands as Jelly Roll Morton's Red Hot Peppers, Joe Oliver's Creole Jazz Band, the New Orleans Owls, and the New Orleans Rhythm Kings. Numerous tunes in its repertoire have not been played in half a century, while others have, in recent years, been performed only in greatly altered form. Wherever possible, the Ensemble is not simply imitating a dying style. Its musicians steep themselves in the early jazz of New Orleans by listening to old recordings, reading through old manuscripts and talking to old timers.

In reviewing the group's latest album, "Uptown Jazz," Eric Levin of "People magazine says, "Above all, the LRJE reminds you that New Orleans music was intended for dancing—the kind you need a partner for. The affable sousaphone, rat-a-tat drums and smartly crackling banjo evoke the swirl of crinolines and cuffed over hardwood floors. Yet the band's vigor and sass prevent the formation of any nostalgic mildew."

Writing Lab – There For You!

by Alayne Unterberger

It's that time of year again at Juniata College. It's the dreaded term paper anxiety syndrome. But, alas, a cure has been found. The writing lab, located in the basement of the library, is open and ready to help you get over term paper anxiety syndrome. Even if you're an "A" student, the staff can serve as objective criticizers to help you iron out the best rough draft, organize your thoughts, or at any of the stages in between. So, the writinhe writing lab can benefit any class of student.

So far this year, the new director of the writing lab, Dr. Susan Thorton, estimates that over 100 people have been served by the staff and the resources. The staff is composed of seven upperclassmen who have proven to be skilled in reading and writing: Ruthanne Hackman, Natasha Lamberson, Rick Bergeman, Jodie Monger, Brian Achey, Chris Hester, and Mike Barnett.

The writing lab currently consists of three Apple and IBM computer terminals. Software such as the Volkswriter and Word Perfect is on reserve behind the circulation desk in the library. An added feature is that now the writing lab has tutorials and various language programs to aid the student in grammar, vocabulary, and geography. The writing lab is also a quiet place to work, with numerous dictionaries, thesaurus, and other writing references.

So, the next time the term paper anxiety hits you, or you want to brush up on your language skills, remember that the writing lab is there to help you. Stop in anytime between 1:30p.m. and 4:30p.m. and 6:30p.m. to 9p.m., Monday thru Thursday.

Higher Education Plagued By Sexual Discrimination

College women nationwide are entering their second school year without Title IX, and women's groups-missing their best tool for fighting campus sexual harassment and for getting equal funding-say it's getting harder to force schools to pay attention to them.

In June, 1984, the U.S. Supreme Court effectively gutted Title IX of the Higher Education Amendments of 1972, which said colleges would lose their federal funds if they discriminated on the basis of gender.

Women's groups has used Title IX to force colleges to adopt ways fpr women to appeal campus sex harassment cases, to hire and grant tenure to female faculty memberws and to begin funding women's athletics equally to men's sports.

All that's over now, some say.

"In funding women's athletics and in sexual harassment cases, if a school has no policy in place (already), students in most states have no (legal) recourse," contends Bernice Sandler, head of the Project on the Status and Education of women, which, in turn, is funded by the Association of American Colleges.

"We've lost an enormous amount of ground but, as yet, we don't even know how much we've actually lost," says Ellen Vargyas, and attorney for the National Women's Law Center in Washington,D.C.

The Supreme Court ruling was so vague, she akks , that the U.S. Dept. of Education, which is supposed to make sure colleges don's discriminate, has pretty much given up trying to enforce Title IX.

Dept. of Education officials, however, deny the charge.

Editorial

Let's Hear it for the Silent Majority!

It must be that time of year again—everyone is becoming super sensitive to things around them, Roommates are particularly good targets for observing behaviors that have suddenly become annoying. Now is a time when it bothers you that it's impossible to go to sleep before 1 am because "they" are loud and inconsiderate. How neat and tidy has your roommate been lately? Have they made an effort to vacuum the rug in your room yet this year? Now is a time to be annoyed by just about anything.

What is causing this hypersensitivity? The pressures are building—which leads to another observation that I have made, and have made many times in the past and it's still very annoying. There are those on this campus who feel like they have more work, more difficult classes and are more than willing to tell you this whenever they open their mouths. It never ceases to amaze me—why do people feel a need to be constantly talking about how much work they have, as if you didn't have any? It's not like they are the only ones who ever have exams, projects, papers, etc., although they think that they are.

Everyone on this campus has been, or currently is, inundated with work. There is not one area of study that has it any harder than any other area. I feel as though everyone is just as busy as all of the complainers, although it may be a different type of work—perhaps writing a paper or doing a lesson plan or analyzing a case and not just memorizing equations and plugging in numbers.

This editorial is dedicated to those students who have a lot of work-but it's not obvious to everyone that talks to them. It's dedicated to those who don't need to make comments about other students' study habits, schedule, etc. It's dedicated to all of you who can understand that you aren't special, that we ALL have an incredible workload sometimes, therefore you don't need to think that anyone else is breezing through this school.

You say that you've been waiting for six years. Well, folks, yes it is finally here. Remember the Rock-N-Roll band that burst onto the scene in 1976 with "More Than A Feeling", followed that with three more singles and then another album? Remember "Don't Look Back", "Feelin Satisfied", and "Party"? Yes, the band is Boston and after six long years they have produced another superior album--The Third Stage.

The album cover has the familiar "guitar" graphics, however the band has seen some changes. They have been trimmed down to four members, from the original five, and only two of the originals remain. The two creators, producer and arranger Tom Scholz and lead singer Bradley Delp, are the masterminds behind The Third Stage. The album cover is like a storybook. Each song's origin is explained plus the technical aspects of making the album are depicted in detail, titled "How to make a record in just six years".

The most important part, however, is the music. And it is as powerful and awesome as Boston's previous work, if not better. The first single, entitled "Amanda" was an instant chart-smasher and "We're Ready" explaining the six year wait is soon to follow. "The Launch" and "Cool the Engines" is reminiscent of "Long Time". (Remember that one?!)

The classic Brad Delp harmonies, notably on "My Destination" (a variation on the "Amanda" theme) and "Can'tcha Say", and the Tom Scholz vow of NO synthesizers make this album extremely characteristic of the classic Boston sound of long ago. Side Two contains some slower

What's Happening — At Schools Across The Nation

"Neighbor Sues Univ. of Colorado Frat Under Organized Crime Law"

Steven McCauley claims a Phi Delta Theta member beat him after he complained to police about noise at the Phi Delta house, and said that other members vandalized his property.

McCauley's suit, which asks the court to shut down the frat, is believed to be the first time the Colorado Organized Crime Control Act has been used against a student organizer.

And Bill Warren, a photographer for The Colorado Daily, a campus newspaper, says a Phi Delta member warned him "this may be the last picture your ever take" when he went to the house to cover the lawsuit story.

Campaigning for a marijuana legalization ballot initiative at the Univ. of Oregon, Arnold Trebach, who heads AU's Institute on Drugs, Crime, and Justice, likened recent anti-drug laws to the internment of Japanese-Americans during World War II, saying "it won't help".

Paris (Tx.) County Community College student Elizabeth Horn, meanwhile, has sued police for searching her room after mistakenly identifying spiced tea as hashish.

Speaking at the Univ. of Pittsburgh, the former U.S. Education secretary who released the 1983 "Nation at Risk" study that, in turn, ignited the school reform movement, said states "where governors have been aggressive leaders" have "made the most dramatic moves" toward school excellence".

He said 41 states have adopted the tougher high school graduation requirements his report suggested

Being away at college poses a lot of changes in our habits and lifestyles. We experience many new things and generally have a good time. I can usually deal with the changes that must occur when you are in a totally new living environment, but it is hard to get used to some things. Let's take a look at the school's toilet tissue dispensers for an example. One of the most horrible experiences is reaching for the paper and finding that you can only get one square at a time. Or my personal favorite, looking for the end of a roll. If the rolls were consistently put in that they rolled from the top, I would have no problem. Instead you end up rolling the whole thing around a few times praying an end will appear, then when it doesn't, you have to roll it in the opposite direction. Sure, this is a time consuming project, and it is time that I can spend doing constructive things like waiting for the washer to stop spinning. I just feel that for the amount of money I pay to come here, some things could be more convenient.

Alumni Gives California a Try

by Buffy Heisey

Anne P. Hench, a '71 graduate of Juniata College, recently took the West Coast by storm. She makes her home in San Francisco, California.

While attending Juniata, she was involved in concert choir, Madrigal Singers, and other musical and science related groups. She graduated with a major in Biology. She furthered her education by attending Jefferson Medical College in Philadelphia where she graduated in 1975. In 1985, she received her Masters in Public Health from the University of California at Berkeley.

After medical school, she spent four and a half years working at a U.S. public health center in South Bronx. She worked for a while in administrative areas as the coordinator/planner of educational programs. She then decided to set up a private practice, as a pediatrician, in Vermont. It was three years ago when she "decided to give California a try!"

Anne Hench is anything but a standard pediatrician. She is very interested in child behavior and development, and interaction between parents and children. She works at a human services agency with children and adults who have developmental disorders such as mental retardation, seizure disorders and cerebral palsey. She also works at a local community clinic that is funded with federal money. She also enjoys consulting work with an agency that helps Native American Indians. "It's nice to be able to have that kind of flexibility and to have a variety — to not feel stuck," Hench commented on her mix of occupations and interests. She said, "It's a little bit of everything — it's fun."

What I most appreciate about Juniata is that it allows you to grow as a person. It allowed me to take sciences to go to medical school and music and languages that allowed me to stretch as a person. There's not great deal of time later in life to let yourself do that," commented Hench concerning Juniata. She also said, "I've seen colleges and universities on both coasts and I have seen no better education than Juniata. It is a very unique experience."

Her plans for the future include teaching pediatric residents and consulting an international level. "It would be fun to be a surgeon general sometime," Hench said kiddingly. "I want to help people look at health issues and illnesses in a broader way. You can't separate the bug from the fact that their housing is so poor and that they are chronically exposed to the weather and are undernourished. These things make a person what they are," replied Hench. In her final comments, she added, " It is amazing how things pop out of the woodwork as opportunities. There are exciting real changes in medical history. It is changing — getting back to a pratice that is really concerned about people "

Title IX

In the 1984 Grove City College case, the court ruled that only the campus program that directly got federal funds had to swear it didn't discriminate against women.

Consequently, if an athletic department of an English department that descriminated against women didn't themselves receive funds, they were immune from Title IX's scope.

Indeed, most campus prorams have become immune.

The vast majority of federal funds come to campuses in the form of "block grants," which campus administrators can divvy up among various programs.

"Most federal money is not directed toward specific programs," Sandler notes.

And after schools distribute the federal money, it's very hard to trace, Vargyas adds.

Sandler contends women's sports have suffered the most during the post-Grove City eral because "little (federal money) goes to athletic programs, and athletic scholarships are not considered financial aid."

As a result, progress in giving women more athletic opportunities-and more athletic scholarships-has slowed to a crawl in many places, she says.

In 1979, for example, Tina Morrison and five other women atletes sued West Texas State University, claiming it violated Title IX by making them ride vans to away games when thir male counterparts flew, paying their couaches less than male coaches, with giving them only one uniform-compared to the men's two-to wear, with jamming four people-compared to the men's two-into a room while on the road.

While Morrison, now a coach at an Amarillo, Tx., high school, says the suit scared WTSU officials "and that helped some" in creating better conditions at the campus, a federal court dismissed the case for the second time this summer.

Women coaches, Morrison reports, now get paid better, females get spare uniforms, and the university sometimes lets women's teams fly to away games.

it's far from equality, however. "Nationwide", Vargyas says, "millions of dollars are given to athletic departments and athletes, byt women get only a fraction of what men get."

"At Temple University," she adds, "nearly $2 million a year is given in athletic scholarships. Enormous benefits are being denied to women there."

But the Dept. of Education's Office of Civil Rights (OCR) claims most schools were in total compliance with Title IX before the Grove City decision.

"Grove City hasn't changed the attitude of most schools," says Gary Curran, the OCR's spokesman. "Most were pretty much in compliance (with the law) before, and continue as such now."

Vargyas charges the OCR isn't trying. "Title IX is not being aggressively enforced. (The Education Dept.) is taking the narrowest view of the ruling, and the ruling was very vague to begin with."

Curran disagrees. His office investigates all complaints, "but it's usually up to the schools to raise the question af jurisdiction. And, of the huge number of complaints we receive, most are related to elementary and secondary school issues rather than higher education."

The OCR also conducts random compliance reviews among colleges.

With all the uncertainty about what the court meant and whether the Education Dept. will act, many campus wpmen are bypassing the federal government altogether and pursuing their discrimination complaints on the state level, Vargyas says.

Meet Brett Basom The New RA In North

by Andrea Zavod

You would think after four years of being on campus, it wouldn't be hard to get to know a lot of people. For sixth year resident, Brett Basom, this year's resident director of North Hall, being here for two more years has meant more friends and acquaintances.

Graduating in 1985 with a degree in Biology, 'Base' remained on campus last year to complete course requirements for a teaching certificate. Back this year as an RD and a substitute teacher for Southern Huntingdon High School, Base likes being here for the opportunity to meet more people in the college and within the community.

Base enjoys being an RD in North, "the people there are fun to be with, the football players make things interesting, but I have a great staff (except for Bill Hinchman!) and everyone is very cooperative." Though he doesn't like being "policeman" of the dorm, Base says he has had no problem.

As advisor of North's RHA, Base says their biggest project this year will be the redesigning of the lounge. They're looking to get new furniture and perhaps game tables.

Being here for six years, he's had opportunity to see many changes in the college. And now with his first-hand involvement with Student Services, he has seen the department grow, catering to student needs and providing alternatives to changed policies.

For the time being Base would like to stay in Huntingdon County and is hoping to land a full time teaching position at a local high school. Also in his future plans Base looks to be a business partner with an English friend who is starting summer camps in England and France. As the United States Representative, he plans a trip overseas this winter, to make further arrangements.

For now Base is happy to be here—he'll be happy just as long as there continue to be people to meet.

Tribe Loses 21-14 Record Now 8-2

By Mike Antenucci

Looking back and wishing for that one play back, just one more chance at scoring that touchdown, making that tackle, knocking down the pass, the dream of mostly all the Juniata Indian football players this past weekend. To come so close to winning the MAC title and earning a berth in the National Playoffs was in the difference of 7 points.

This past weekend the Indians saw their chances of winning that title just slip past them when they lost a close descion to Susquehanna 21-14. The Indians dropped to 8-2 with one more game remaining (Away at Upsala). SU, after taking an early 21-0 lead, barely held off the Indian comeback.

Freshman, Dan Crossey scampered 48 yards for the Indians first score of the day, cutting into the SU lead. With the Indians trailing 21-7, and 7:51 remaining in the game, Senior Quarterback Mike Culver scrambled 34 yards for JC's second score. Juniata, however, would only touch the ball for the remainder of the game and came up on the short end by a touchdown.

Football is a game of inches, seconds, and key situations. And it was on those key sistuations where the breaks would all fall Susquehanna's way. For instance Juniata got nailed with a roughing the Kicker penality on a 4th a 3 situation, that allowed a SU drive continue. Another example would steam from SU's second score. With time running out in the first half and the ball on the JC 45, Susquehanna gambled on a 4th and 1. The gamble paid off, as SU's Coolidge hit His wide reciever Ford for a 24 yard gain. The next play Coolidge threw a 21 yard touchdown pass with only 30 seconds left to play in the first half.

The Indians were turned away from the championship but not a successful season. With one game remaining, their are many fond memories from a very exciting season. Watch in next weeks Juniatian for "THE SEASON IN REVIEW-LOOKING BACK".

The return of Powder Puff Football to JC this past weekend was a huge success. The weeks of practice paid off, as many of the teams made fine showings. Here are two phots capturing some of the action this past weekend during a game between Lesher and South.

JC To Host V-Ball Tourney

The Juniata College women's volleyball team will host the NCAA Division III Eastern Regional Volleyball Tournament on Nov. 13, 14, and 15th in the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center.

The Indians earned an automatic bid to the tournament by capturing their sixth consecutive Middle Atlantic Conference Championship. The JUNIATIAN

Vol. XXXVIII, No. 11 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | November 20, 1986

President Neff Honored Through "Visions of the Word"

"Visions of the Word," an extraordinary exhibition of art involving scenes and texts from the Bible, will open Sunday, Nov. 16, at Juniata College's Shoemaker Galleries.

Sponsored by the college's J. Omar Good Fund, the display honors Juniata's new president, Dr. Robert W. Neff, who is an Old Testament scholar and former professor of biblical studies.

"Visions of the Word" will feature original etchings, engravings, woodcuts and lithographs representing a wide range of passages from both the Old and New Testaments. Among the artists and their works to be shown are: Rembrandt, "Christ Driving Money Changers From the Temple," "Flight Into Egypt," "Adoration of the Shepherds"; Albrecht Durer, "St. Michael Fighting the Dragon"; Lucas van Leyden, "David Playing the Harp Before Saul," "Conversion of St. Paul"; Marc Chagall, "The Wife of Potiphar," "David Before Saul," "David and Bathsheba," "Jeremiah in the Dungeon"; and Oskar Kokoschka, "Flight Into Egypt," and "Resurrection."

Some of the oldest works date back to 1508, while some of the newest were completed in 1986. Also of special note are contributions by two contempory Pennsylvania artist, Anthony Gorny and Donald Forsythe.

According to Dr. Robert E. Wagoner, exhibit coordinator, "To have original work of such outstanding quality is a very unusual privilege and is due to our great good fortune in securing the cooperation of major art galleries in Boston, New York, and Philadelphia to lend us important works for this show."

In celebration of the Advent season, the collection will feature a large selection of Nativity and Christmas scenes from various eras and styles.

Dr. Wagoner is quick to point out that all of the prints in this exhibition are of artistic value. "They are not copies," he says. "The artists deliberately chose this medium (etchings, woodcuts, engravings) as the most effective way of communicating their thoughts. Each of these pieces came from materials originally created by the hand of the artist."

The public is cordially invited to view the 85-piece collection and to attend an opening reception scheduled for 4-7 p.m., Sunday, Nov. 16 in the galleries. There will be refreshments and special music by the Moore Street Pro Musica, a recorder ensemble. Admission is free.

The exhibit will be on display through Dec. 19. The Shoemaker Galleries, located at 17th and Moore Sts., Huntingdon, are open Monday through Saturday from 1-4:30 p.m.; closed Sundays and Nov. 27-30. The college will gladly accept appointments for special viewings of the collection by groups or individuals who cannot visit the galleries during regular hours.

This early 16th Century woodcut, "St. Michael Fighting the Dragon," by Albrecht Duer is among the 85-piece collection entitled "Visions of the Word," which will open at Juniata College's Shoemaker Galleries on Nov. 16. Area residents are invited to take advantage of this opportunity to witness the message of the Bible as it has been envisioned by these great artists.

Bus Stop To Run

"Bus Stop," a three-act romance, will be performed Friday and Saturday, Nov. 21 and 22, at Juniata College. Curtain is 7:30 p.m. in Oller Hall on the Juniata Campus.

Admission is free. Area residents are cordially invited to attend.

Written by William Inge, "Bus Stop" features an eight-character student cast. Directors for the production are Doris P. Goehring, assistant professor of speech and theatre, and William L. Hofelt, Jr., assistant professor of English.

The play revolves around four travelers who have to "hole up" at a small but warm diner when a raging blizzard strands their bus. Cherie (who was played by Marilyn Monroe in the movie version) is pursued, made love to and finally kidnapped by an over-zealous, headstrong cowboy from Montana.

In the diner, another romance is developing between the owner of the diner and the bus driver, who now can find time to get to know each other better. Also, a seedy, middle-aged professor finds a young waitress to play Juliet to his Romeo. He begins to see himself for what he is and she finds a touch of romance for the first time.

Cast members for "Bus Stop" include:

Sue White, a junior from Valhalla, NY, as Elma Duckworth; Michelle Sciranko, a freshman from Bradford as Grace Hoylard; Steve Patterson, a senior from Middlebury, as Will Masters; Rebecca Abraham, a sophomore from York, as Cherie; Stephen Meyer, a senior from Bethseda, MD, as Dr. Gerald Lyman; Eric Dahl, a junior from Princeton Junction, NJ, as Carl; Rick Bellagh, a freshman from Middleburg, OH, as Virgil Blessing.

ATTENTION SENIORS:

How About Doing Something About It?!

The student body of Juniata College never ceases to amaze me. Everyday you hear students complaining about how we need to change this, or do this differently, but it's a rare breed that actually takes the steps to get things done.

We at the Juniatian have had a rough time of it lately. Our computers have been giving us difficulty, and we are short on staff as far as reporters go. We put up signs weekly for the assignment meetings, begging people to stop down and write an article. By the way, these meetings are held each Tuesday night at 7:30 p.m. in the Juniatian office, all are welcome, experienced or not! Still, each week we hear complaints about the length of the paper, or we get letters to the Editor complaining about clubs or activities getting slighted in coverage. If you want an article in the Juniatian, please, write one! We would love to have you.

In the meantime if we don't see your eager faces at assignment meetings on Tuesday night, then we don't want to hear it!

JC's Not What It's Cracked Up To Be

Dear Editor:

According to the 1986-87 Juniata Catalog's definition (p. 1) Juniata College is an "independent, privately supported, co-educational institution committed to providing a liberal arts education to qualified students regardless of sex, race, religion, creed or handicap . . ."

In light of Juniata's blatant lack of handicap access I find Juniata's "committent" in providing education to the handicapped little more than lip service. Virtually the entire campus is inaccessible to those unable to walk and even those temporarily using crutches (as many an athlete can attest to) find getting to classes, administration buildings, cultural events in Oller, even to eat and collect mail an ordeal akin to the Pentatholon. Not only are handicapped students thinking of matriculating denied access and thus an education (and the college denied those students and their talents) but Juniata students, if temporarily injured, are denied easy access to classes. It's hard enough to get us to go without these obstacles! If a Juniata student is crippled while attending Juniata there seems little provision by the college to ensure the continuation of that student's education in that unfortunate event. Maybe, Juniata would then wake up to reality and make provisions for that student (I'd like to think so) but what a tragic way to finally convince the administration.

In the last analysis, Juniata has two choices to free it from the quagmire of hypocricy we find it in today. One, it can provide access for the handicap and by doing so also enable the college to fulfill its function of providing a liberal arts education on a nondiscriminatory basis. Or, two, Juniata can alter its wording of Juniata College's definition to read "Juniata College is an independent, privately supported, coeducational institution committed to providing a liberal arts education to qualified students regardless of sex, race, religion, creed, color or those only partially handicapped who are willing and brave enough to struggle up the steps of Founders.' "

Sincerely,
Jeff Buttimer

There's Life Beyond Football

Dear Editor:

Last week, Juniatian sports fans were treated to a wonderful article entitled "Cumulative Stats through Nine Games", the week before it was a behind the scenes look at what it takes to be a football fan. So what is it going to be this week? Let me guess, a hypothetical scenario of what would have happened had our football team not been upset by Lycoming and Susquehanna.

Now if one were upset over the sports coverage in the Juniatian, or lack thereof, one may take the easiest route and attack the football team. Although it might make one feel better, an attack on the excellant performance of our football team this year would be unjustified and unfair. The players and their coaches have performed brilliantly this year and deserve the accreditation of an 8-2 soon to be 9-2 season. So if one were upset about the sports coverage in the Juniatian, one must direct his attention and animosity toward those responsible, or shall I say, those negligible.

So for those on the staff of the Juniatian, I would like to take your next couple of minutes to catch you up on all the "other" sporting events that have taken place over the last couple of weeks at Juniata that you were obviously unaware.

The men's soccer team finished their season with two really tough games including a 3-2 overtime loss to Bloomsburg, and a crushing 4-0 defeat of Penn State-Bradford.

Men's and women's cross country teams turned in a great showing at the Middle Atlantic Conference Championship this past weekend on their way to qualifying for Regionals. The Juniatian did a special behind the scenes look at football fans, maybe it could possibly do a behind the scenes look at Cross Country fans. It could be called "Running without fans, or Nobody Loves Me."

And what about our Field Hockey women finishing their season with an impressive road victory over St. Bonaventure while everyone else was enjoying their semester break. Congratulations girls!

And finally, there is the ever popular Women's Volleyball Team who, in the last three weeks, have placed 6 out of 18 in the Occidental-Tachikara Invitational Tournament in Los Angeles, placed 1st in the Indian Invitational on their way to a number one ranking in the NCAA East, and finished undefeated in MAC regular season play to record an unprecendented sixth consecutive Middle Atlantic Conference Championship. That's a record you know!

In closing I would like to apologize for any "other" sport I might have missed in my rendition of "This Week In Sports." Call it "ignorance in the field" since I have never aspired to be a sports journalist. So for future reference, if the Juniatian still considers itself the "school newspaper," please realize that there is more than one locker room at Juniata.

Sincerely,
Stephen J. Magley

Students Speak

By Kelli Fahey

How would you feel if J.C. required a physical education class for all students?

Bob Seton (junior): "I would be for it because it would be an easy credit."

Lisa Smith (junior): "Yes, I would be for it 'cause it would be a nice break away from the regular classes and an enjoyable way to earn credit."

Jeanette Peppell (sophomore): "I wouldn't like it at all because I don't feel it would help me in my academic major."

Jim Tufany(sophomore): "I would like it because it would be an easy way to earn credit and a good way to stay in shape."

Lisa Steele (junior): "I think it would be great! It would be an excellent release away from boring class lectures."

Counselor's Corner

by Dr. Jay D. Buchanan

In the last column we discussed some coping strategies for dealing more effectively with the many potential stressors in our environment. Unfortunately though, not all the strategies appeared in the column. Somewhere between Huntingdon and State College (where the Juniatian is printed)three of Dr. Tubesing's coping strategies mysteriously disappeared.

After a not-so-extensive search by the campus counselor, they have been found. Let's briefly examine two of the "missing" strategies and then explore more fully the third strategy.

Tubesing suggests that we develop a supportive network of caring people around us. Having someone with whom we can relate and share our concerns can go a long way in successfully managing stress.

Talking it out, instead of allowing it to be bottled up inside, can be very therapeutic. Additionally, friends oftentimes bring a different, more objective perspective to the situation.

Tubesing suggests also that we learn to relax. We hear this all the time but, when put into practice on a regular basis, relaxation can make a big difference in how we ultimately manage our life space. The key of course is the extent to which we incorporate relaxation into our daily routine.

Talking with friends, listening to music, working out, or taking walks are but a few ways to help us think more clearly and cope more effectively.

A third strategy endorsed by Tubesing and other health care providers is to find ways to laugh each day. Think about it - isn't it hard to laugh and feel uptight or stressful at the same time?!

We all can recall a personal situation where a joke or something humorous broke the tension and made everyone feel much better. Laughing is one of the most pure and total releases of tension.

Granted, laughter can be used by some to keep from crying and as a way to mask our real feelings. But, as psychologist Dr. Robert Leone suggests, laughter can be the best stress reliever as well as provide us with a fresh perspective on life.

From the Pen of. . . !

by Amy Coursen

Some people say they don't care about what happens in South Africa because: 1) it does not directly affect them and 2) they can do nothing to change the system of apartheid so why waste the energy caring. Well, I would like to give a few reasons to care. Before I do that, I would like to say that finally the only way the system of government in South Africa (apartheid) will change is through the people who are directly involved in governing and being governed - the South Africans, all of them, together, is the only route for change that will work. The argument that we are concerned with is whether we can help the government become representative of all the people. I believe we can.

The link for us at Juniata College is our investment in companies doing business in South Africa. In actual dollars, this sum is very minute. The fact is we still support these companies. With our money (tuition, etc.) the college invests in companies, approximately one fourth of which do business in South Africa, these all abide by the Sullivan Principles (a set of equal opportunity employment practices.) Some say that by U.S. investors investing in companies in South Africa, we can affect change in the system. Others say (including the author of the Sullivan Principles, Leon Sullivan) that the businesses are there to make money. The Principles in no way tell the companies to break the laws of South Africa. By going along with the laws of apartheid these companies cannot change the system! The people feel it is good that blacks and whites can now use the same bathroom (a result of Sullivan's intervention) but the blacks still cannot vote or travel freely.

Many people feel that taking action "for the principle of the thing" is a good enough reason for divesting or placing sanctions on South Africa. I'm not so sure. Sometimes doing something just for the principle, such as the U.S. not wanting to support apartheid, leads to actions which in all practically affect nothing. Such is the sanctions bill which the U.S. enacted against South Africa last month. It boycotts nothing which we buy in great quantity from South Africa. That has no affect on their economy. If we want to put economic pressures on South Africa's government through sanctions, we must realize that it involves some sacrifices. We should be boycotting products which we are the major world buyer of. That will affect South Africa's market.

We, as stockholders, can have an affect on the companies that we invest in. The dollars are small but it takes many pieces to make up a whole pie.

$ Dollars & Sense $

by Larry Bock

The Federal financial aid programs are a function of a piece of legislation called The Higher Education Act of 1965. This act is "re-authorized" regularly as part of an ongoing process to keep the Federal aid programs up to date with inflation and current needs in higher education. On October 17th President Reagan signed the most recent of these re-authorizations and with his signature presented us with some dramatic changes in the Title IV aid programs.

The changes that will affect us most at Juniata are in the Guaranteed Student Loan program. We currently have about 860 students borrowing an average of $2350 annually for a total of almost $2,000,000, so, any change to Guaranteed Student Loans tends to have a dramatic impact on our students and the college itself.

Re-authorization will bring us an increase in the maximum annual and aggregate amounts our students will be able to borrow. The maximum annual amounts available to Freshmen and Sophomores will increase to $2625. Juniors and Seniors will see their maximum yearly loan go up to $4,000. Along with these increases we'll likely be given a hike in the interest rate for (at least) new borrowers to around 10%. These new terms would be effective in '87-'88 and require sufficient appropriations in order to be finally implemented.

A significant number of Juniata students could feel the effect of another more subtle amendment to the Re-authorization Act. All GSL applicants will be required to complete a uniform methodology needs analysis like a FAF or PHEAA Grant application (in other words, apply for financial aid) to qualify for a loan in '87-'88. About 10% of our current borrowers will be affected by this new requirement. In addition, all loan amounts must fit into the "need" that's determined by the financial aid application process. This could result in a number of our students receiving less Guaranteed Student Loan monies during the coming years.

These changes are somewhat complicated and will be felt by individuals in very individual ways. The watchword for right now is "plan" and anyone who wants to know how re-authorization could change their aid for next year would find a few minutes in the Aid Offices to be time well spent. We'll be talking more about re-authorization in the next installment of this column.

Teaching Positions Available

Dear Sir/Madam:

The Foreign and Domestic Teachers Organization needs teacher applicants in all fields from Kindergarten through College to fill over six hundred teaching vacancies both at home and abroad.

Since 1968, our organization has been finding vacancies and locating teachers both in foreign countries and in all fifty states. We possess hundreds of current openings and have all the information as to scholarships, grants, and fellowships.

The principle problem with first year teachers is WHERE TO FIND THE JOBS!

Since college newspapers are always anxious to find positions for their graduating teachers, your paper may be interested in your teachers finding employment for the following year, and print our request for teachers.

Our information is FREE and comes at an opportune time when there are more teachers than teaching positions.

Should you wish additional information about our organization, you may write The National Teacher's Placement Agency, Universal Teachers, Box 5231, Portland, Oregon 97208.

We do not promise every graduate in the field of education a definate position, however, we do promise to provide them with a wide range of hundreds of current vacancy notices both at home and abroad.

Sincerely,
John P. McAndrew,President

In Response To Steve Magley

Dear Mr. Magley:

I agree with your plea for better sports coverage. I am pleased that you took the time to write on this subject and I would like to take this opportunity to explain the situation.

The Juniatian editors have many weekly responsibilities in putting the newspaper together. Those responsibilities do not include reporting. We, as editors, have no time to be reporters. We have relied on student reporters who have said they will "write up a field hockey article." In one instance, a member of the soccer team promised us articles on the soccer matches and then never turned anything in because the team lost. We have complete coverage of the football season because we receive press releases on the football stats, etc. from the public relations office.

We are in need of reporters in every department. At a typical Tuesday night assignment meeting, I will have one or two reporters show up. We have tried various ways of advertising and motivating students. If you have any suggestions, we would welcome them. It is very difficult to produce a "school newspaper" without the school's students to help.

Since you had the time and the iniative to write a letter this past week, maybe you will have time to write an article for us this week. That is the kind of help we really need.

Sincerely,
Jennifer Nicholson,
Editor-in-Chief

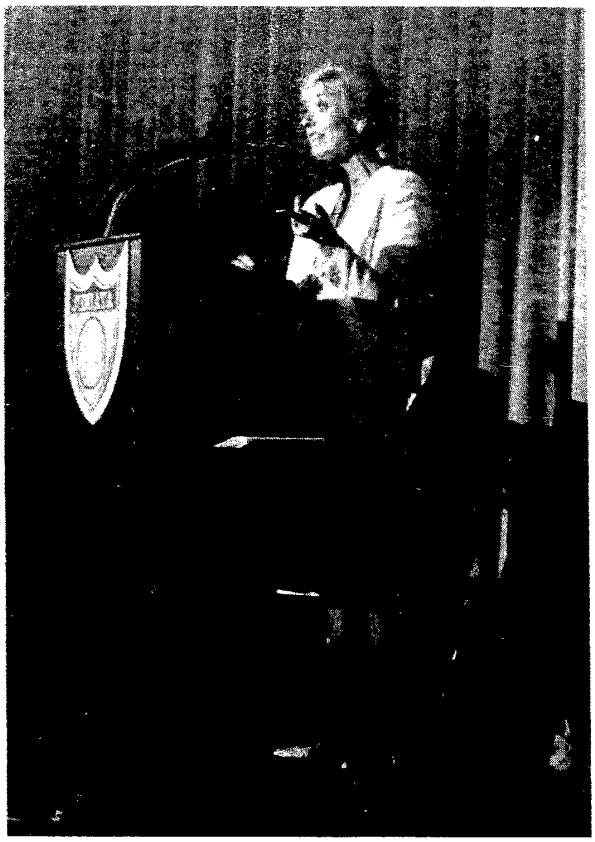
Non-violence Is Topic Of Betty Williams Lecture



by Lisa Clapper

Betty Williams, the modern day Martin Luther King of Northern Ireland, spoke on non-violence for equality and justice in the midst of our violent world of inequality and injustice to a crowd of several hundred at Juniata's Baker Refactory on November 10.

Betty Williams first made headlines ten years ago in Belfast when she viewed English soldiers killing an IRA soldier whose car swirved out of control and killed three children, which inspired Williams to start the fight for peace. Instantly, the media tagged her as "the ordinary housewife," but she has since grown into a "nobel laureate."

The "monstrous act" angered, shocked and horrified Williams, but she could "remember (the scene) as vividly, as though it happened today; I can never forget the day those three beautiful children were killed in Belfast-and I held Molly in my arms and kissed her good bye-I made her a promise to never let such a thing happen again."

Mrs. Williams asked the audience why humans over look what's at our doorstep and require that it be brought to our living room, before we see the problem. She also stated, "If you're not helping to solve the problem, then you're part of it. Peace begins with me. It begins with every human being."

Betty Williams speach was part of the Student Government Lecture Series.

"Brazil" Is Cult Classic

by Norman Miller

Produced by members of the Monty Python clan, "Brazil" is easily one of the strongest movies of the year (not surprising from this "clan") With elaborate special effects and outlandish settings, "Brazil" is an experience in itself. It borders on the ludicrous as one would expect from the people who made "Thr Holy Grail." It is a journey through ones mind by the way of the usual Python style: Humorous violence, humorous insanity,and plenty of just plain old humor. To tell anything about this "experience" would demean the credit of "Brazils" unusual uniqueness. Praised by some as a mystical experience, "Brazil" is a destined cult classic. See it, then decide.

Drug And Alcohol Week Highlighted

by Buffy Heisy & Stacey Halderman

CASE (Committee on Alcohol Study and Education) hosted events for Drug and Alcohol Awareness Week, November 3 through November 7. On Wednesday, November 5, following the welcome at Ellis College Center, each residence hall held a seminar that discussed prevalent problems and concerns. On Thursday afternoon, John O'Neill presented a program to student athletes on drug use and the student athlete. The highlights of the week occurred on Thursday evening when the keynote speaker, John O'Neill, presented "Alcohol, Drugs and You."

Mr. O'Neill has been a practitioner in the field of substance abuse treatment for the past sixteen years. He currently directs a program for the Pennsylvania Department of Health in Allentown, Pennsylvania, called Treatment Alternatives to Street Crimes (TASC), and he has been recognized as an authority on "street drugs" and the pharmacology of such. His street contacts have put him in position to monitor drug trends, phases, and fads. Mr. O'Neill currently serves as drug pharmacology consultant to the Pennsylvania Department of Health and Bureau of Corrections and operates a drug analysis laboratory and does consultations for the private sector.

The events came to a close Friday evening with a Campus Happy Hour at the Totem Inn.

In an interview with Mara Blake-Ward, the Chairperson of CASE, she shared these thoughts, "We felt the week was successful. There was a good turn-out for the speaker. John O'Neill was really dynamic." Mara Blake-Ward speaks of CASE, "Most people look at CASE as an anti-alcohol group; that's not what we're trying to do. CASE feels that drinking is an individual's choice. If an individual chooses to drink, it should be done responsibly and not abused. We are always looking for new members. People can join anytime. We're planning other events."

Inner Circle Features Great Cheap Food

by Patricia Schofield

I arrived at Inner Circle on Saturday evening not quite knowing what to expect. I wasn't sure how to dress. "Would a dress be too fancy and pants not enough? I didn't know what the atmosphere would be like or if the food was any good, even though Inner Circle swears they don't serve Baker Refectory food.

Well, when I arrived my coat was taken by a coat attendant, and I was pleasantly asked, what cocktail I would like. I had a choice of banana and strawberry dacquiries, Pina Coladas, a Mexican Sunset, a Shirley Temple, or Non-alcoholic wines. I was then seated in a quite surprisingly, elegant Faculty Lounge. The table was set with flowers and candles and the room was dimly lit. Mark Heinly provided the entertainment, singing mellow songs accompanied by a piano.

The menu was a delicious array of choices. For appetizer you could choose from Onion soup au Gratin, or Chilled Hawaiian Pineapple Quarters. The salad choice was between Bittered Greens or Spinach Salad w/ vinaigrette dressing. The main course provided a tough decision, to choose from were the London Broil w/ Bearnaise sauce, NY Strip Steak, Shrimp Scampi, Filet of Sole, and Chicken Kiev. To accompany these delicious entrees was your choice of steakfries or herb rice. The vegetable choice offered was Broccoli w/ lemon butter or Sauteed Mushrooms. To finish off this evening of delicious fine dining you were offered a choice of either an Irish Chocolate Parfait or Apple pie ala mode.

The service was excellant, each course arrived after the other, on time but leaving you enough time in between each, to savor the deliciousness.

By the time I was finished with this flurry of cuisine, I remembered where I was. I was sitting in the Faculty Lounge of Ellis Hall!

Newly headed by Elizabeth Radcliffe and her staff, Inner Circle has succeeded in transforming the faculty lounge into an elegant restaurant setting offering delicious meals at a very reasonable price: $3.50 plus your meal sticker number.

A great effort has been made in attempting to make this a huge success at Juniata. Lets do our part in helping the Inner Circle committee achieve this goal!

Well guys, looks like you can't use that famous excuse on your girlfriend, "But I have no money!" With Inner Circle it's a drop in the hat for an enjoyable and delicious night out.

Inner Circle would like to give a special thanks to John Garrity and the Hallmark Food staff and all the waitresses for all their help and support.

Aerobics Class Offered

Don't forget that Juniata still offers the Aerobic's Club to anyone who wishes to enjoy this alternative form of exercise. Five dedicated students instruct Sunday through Thursday at 9 p.m. We meet in the multipurpose room. No two workouts are the same, because each instructor has a certain area of the body in which she likes to concentrate!

Aerobics is quite different from many types of exercise—we focus on specific areas of the body with each new song. Attendance has been low during the past few weeks and we'd love to see more courageous individuals (guys included). "Sweat" along with us!

SHAC Spends First Year At J.C.

by CeCelia Barnes

One of the most active and beneficial new committees on campus this year is the Student Health Advisory Committee. The most recent project tackled by SHAC is the opening of the SHAC Wellness Room located in the health suite on first Lesher, adjacent to the Health Center.

The Wellness Room is basically a self-help resource center. The SHAC offers free pamphlets on health related concerns, check-out materials, self-help vs. professional help tips, and self-awareness questionnaires.

One feature of the SHAC is a height and weight scale, accompanied by a large chart of ideal height and weight combinations as reported by Mutual Life Insurance. At this same station there is a large chart entitled "Do you think you have a cold?" This chart is complete with symptoms, self-help tips and whether or not professional advice is recommended. In addition, this chart is color coded, so that if the student wishes, he may pick up one of our color-coded cards, available for each symptom. In addition, thermometers and tongue depressors are available.

An important feature of the SHAC is an electronic sphygmomanometer. This enables the student to easily take his own blood pressure and pulse. At the same station is pamphlets on care for high blood pressure, and the available check-out material.

SHAC is currently working on a health video library, and we hope to have a computer terminal installed by spring term. In addition, Dr. Jay Buchanan will be lending the SHAC cassettes on such health related topics as stress, and stress management. Jane Brown has donated a cassette deck with head phones. This will enable students to listen to topics that interest them while sitting in a comfortable environment.

The SHAC is currently open during Health Center hours: Mon-Fri 8:00-12:00, 1:00-5:00, 6:00-8:00. As well as 6:00-8:00 on Saturday nights. We hope to have the SHAC staffed for extended hours spring term. SHAC is a service for everyone and we strongly encourage you to take advantage of us.

Zsigmond Szathmary

Zsigmond Szathmary of West Germany, a professor for organ playing at Freiburg College of Music, will present a recital on Juniata College's Moller organ on Monday, Nov. 24. The concert is scheduled for 8:15 p.m. in the Oller Hall Auditorium.

Area residents are encouraged to attend. Admission is free.

Sponsored by the college's Visiting Artists/Scholars Committee, Prof. Szathmary's recital will feature works by J.S. Bach and Franz Liszt. According to Mary Ruth M. Linton, associate professor of music and chairman of Juniata's music department, Prof. Szathmary's visit was arranged through the courtesy of John R. Rodland, a 1961 Juniata alumnus from Ridgewood, NJ. The organist will appear at West Side Presbyterian Church, where the Rev. Mr. Rodland is minister of music, on Sunday.

Born in Hungary, Prof. Szathmary studied at the Franz Liszt Academy in Budapest. In 1960, at the age of 21, he won first prize in an organ competition there. He completed his studies in Vienna and Frankfort. In 1970 he took an appointment as organist and choirmaster in Hamburg-Wellingsbuttel, where he made a name for himself as a champion of avant-garde music and at the same time established a reputation as an interpreter of Bach and Liszt.

Following these years of successful work in Hamburg, Szathmary was appointed organist of Bremen Cathedral. Before joining the faculty at Freiburg, he taught for several years at Lubeck College of Music.

Prof. Szathmary has undertaken numerous concert tours which have taken his to Japan and throughout most of Europe.

High Commitment Makes Huston Better

by Andrea Zavod

We've all heard the saying "It pays to know someone." Especially within the job market, knowing the right person could be your ticket to a steady income. Ask Bill Huston how he came to be an RD at Juniata; the someone he knew happened to be Julie Keehner.

After trying his hand with an insurance company, which involved 2 years of training in Miami, Fla., and residence in Washington D.C., the Kent State graduate, found himself back in his native Huntingdon. "I needed time to think. . .about the possibility of grad school and future career goals."

Huston began working part time at the family business, Huston Ford and was the bar manager of A.J.'s for 2 years. He also began doing volunteer work for Pennsylvania Family Planning, and served on the Board of Directors of Tri-County Women Services. Bill Huston, met Julie Keehner—fellow Board member, thus beginning their working relationship.

In the fall of '84, Keehner, former Juniata College director of Student Services, asked Huston if he'd be interested in a residence director position at the college. It seemed an attractive proposition to Huston, and after going through interviews and the application process, Huston began the 84-85 academic school year as residence director of Cloister.

"It was a great challenge, especially being my first year on campus, but the job was full of promise. I could develop counseling and administrative skills within the same job. I tried very hard to be involved with student activities; I went to the caf and sat with students, did anything I could to get a feel for the campus community. I found the students very friendly and open to sharing information about Juniata with me."

It was after his first year working with Student Services, that Huston decided college/student personnel administration was his future career goal.

Huston returned in '85 for his second year as RD of Cloister. At the time he was looking to go on to a university with a graduate program in student personnel. He was all set to go to New York University, in New York city, when the position of Director of Programming and Conferences became available here at Juniata.

"I never had a more fulfilling time in my life than here at Juniata, and nothing I could do in the future would compare, impact wise, with my experience at Juniata College. And its all because of the quality of the staff and students on campus. This was a career opportunity I needed to pursue, so I decided to stay."

This year, Huston finds being RD of South complementary of his new position of Director of Programming. He's able to stay in touch with the students, and to Huston that remains to be the most rewarding aspect of the RD position. "I have the opportunity to interact and live with Juniata students and share in their growth. . .and grow with them."

Committed to this strong interest in the Residential Life aspect of Student Services, Huston plans to further his education in higher education administration and at the same time remain involved full time as an administrator in Student Services.

To his fellow RD's, whom he refers to as an "interesting and colorful" staff, the "elder" RD has these words of wisdom, "Remember, that the rewards of the position are intrinsic; the more input and higher level of committment, the more we will collectively and individually gain."

The Season In Review – Looking Back At '86

Indians End Season Trouncing Upsala 35-13

By Mike Antenucci

A season to remember, that's what the Juniata Football team provided for for their fans this year. Goals were set and expectations were high, and in the end, Juniata was in the position they wanted to be in at seasons start (winning the MAC's and earning a berth to the national play-offs), some good, some bad. The good definitely outweighed the bad.

Who could ever forget the comeback win over Moravian early in the season, then next weeks victory over tough Widener, at Widener. Mike Culver was breaking records every week, Keith Watson kicked a 49 yard field goal to set a new school record, Don Betar became another asset to Juniata's aerial attack, catching 3 TD passes in one game, and, of course, how can one overlook the ever present Juniata Defense. So many times the "D" had been put in situations where their backs were against the wall, and so many times they came through.

With all this in mind we can only have great hopes for the future, but unfortunately for some, the time has come to turn in the pads and their playing days at Juniata have come to an end. So now the time has come to pay tribute to those who will be leaving us this year, as we recognize their accomplishments throughout their careers.

On Offense:

Mike Culver- Breaking records was Culver's speciality, along with quarterbacking the Indians to many victories. A great passer as well as great runner made him unpredictable, opposing coaches who knew Culver's talents, realized if anyone can turn a game around he was the one. Listing all Mikes records would make for a long list. Culver was a tri-captain on this years team, which compiled a 9-2 record.

Bob Allbright, Bill Snyder, and Steve Yerger were all starters on the Juniata offensive line. Snyder in the beginning of the season, was noted as one of the best linemen in the league. These are the guys who don't get their names in the paper (unless you get credited for recovering a fumble in the endzone for a score, even though it wasn't really him 'Snydes') but are the ones responsible for many of the records Culver had a chance to set. They opened up the holes and protected the QB. If JC has any problems replacing the openings this may be the spot. Coach Ash stated earlier this season that 'Allbright and Yerger were the best tackle combo in the MAC'.

Ian Malee is the 5th of our seniors on offense. Playing consistent, hardnose football was Ians fortee. From the fullback spot Ian often found himself blocking oppents to open holes for the JC halfbacks. Last season Ian was named to the GTE Academic All-Distric team for his accomplishments on the field and in the classroom. Ian is a Pre-Law major.

Morgan Johns was probably the quietest asset to the Juniata Football teams success; on offense anyway. Morgan made a lot of big plays at key times, for instance, catching the pass which set up the winning TD against Moravian. Morgan's name wouldn't be called in the game for a quarter or two, then next thing you know he is the main attraction.

On Defense-

Bob Crossey If Coach Small hates saying goodbye, he will have a tough time dealing with the loss of Bob Crossey. Juniata's leading tackler for the past two seasons Bob had a knack about being around the ball. There are not to many times I can remember when number 56 wasn't heading back to the huddle from the area of the tackle. Last year Bob was named to the GTE Academic All-American second team, as a Pre-Med major.

Bryan Waren is Crossey's counter part, as the 'Crack Pack' tried to surpass their mark of 200 tackles combined last season. Brayn suffered an early season injury and missed a few games at the beginning of the season, but battled back to play an important part in Juniata's successful season. Bryan along with Crossey reign from powerhouse PennHills High School.

Clayton Carlin will abandon the secondary this year. His experience was the key to the secondary's success. Even though the D-Back's didn't match last year's interception mark they certainly made the difference in opposing teams game plans. Claytons experience and competitive attitude will be greatly missed in JC's defense.

Tom Kalinyak and Lou Komer compliment each other at the defensive end positions, and for that reason are listed together. Coach Ash labels Tom and Lou as "as one of the best defensive end combos in the conference." Lou was named to the GTE Academic All-District team as a Pre-Med major. Consistency was the name of the game for these two players. Never leaving home, stringing out the pitches, sticking to the basics are all reasons why Tom and Lou are the best at their positions. Tom was always up there in the 'tackle' race on the stats sheet. Tom made the big plays when JC needed them. Their presence will be sorely missed by the Indian defensive staff.

Well that wraps up the seniors, all 11 started at one time during the season, 9 starting every game. Yes they will be missed greatly but there is a lot more talent out there, waiting for next year to create more excitement. 'Cubby' Davis will get his chance to lead the Indians to victory, we all know cubby's capabilities. He showed us his talent in the Moravian game. Davis will not be short of great hands either. Betar, as well as Cottle, last years leading receiver will both be back. Jim Metz, starting as a freshman, will continue, for his 3rd year, to show us how to catch a ball and take a hit at the same time.

The excitement could be better than ever on the ground also. Gregg Townsend, last years leading rusher, will be back next season after being hampered by an early season injury. Gregg is a tough competitor and should compliment his counterpart, freshman Dan Crossey. Dan filled in for the injured Townsend and did an incredible job. I compare JC's backfield to that of the Dallas Cowboys. Frankie Phelps will return next year as a senior. Frankie has great speed and can beat you deep or can catch it underneath the coverage and go to work.

Turning to defense JC has a lot to look foward to. An experienced secondary secondary, led by safetys Mark Dorner and Greg St.Clair will be on a tear again. Dave Ritter, Russ Tshopps, and Jeff Haines return to the 'D' line, along with Tom Yeager. Tom knows how to get the job done and is always causing fumbles or leading the team in tackles. Personally, I have never seen a more consistent football player than Yeager. Another consistent player found deep in the trenches for JC is Ray Witmer. Ray will be moving on to Penn State next year, and will be sorely missed. Despite being hampered by a bad knee, Ray came back game after game to help clog up the middle for JC.

Chuck Rihn and Frank Gay will also be big keys in the '87 JC defense. Gay stepped in and did a good job when Warren was out.

Make Your Voice Be Heard

By Mike Antenucci

Juniata athletic success is on the rise. The Women's Volleyball Team on their way to the final four one more time, is a great example. Indian Football was one touchdown short of winning the MAC Conference title. The Ladies Cross Country team placed 11th out of 28 teams in the regionals this past weekend. So winning isn't a problem; that arises in informing the college community about out athletic success. Writing sports articles is fun, easy and great experience, especially if you're an english or communications major. For all you business people out there, this is a great chance to get some writing practice, plus the position of reporter looks great on a resume.

Just because you are on the team doesn't mean you can't write about the game. Sometimes it's better that way, first hand experience is always the best. The sports department will graduate one of its editors this year and the other editor will be busy on the hardwood (he hopes), so if you are interested in working in the sports department, whether it's writing articles or applying for an editor position for the spring please contact Mike Antenucci at box 7 or leave a note at the Juniatian office. The winter sports season is underway, spring is just around the corner. All help is good help- who knows, you could be the next Joe Scialabba.

Cock's Corner

By Andy Hiscock

Before you read this article, I would like to direct your attention to the Letter To The Editor written by Steve Magley. First, I would like to thank Steve for taking the time to give us a piece of his mind. Afterall, the Juniatian was originally designed to be a place where students could voice their opinions and catch up with the action around campus.

Steve noticed however that the sports coverage week after week has failed to provide the student body with a well rounded wrap-up of JC sports. At least someone flips through the sports pages. Being Sports Editor, it is my job to delegate articles, type all articles into our computers, and set up page design. I have been sports editor here since the second month of my freshman year. I was 'thrust' into the position after I wrote one Intramural article combined with the fact that the old Sports Editor was graduating.

What I will say now will probably sound bitter, and I would be lying if I said that I was not. I never had any urge to write for the paper, but I stuck with it and did a fairly good job for the first two years. As is a problem with the the entire paper, we have a severe lack of writers (none) for sports besides myself and Assistant Sports Editor Mike Antenucci. At the beginning of each season, I get a contact on each team to write quick articles or just to get me the stats from their games. They usually last for a week or two before the get fed up. I just happened to last four years, and rather than jump around and write all the articles, I have just let the coverage go downhill. Steve is absolutely right when he complains about the lack of coverage for JC teams having great seasons that go unnoticed. I would like to apologize.

I would feel much more upset if I only spent an hour a week down at the office, but I spend on the average seven hours a week fighting with the new computer system the Juniatian swithched over too, which I again was thrust in charge of. Now you might be saying that if you don't like it quit. I would gladly step down, allthough it would not help matters any, and I don't want to leave Mike in the cold any more than I was when I first started.

Steve wanted to vent his frustration, and I'm glad that he did. I'm sorry that he didn't get a fight from me, but I have to agree with him. I only wish that people who do have a gripe with the paper would take the time to come down and see what we do. It really doesn't take much to write an article.

I would rather not print any sports in comparison to the lopsided coverage we have had.

Lady Indians Win NCAA Division III E. Regionals – Advance To Final Four

By Tom Hunt

This past weekend, the Juniata College women's volleyball team played host to the Eastern Regional of the NCAA Division III volleyball championship. And the Lady Indians turned into rude host as they thumped two New York schools, Cortland State and Albany State, to gain a second consencutive bearth in the Division III Final Four.

The Regional play began Thursday with two first round matches, one between Cortland State and Grove City, and the other between Eastern Connecticut State and MAC rival, Elizabethtown College. The survivors of those two matches were two meet Juniata and Albany State who received first round byes due to their seasonal records and rankings. Cortland State down 0-2 in games, stormed back with 3 straight victories over Grove City to advance to the 2cd round. In the nightcap, Eastern Connecticut State earned a spot in the 2cd round with a victory over Elizbethtown.

After the results of Thursdays matches, the Regional semi-finals were set with Albany State versus ECSU and Cortland State versus our own Juniata Indians. The Albany State Great Danes won the opening match Friday over a smaller ECSU squad by the scores 15-6, 15-13, 14-16, and 15-9. In the late game, the Lady Indians whipped Cortland State 3-0 to advance to the Regional final. The tribes attack took all of 43 minutes to complete. Game one lasted a grand total of 9 minutes, including two Cortland State timeouts, before a Diana Hauger serve capped the 15-4 win. In the middle game, Juniata jumped out to a 7-0 lead enroute to a 15-7 triumph. The 15-7 finale featured power play from JC's outside tandem of Sophomores Heather Pruim and Jackie Rebert. Rebert cranked out 12 kills for the match with Pruim contributing another 10. The best all-round performance came from Jr. middle blocker Cathy Miller, who registered 6 kills, 5 blocks, and 4 ace serves.

This set up what appeared to be a great match up on paper for Saturday's Finals. The Great Danes of Albany State with a flashy 44-2 record were the 7th ranked team in the nation, facing the 9th ranked Juniata Indians, who had won 36 games going into the match. But the great match never materialized as the Lady Indians hammered out a convincing 3-0 win, much to the delight of the partison Memorial Gymnasium crowd.

Garbage was the game plan of the New York team not Shetzz chili dogs but garbage in the form, of dinks and slow-motion spikes. And the garbage was hitting pay-dirt as Albany led for the majority of the first game. But the tenacious Lady Indians, sparked by great defensive play from Dana Worthington, Lori Snow, and Jackie Rebert came from behind to grab the first game, 15-13.

In game two it was Albany's turn to mount a comeback. Setter Beth Hoppel's six consecutive service points promted the Albany coach to call a timeout. The lead was maintained at six after each team scored three points. But the Great Danes, whose starting team averaged nearly 5'10", began to find the holes in the JC defense and took a 11-0 lead. Once again, the Lady spikers picked up the tempo and gave up only one more point before winning 15-12.

Juniata, with the confidence of a 2-0 lead in games, scorched the opposition with vicious kills and wall-like blocks in taking a 12-5 lead in game 3. There the steamrolling stalled for a bit. Each team began answering the other's action. An Albany spike would gain a sideout; a Rhonda Bygall block would return the ball to JC. Finally, Albany scored two points. Those two were answered by Juniata. At 14-7, Cathy Miller served the clinching point, which Heather Pruim scored off an Albany block to give the Lady Indians game 3 and the match.

The offense was again dominated by outside hitters Heather Pruim and Jackie Rebert. Pruim scored 15 kills in the title match, while Rebert had an additional 14 kills. Cathy Miller topped a brilliant weekend with 8 blocks and five ace serves. Wednesday the team travels to Calvin College in Grand Rapids, Michigan for the Final Four. As the fourth seed, the Lady Indians must face the number-one seed, University of California San Diego in Friday's openioning match. The winner of the JC-UCSD match will face the winner of the host team Calvin College and University of Wisconsin at Lacrosse for the National championship. Good luck to the team in its quest for a first ever National Championship.

Have Another Day!

The JUNIATIAN

Vol. XXXVIII, No. 12 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | December 11, 1986

Barb Carlisle, Alan Mock, Laura Dickinson, John Galiot, Mike Fonk, Danielle Hippeli, Alice Guyton enjoy the Christmas atmosphere of Juniata's traditional, Madrigal Dinner.

President Neff Announces Land Donation

Dr. Robert W. Neff, president, announced a gift to Juniata College of land valued at more than $260,000. The real estate, some 275 acres is located in Henderson Township, near Raystown Lake, Huntingdon County. It was donated by Dr. Harold B. Brumbaugh, a 1933 graduate and vice president emeritus of the college.

"Dr. Brumbaugh's gift is a generous addition to the college," remarked Dr. Neff. "It is a legacy to Juniata that is representative of the dedication that Harold Brumbaugh has given for more than half a century."

The Brumbaugh gift will be used to establish two special programs; the Harold B. Brumbaugh Scholarship, which will assist worthy students attending Juniata; and the Harold B. Brumbaugh Endowment for the Arts, which will help to acquire artwork for the college and will also support the performing arts at Juniata.

The benefaction is part of Juniata's $20 million Century II Campaign, which has a current emphasis on acquiring funds for scholarship endowment, teaching equipment and endowment for academic support and enrichment.

Dr. Brumbaugh had been associated with Juniata since 1936, retiring in 1976 as vice president for college relations. He has been cited by the college's National Alumni Association for his service to Juniata and in 1976 was awarded an honorary L.H.D. degree. He was appointed to Juniata's Board of Trustees in 1979.

Currently serving as curator of Juniat's museum, Dr. Brumbaugh is a consultant to Gateway Travel Agency, Inc., Huntingdon. He was first president of the Huntingdon County Tourist Promotion Agency and has also served as a director and past president of the Huntingdon County United Fund, president of the Rotary Club of Huntingdon, and a trustee of both the Huntingdon County Library and Huntingdon County Historical Society. He is an active member of Stone Church of the Brethren, Huntingdon, and has served the Church of the Brethren at both district and national levels.

Holy Visions!

Families desiring to keep a holy part to their Christmas holiday activities should plan to visit "Visions of the Word," an 85-piece collection of art involving scenes and texts from the Bible, at Juniata College.

On display in the college's Shoemaker Galleries, 17th and Moore Sts., Huntingdon, "Visions of the Word" features original etchings, engravings, woodcuts and lithographs by artists such as Rembrandt, Chagall, Durer and Kokschka. More than a dozen of these art works deal with nativity scenes and such subjects as the adoration of the shepherds, the Madonna and Child, and the Annunciation.

According to Dr. Robert E. Wagoner, exhibit coordinator, "The impressive fact about Christian art is its continuing vitality. There have been many visions of the word in Christian history. No one vision seems complete or final and every generation must come to its own."

The collection, which was made possible through loans from galleries in New York, Boston, Philadelphia and London, England, will be on exhibit through Dec. 19. The galleries are open Monday through Saturday from 1-4:30 p.m. The college will gladly accept appointments for special viewings of the collection by groups or individuals who cannot visit the galleries during regular hours.

The public is cordially invited to view this unique assembly of art which is sponsored by Juniata's J. Omar Good Fund and honors the college's new president Dr. Robert W. Neff, an Old Testament scholar and former professor of biblical studies.

Welcome Aboard, Mrs. Cherry!

by Alayne Unterberger

If you see Mrs. Cherry, congratulate her. Beginning January 1, 1987, she will serve as the Interim Associate Dean of Student Services. She will occupy this position through June 30, 1987, giving the college the opportunity to "buy time" in the search for a full time person for the position.

Although the college did advertise in the Fall, it received only limited responses, and none of the candidates were right for the position. According to Dean Tilden, there will be more advertisements sent out and the college will do some recruiting at a national convention later in the year.

The college has already begun reconstructing things within Residential Life, and Mrs. Cherry's position is part of the process. As Dean Tilden stated, "One of the things we want to stress is that we're not looking at this as Mrs. Cherry replacing Julie." In keeping with the "remodeled" position, Mrs. Cherry will be assuming different titles and responsibilites. She will be a busy woman in the coming months. As well as continuing as an academic advisor, she will also instruct Medeival Mind, even though her teaching course load has been lightened.

Mrs. Cherry's new position requires that she work with the residence hall programs, but not in the same way or involving the same tasks that Julie Keehner had. She will be active with the Staff Development Committee, in monitoring the Hall of the Year competition, in overseeing the Notice of Concern system, in helping to co-ordinate Summer Orientation, and in assisting with the R.A. selection process. Although all this won't leave her with much time, she'll also serve as advisor to the Woman's Action Committee.

Mrs. Cherry was selected for the position for a number of reasons, according to Dean Tilden. She is popular with the students and the administration alike, and is well respected by both groups. As an academic advisor, she works well with the students, which was a big consideration in her selection, due to the active part she will play in training the Residential Life Staff.

Dean Tilden stressed that Mrs. Cherry is not Ms. Keehner's replacement. "Comparisons would be unfair to Ms. Keehner, Mrs. Cherry and the Student Service Department. They are both highly skilled women, with different skills. We want to take advantage of Mrs. Cherry's skills." Welcome aboard, Mrs. Cherry!

'Tis the Season

Christmas is my favorite time of the year! I love the colors and the music and the television specials and the food and, of course, the presents. Probably the best part of the Christmas season is that everything you enjoy doing so much - you can do again next year. I guess that is what enhances any tradition - it's ability to last.

Tradition is especially lasting here at Juniata College. As I sat through my last Madrigal Dinner, I realized what an expression of unity our college showed as we sat there praying together, singing together, and dining together. We were all there, to take part in a "part" of Juniata College. I was really touched to be there with my table of friends, with my dearest friends and with my fellow students.

Tradition is what makes our college different from any other. We, as students, will always share these traditions, and during the holidays when everything dear to you becomes even dearer, I think there is no better symbol of how dear Juniata College is to all of us than celebrating at Madrigal.

by Sue Mitchell & Glen Rowe

Twas the night before finals when all through the college,
Every student was cramming that last bit of knowledge.
The books were flung off the desk with no care,
Making room for the student glued to his chair.
He marched through his notes, stuffing his head,
He thought to himself he'd rather be dead. . . ..

At 4 a.m. he decides on a nap,
And he falls into bed totally zapped.
One minute goes by and he's sleeping so sound,
But the thoughts of failing soon bring him around.
So back to the desk, he staggers on,
Through Bio., Chem., Calc., and Econ.,

In the midst of the silence there arose such a clatter,
That he sprang from his chair to see what was the matter.
As he looked out his dorm, he stood there in awe,
All the staff and Profs of J.C. was who he saw.
They had gathered together to rate each others' tests,
The one that was toughest would be chosen as best.

They formed a long line to the the podium they trudged,
To give Tilden and deans their tests to be judged.
"Too easy" "Too short" "No true or false please"
"We want them to sweat and fall to their knees"
"We want a test to be so down right tough,
That they'll moan and groan that they've had enough."
"Excellent Lewis! Great job there Cherry,"
"These tests are nasty and to say the least hairy."
So with pats on the back, some jokes and laughter too,
The group dispersed chanting,"Students, we'll get you!"

Up in the window sat the student dismayed,
"Is there no hope? God help me I pray!"
But through his cries of sorrow pierced a buzzer like scream.
He awoke to the alarm, it had all been a dream.
Relieved from the nightmare he lay there content,
Till he noticed the time and to him what it meant.
Out the door he flew in a state of shock,
His final was 8:30, it was now nine o'clock.

Counselor's Corner

by Dr. Jay D. Buchanan

As we come to the end of the first-ever semester (at least for current JC students) and as we near the end of the 1986 year, allow me to share some observations not so much in terms of what has already happened, but rather what we can do to make things happen in the future.

The end-of-the-year and the-end-of-the semester are traditionally accompanied by resolution-making thoughts and behaviors. We say to ourselves that next time around things are going to be different! Statements like "I am going to class more regularly", "I am going to start off on the right foot this time", and "I am not going to let my work pile up" are familiar to many of us.

How can we internalize these behaviors and not merely verbalize them? The world is full of well-intentioned people. Let's examine some ways to put our good intentions into action.

* Set goals for yourself. Sit down and think about some realistic, attainable, and important changes that you want to make. Commit your goals to paper as a way of maximizing their attainment.

* Devise specific strategies to achieve your goals. We have to do more than just say we want to do something. We have to use reinforcement techniques. Reward yourself for having engaged in a desirable behavior.

* Utilize all the resources available to you. We don't have to work on these goals alone. Juniata places tremendous demands on us and we can learn to call upon professors, advisors, and others students to help us realize positive change.

* Keep things in perspective. Unfortunately, many of us operate from the extreme ends of the continuum, that is we take things too seriously or too lightly. We would do well to find a happy medium. Remember, "failure is not fatal and success is not final."

* Be good to yourself and take care of all aspects of your being. The social, academic, personal, spiritual, and physical needs that we all have must be attended to regularly.

Finally, the Counselor's Corner wishes all a successful exam period, a joyous holiday season with family and friends, and a relaxing break between semesters.

"Merry" Christmas Concert

If you were looking for a fun way to find the Christmas spirit, the Music Department at Juniata College suggested that the best way to get "merry" was by going to its Christmas Concert held on Tuesday, Dec. 9.

When the curtain was raised at 8:15 p.m. in the Oller Hall Auditorium, the 46-voice Juniata Concert Choir opened the evening with a selection of traditional Christmas music which ranged from a double-choir piece by Palestrina to arrangements of such well-known carols as "Bring A Torch Jeanette, Isabella," "Wassail Song" and "I Saw Three Ships."

The highly selective and very talented Concert Choir performed its segment of the program a capella (without accompaniment).

Following intermission the Concert Choir was joined by a dozen or more students and 66 college/com-

Student Government Minutes

The Student Government meeting began promptly at 8:30 p.m. on Wednesday evening. President Danielle Rupp opened the meeting by introducing Maria Tweardy. She will be our new Assistant Treasurer. She was recommended to us by the Business Department for being an above average accounting student. She will assist Treasurer, Jay Moreau in the planning of the budget and in other areas associated with the treasury. Eventually Maria will become the Treasurer for Student Government.

Next discussed was the Student Government Used Bookstore. You may drop books off in the Student Government office during your lunch hour of finals week. The Used Book Store will be held the first week of the new semester. Books may also be dropped off then.

Also brought up for discussion were the prices of the vending machines in the residence halls. It was thought that if prices were raised an additional $.05 that nicer machines could be installed, ones with a better selection to choose from.

President Neff then addressed the group on the idea of Strategic Planning . He asked us if we would nominate individuals who would be effective and play an active role on a committee made up of administrators and one student. This committee would look into areas, important for the future of Juniata College. These areas being ones, that would be of importance to the enhancement of this institution.

The meeting adjourned at 9:15 p.m. The next meeting is scheduled for late January

Why Students Voted for Reagan

by Andrea Romano

In the 1984 election, President Reagan had the highest percent of votes among college students. This came as a surprise since his platform called for a federal budget cut in student aid.

The irony of his popularity among students is the subject of this article. Why did so many students vote for Reagan with their knowledge of his conservative domestic policies?

These questions can be answered right here at Juniata College. Three students were asked why they voted for Reagan based on these premises.

Scott Stephenson is a senior at the college. Curt Collins and Melissa Barbor are juniors. They voted for Reagan in the 1984 election.

When asked if he was fully aware of Reagan's budget cuts in higher education, Stephenson said not fully. He had not realized the large scope of the cuts. He, however, was not affected by them since his education at Juniata does not depend on federal aid.

He was asked what parts of the platform pleased him. He liked the economic policies, "It appealed to me as a white, middle-class American, as a platform or opportunity." He did note that maybe not all segments of society benefited as he did.

He said he was more of a moderate than a conservative and he thought the aid cuts were very negative. "Education is the key to success." He believed that other areas may be hurt. Lower enrollment in colleges and universities will mean less skilled workers.

When asked if he saw other departments of the government benefiting from the cuts in education, he said the defense department will benefit. Did he think this sector held a greater value than education? He said, "No, all have necessary provisions."

He does not agree with Reagan's social views. He voted for him because of the economic domestic policies that benefited him.

Curt Collins said he knew of the aid cuts before he voted for Reagan. Since then he has not felt a pinch in his own financial aid at Juniata.

What other part of Reagan's platform pleased him then? Curt said, "His support of a highly military budget." He further agrees with his conservative foreign policy since he considers himself a conservative.

He stated he agrees with his aid cuts in education to a point because he agrees with the other platform issues. He feels some things must be sacrificed and education aid is obviously one of them.

He said he saw other departments, like defense, benefiting. He considers this sector more important because, "Our safety against nuclear war is more important than some federal programs." There are other ways of funding your education through state aid and private scholarships.

Because of his conservatism, he likes Reagan's help in taxes to the middle and upper-class. He sees these tax changes through a liberal's eyes as being unfair. He however does not think they are really unfair because all classes will be treated equal "all across the board." The lower class will not be given any special treatment with the new tax policy.

Melissa Barbor said she was also fully aware of Reagan's budget cuts but she does not depend of financial aid to attend Juniata.

She thinks his defense policy has benefitted from this aid cut but certainly not his domestic policies.

As a conservative, Melissa stated that, "all sectors of society must take cuts to get the economy back on its feet." At least some aid went toward agriculture and farm aid. However most went towards defense and this should is predominant. "Education should not be limited to those who can afford it but these other departments are very important."

She said she has changed her attitude toward Reagan since the '84 elections, but overall she still agrees with him. Her point of view is that the time period has changed since the beginning of the 80s when Reagan gained status. He sees that we need defense now most of all so that the whole nation can benefit.

Here is a better understanding of why students at Juniata voted for Reagan. Juniata is a conservative institution whose tuition requires a middle to upper-class enrollment. Reagan has many supporters of his conservative policies, foreign and domestic, on our campus.

J.C. at Pool Tournament

by Lee Abramovitz

Juniata sent a team of two men and two women to Penn State to compete in an eight-ball pool tournament on Saturday Novemeber 1. Three teams from Bloomsburg University and five teams from PSU were also present at the tournament.

The Juniata team consisted of sophomore Lee Abramovitz, senior Deb Little, and freshmen Joe Maggio and Sarah Varner. Juniata team highlights included some individual wins, a men's double win and a dramatic win in a tie breaker against a Bloomsburg team. In the one highlight Maggio and Abramovitz beat the favored first-ranked Penn State team in their doubles match.

Another highlight was the result of a tie with the Bloomsburg team after individual and doubles' matches. In the tie breaker, Abramovitz and Little were pitted against Bloomsburg's Male/Female doubles team. The tie breaking game came down to the 8-ball being the only ball left on the table.

The first shot on the 8-ball was made by the BSU male but his shot missed then, after two rounds of safties, Abramovitz made a cross-side bank shot that won the game.

"The tournament was long. . .8 hours, but we enjoyed ourselves," Abramovitz said. "Our main objective was to have fun and to get ideas for the Recreation Committee, though the wins did add to the enjoyment."

The Recreation Committee is a new committee in which Abramovitz is the chair person. It is sponsored by Center Board and will facilitate such games as chess, backgammon, pool, table soccer, table tennis, and others. Though the availability of these games will be on a recreational and intramural level first, inter-collegiate competition is a possibility in the future.

Future tournaments at Penn State are planned but the exact dates are not known. If there is interest in this or any other part of the Recreation Committee, Lee Abramovitz can be contacted at 643-9864 or P.O. Box 2.

unity vocalists to form the 124-oice Juniata Choral Union, which erformed George Frideric Handl's "Messiah," The singers, who resented the traditional ristmas segment (Part I) of Messiah," were accompanied by 21-piece College-Community Orestra comprised of instrumenlists from the Altoona, State llege and Huntingdon areas ong with Philadelphia.

Dr. Joseph W. Figg, assistant professor of music and director of choral music, conducted both portions of the Christmas concert. He emphasized that Juniata's production of "Messiah" was unique in that it followed the original baroque versions, using original Handel orchestrations and arrangements for soloists. The tempo of the pieces were somewhat faster than contemporary performances, and were closer to those used in Handel's time.

Girls Hoops at 2-2

by Andrea Zavod

In the upcoming home stand of the 1986-87 Basketball season, the Lady Indians played four games, three in six days and finished last week with a commendable 2-2 record.

With only three returning letter winners, the girls look to the strong inside game of 5'7" junior, Sue Grubb and 5'9" sophomore Sue Lockawich. Team captain senior Paula Hillegass controls the back court at a guard position.

The girls opened the home stand on November 25 against non-conference Thiel. Though plaqued with forty turnovers in an 87-54 loss, there were some bright spots for the lady Indians. Hillegass, Hoffman, and Lockawich scored in double figures and Hillegass and Lockawich led the Indians with 8 rebounds a piece. Grubb paced the defence with five blocked shots.

In their first conference game, on December 1, Juniata faced conference favorite Elizabethtown. The Blue Jays full court pressure again caused Juniata to commit costly turnovers as E-town defeated the Indians 78-42. Grubb was the lone bright spot with 15 points, 9 steals and 3 assists.

Juniata's first win came two nights later with a 69-59 victory over the Lycoming Warriors. Hoffman led the Indians with 26 points and Grubb dominated the boards with 18 rebounds and 13 points. Senior Alison Kellock also contributed in double figures with 12 points and aided the defense with 4 steals.

The Indians were forced to shut down the strong inside game of former teammate Karen Ramm, who finished the game with 15 rebounds and 13 points.

This past Saturday night the Indians up-ed their record to 2-1 in the MAC's with a 57-51 victory over the lady Falcons of Messiah. Hoffman led three Indians in double figures with 13 points. The Indians jumped out to a big 1st half lead only to see it dwindle in the second half when point guard Hoffman left the game with four personal fouls. The full court pressure of Messiah was only slowed when Hoffman returned to the game with 5 minutes remaining, to preserve a Juniata victory.

Last night the Indians traveled to Selinsgrove to play a key conference game against Susquehanna.

Girls V-Ball

Three Juniata College volleyball players recently earned Middle Atlantic Conference honors.

Beth Hoppel, Cathy Miller, and Jackie Rebert were named to the MAC first team.

Hoppel is a junior setter for the Indians. She earned CVCA/Russell All-America honors and GTE/CO-SIDA Academic All-America District II honors earlier this year. A 1984 graduate of Bishop McCort High School, she is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Hoppel of Johnstown.

Miller dominated the middle for the Indians this year. A 5'10 junior blocker, she anchored the Tribe's defense. A 1984 graduate of Cambria Heights, she is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Miller of St. Benedict.

Sophomore Jackie Rebert is a 1985 graduate of Spring Grove High School. The team's leading hitter in 1986, this is her first time on the All-Conference team. The 5'7 outside hitter is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Dale Rebert of Spring Grove.

The Indians finished their season with a 38-10 mark, earning a trip to the NCAA Final Four tournament after capturing the NCAA Eastern Regional tournaments. They finished fourth in the nation following a trip to Nationals in Grand Rapids, Michigan.

Wrestling Tourney

The Juniata College wrestling squad opened their 1986 season on December 5 at the Lebanon Valley Invitational with several experienced veterans returning.

"We have several wrestlers returning to the starting line-up, however the key to our season will be how healthy we can stay," said Head Coach William Berrier, starting his 27th season.

Top returners include Dave Cooper, at the 158 weight class, who compiled an 11-8 mark last year and John Swanson, a 142 pounder with a record of 9-8 from last year. Berrier also expects Erik Olson, a 150 lb. senior, to do well this year.

Other returners from last year's 2-8 season to the line up will be sophomore Russ Tschopps in the unlimited class, Larry Krizner, a junior at 190, Tim Crowley, a sophomore, Lee Abromovitz, a sophomore at the 177 mark, sophomore Tom Marte at 167 and Rich Hoag in the 118 weight class.

According to Berrier they will have to forfeit matchups at the 126 weight class and 134 weight class early in the season. However, newcomer Bill Price from Meyersdale should help them at the 134 spot. Price is currently recovering from knee surgery and is expected to be ready by mid-December.

"We don't have a lot of people out for the squad, which is disappointing because there are several excellent wrestlers on this campus who just decided not to wrestle. Since our numbers are low we have to stay healthy. We have some good talent and should be competitive if we stay healthy," Berrier added.

Football All MAC

Several Juniata College football players earned Middle Atlantic Conference honors for their performance during the Indians recent 9-2 campaign.

Selections were made by the ten MAC coaches during a league meeting in Lancaster recently.

Senior offensive tackle Steve Yerger, 6'2, 250 from Sinking Springs, senior linebacker Bob Crossey, 5'11, 200 from Verona and junior free safety Mark Dorner, 6'2, 200, from Bedford were awarded first team berths.

On the honorable mention list were senior offensive guard Bill Synder, 6'0, 215, Etters, senior defensive end Tom Kalinyak, 6'2, 225, Ebensburg, junior defensive tackle Tom Yeager, 5'11, 250, Lewistown and sophomore receiver Jim Metz, 6'0, 205, Medford, NJ.

Rondo's Roll

by Tom Kelley

The Rolling Rondo's completed an undefeated championship season by defeating the Soft Ballers by a score of 11-7.

Leading the "weigh" for the Rolling Rondo's was captain and pitching ace Ron Hersh. Hersh compiled a 9 and 0 record in as many outings. One casual observer was quoted as saying. "Hersh puts more mustard on that ball than on a foot long hotdog.

Supporting Hersh was an array of offensive and defensive specialists. Leading the hitting attack were George "the Greek" Zanic and power hitters Alan Reyes and Chris Williams. Defensively, the infield resembled nothing short of high powered vacuum cleaners with Steve Meeker at shortstop, Jim Tomesetti at third, Greek at second, and Williams at first. The outfield was covered by Frank Briner, Vince Anselmo, and Tom Kelley. It is said that two-thirds of the world is covered by water and the other third by these three gentlemen. Coming off the bench in key situations were sluggers Edeye and Mike Macintyre and defensive specialists John Lynn and Tom Marte.

The Rolling Rondos would like to thank all their faithful athletic supporters. Without your support, the season would not have been the same.

Oiler Honored

Amy Oiler, a sophomore on the Juniata College field hockey squad, earned Middle Atlantic All-Conference honors for her performance during the 1986 season.

Oiler, one of the Tribe's leading scorers, was selected by coaches in the Middle Atlantic Conference.

Yerger Awarded Honor Div. III All-American

The American Football Coaches Association (AFCA) named Steve Yerger, an offensive lineman at Juniata College, to the Kodak All-America Team for the College Division III.

The College Division II squad represents the best from NCAA Division III and NAIA Division II colleges and universities. Bill Manlove of Widener University chaired the selection committee for the division.

Yerger, a 6'2, 250 lb. senior has been a four year starter for the Indians. Earlier this fall he earned Middle Atlantic Conference honors for his outstanding performance as a lineman.

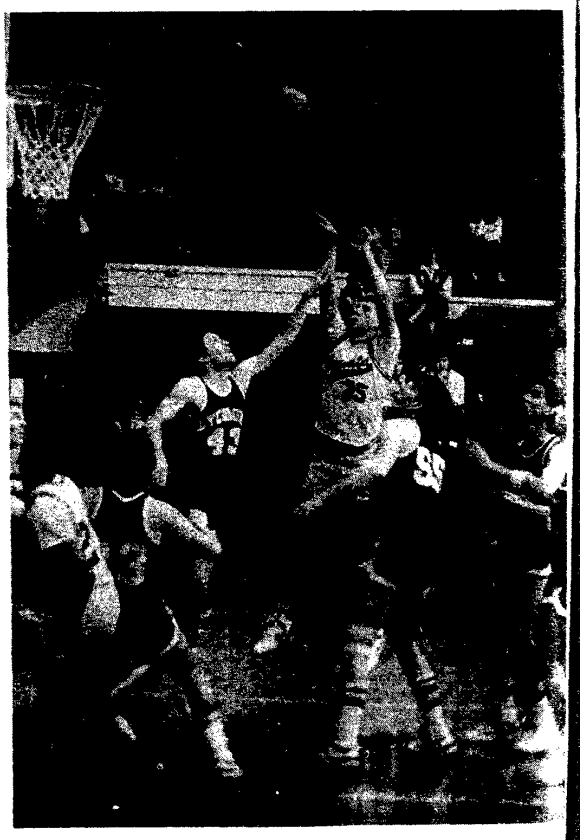
"I was really surprised by this award. Our team worked very hard this year and it paid off—we had a good season. The only way it could have been better is if we won the M.A.C. championship. I owe a lot to offensive line coach John Shonewolf and my high school coach Jon Gurski, as well as Juniata's head coach Rob Ash," said Yerger.

"My family is really important to me. They've supported me enthusiastically through all of my football endeavors. Their support has meant a lot to me," Yerger added.

"This is a tremendous honor for Steve. It's nice to see him get this kindof recognition because he works so hard as a lineman. I'm really happy for him," said head coach Rob Ash.

The Indian squad finished their 1986 season with a 9-2 mark to earn them the second place spot in the Middle Atlantic Conference.

Other players named to this year's team included: Mark Kent, WR, University of the South; Wayne Ralph, WR, Whitworth; Joe Gilbert, OL, Hamilton; Jeff Leonard, OL, Centre; John Packett, OL, Washington & Lee; Gerry Meyer, OL, Dayton; Jon Pinnick, QB, Hanover; Sandy Rogers, RB, Emory & Henry; Joe Brinson, RB, St. Mary of the Plains; Christian Okoye, RB, Azusa Pacific; Jimmy Hondroulis, PK, Hampden-Sydney; Charles Stinson, DL, Wagner; Bob Patz, DL, Tufts; Tom Kress, DL, Salisbury State; Dan Zakashefski, DL, Montclair State; Lynn Thomsen, DL, Augustana (ILL); Joe Keaney, LB, Westminster, Roger Glover, LB, Georgia Southwestern; Marcus Wooley, LB, Frostburg State; Brian Verdone, DB, Hobart; Mike Hintz, DB, Wisconsin-Plateville; Eric Bray, DB, Farleigh-Dickinson Madison; Tom Salamone, P, Hofstra.



Senior center Chris Frew takes a shot from inside the key against Lycoming. The Indians lost to the warriors and E-town earlier in the week but bounced back against Messiah on Saturday.

Dean Tilden Appointed to New Office

Dr. Robert W. Neff, president, announced the appointment of Dr. Arnold J. Tilden,Jr., as vice president for educational planning and student services at Juniata College.

According to Dr. Neff, the purpose of the new position is to coordinate and give guidance to the strategic planning process at Juniata. "We want to be able to take into account the rapidly changing external environment so that we can use the college's strengths to continue to position ourselves in that environment," explained Dr. Neff.

He continued, "We also want to be better equipped to take advantage of and plan for new opportunities in the educational community. For example, we will need to stay on top of current situations like the increased need for educators, changes in the health care field and developing in our students an appreciation for their global citizenry."

The planning process is not new to Juniata. However, in this newly-instituted mode Dr. Neff is calling upon all members of the college community to view themselves as planners - in that they continue to seek out ways in which Juniata can better position itself in the market.

The significance of the strategic planning process has been underscored by the naming of Dr. Tilden to the planning post. Dr. Tilden had formerly served as vice president and dean of student services. There will be a realignment in the Student Services Office to account for his job change and Juniata will plan to seek a new dean of students in the spring to take over the day to day responsibilities in the student services area.

Dr. Neff noted, "This new post capitalizes on Dr. Tilden's interests and skills in institutional research and planning." Dr. Tilden has been active in retention studies and his doctoral dissertation centered on psychological testing. In addition, the vice president is a member of Juniata's Psychology Department and teaches a course on psychological testing and measurements.

Juniata is following a model for which has been adopted by forward looking institutions of higher education. This design was set forth by George Keller in his book, "Academic Strategy." The strategic planning process will also help Juniata to prepare for an upcoming accreditation review.

In addition to announcing the appointment of the planning officer, Dr. Neff also named three committees which have been formed to assist in the planning process:

Mission Statement—Dr. Mark R. Hochberg, chair; Janet R. Lewis R. Lewis, Dr. Ronald L. Cherry, Dr. M. Andrew Murray, William R. Alexander, and Jodie Monger.

External Assessment—Dr. Norman E. Siems, chair; F. Robert Reilly, Kay E. Stephenson, Dr. Clayton N. Pheasant, Richard W. Phalunas, Jr., and Dan Stambaugh.

Internal Assessment—Dr. Ruth E. Reed, chair; Dr. James Lakso, Dr. Joseph V. Stewart, John D. Jones, and Lisa Traupman.

These committees include faculty, administrative and student representatives. They will begin their assignments in early January.

Dr. Tilden came to Juniata in 1977 as dean of student services. Prior to that, he served as assistant, then associate dean of students at Albright College from 1970-77.

A native of Huntingdon, NY, Dr. Tilden received his B.S. and M.Ed. degrees from St. Lawrence University and his Ed.D. from Temple University. He and his wife, the former Barbara Rae, have two daughters and reside at Huntingdon, RD 4.

Students "Journey to Juniata"

by Mike Barnett

This Sunday, February 1, 65 high school seniors from Pennsylvania, Maryland and New Jersey will "Journey to Juniata."

Back by popular demand from parents and students, Journey to Juniata is a free program for current applicants so they can spend time on campus away from their parents and learn more about Juniata in an informal environment.

The journey will begin when a chartered bus, with Juniata Admissions counselors on board, pick up the students at designated points in Philadelphia, Cherry Hill, Vineland, and Lancaster. The buses will arrive back on campus at 5:30 p.m. Sunday night. The seniors will then meet their hosts (members of JCAA or tour guides). Michelle Bartol, Assistant Director of Admissions, says she is always amazed at how relaxed most seniors are about coming to Juniata and then staying with a college student they do not know.

Following a pizza party, the students will be involved in a roundtable discussion with professors from Humanities, Natural and Social Sciences. According to Bartol, the following professors will participate: Prof. Christopher Peterson, Dr. Richard Hunter, Dr. Donald Mitchell, Prof. Betty Ann Cherry, Dr. Norman Siems, Prof. Robert Reilly, Dr. Ruth Reed, Dr. Earl Kaylor, and Dr. Duane Stroman.

Bartol then encourages Juniata students to come to the Kennedy Sports+Recreation Center or individual residence halls for organized recreation and activities with the high school seniors.

The following morning the seniors will be attending classes.

Fire Breaks Out In Sherwood

A fire broke out in a third floor room of Sherwood Residence Hall Monday morning at approximately 12:15 a.m.

The fire originated near the dresser area of Room 307. Residents on the floor smelled smoke and alerted two Resident Assistants, Jim Smith and Lester Dupes. Smith and Dupes went into the room, awakened the resident in the room, got him out of the room, and used fire extinguishers to contain the fire until area fire fighters arrived.Fire fighters were then able to put out the blaze before it spread beyond the room.

As the fire alarms went off, college security officer Robert Klippert helped to evacuate the building and radioed the fire department."Evacuation went very well from what I understand," commented Randall Deike, Director of Housing.

Deike, having arrived at the scene around 1 a.m., commended the Sherwood residents and RA's for their immediate action."We were lucky that students and RA's were on top of the situation and the alarms and extinguishers worked effectively."

The room's resident, Smith, and Dupes were treated for smoke inhalation and released early Monday morning.

The cause of the fire is yet undetermined, however, according to Deike, further investigation will be conducted.

Editorial

Send Help . . . Please . . .

Well here I am again, struggling to write an editorial for another week. There are tons of things I could, and should, be doing, like reading assignments, watching A.L.F, socializing, but like every other Monday night the Juniatian staff is trapped in the basement of Ellis like some Alfred Hitchcock flick.

To some of you, the Juniatian is something that litters the halls of Ellis every Thursday afternoon, to some of you it is something to look through while you wait to get into Baker and to some of you it is a responsibility. To too many of you it is something to ridicule, (and you know who you are!)

But don't get me wrong — I can give up Monday Night Football, Cora and Ed's 25 cent draft's and I can even give up A.L.F. and I'll be down here next Monday night and the Monday night after that and so on. . .

Please feel free to join us in our crusade to bring campus all the news we will take anything from articles to letters to advertisements and all help is more appreciated than you could ever imagine.

$ Dollars & Sense $

by Larry Bock

The last installment of this column introduced the Higher Education Amendments of 1986 and their effect on the Guaranteed Student Loan Program. To summarize, there are four major changes to GSLs, all effective 1/1/87:

Higher amounts available ($2625.00 for Freshman and Sophomores; $4000.00 for Juniors and Seniors).

Needs Analysis (FAF or PHEAA Grant Application) required to determine eligibility for GSL.

All approved GSL monies must fit within the need determined by the FAF or PHEAA Grant Application.

Rate increases for first time borrowers during the fifth year of repayment.

Another aspect of the "Reauthorization of the Higher Education Act" that will impact some of our students concerns dependency status determination. Each year our Financial Aid Office receives many inquiries from students about "declaring" themselves independent from their parents to increase financial aid eligibility. The ground rules were stringent. . .now they're even tougher. For a student to be considered independent for aid purposes he/she must:
Be at least 24 years old by January 1st of the award year or
Be a veteran of the U.S. Armed Services or
Be an orphan or a ward of the Court or
Have dependent children of their own or
Have not been claimed as income tax exemptions for the previous two calendar years and can show minimum $4000.00/year incomes for the previous two calendar years or
Be married and not claimed by a parent as a tax exemption.

The overall effect of the GSL and dependency status provisions will be that fewer Juniata Students will be eligible for aid programs. In many cases though students may be receiving more aid with increased GSLs and Pell Grants. The most important things to remember are to apply for financial aid on a timely basis (by 5/1) and talk with us at 208 Founders when you run into problems.

Who's Who List Is Released

by Lois Buchanan

The names of the following students from Juniata College will appear in the 1987 edition of "Who's Who Among Students in American Universities and Colleges":
Stephen G. Meeker, Mariella M. Gacka, Danielle M. Rupp, Randall Schmidt, Deborah L. Little, Douglas M. Yokoyama, Karen A. Reap, Rebecca M. Olson, Lisa A. Traupman, Louis M. Komer, Lori L. Bason, Steven A. Camarota, Lisa L. Leininger, Jennifer L. Nicholson, Richard S. Brnich, Jerome J. Dvorak, Laura M. Singel, Scott R. Stephenson, Ian T. Malee, Laura-lee A. Snyder, William R. Hinchman, Margaret R. Gonglewski, Gregory S. St. Clair, Sherri S. Reed, Martha E. Kuder, Margaret J. Peterson, Ann M. Cameron, Jodie E. Monger, Marjorie J. Risser, Shelly J. Guest, Pamela High, Jill M. Wineka.

"Who's Who" is a volume honoring students selected as outstanding campus leaders by their college or university.

Students whose names appear in "Who's Who" receive a number of benefits from the honor. In addition to receiving a certificate from their college or university and local and national publicity, these students are entitled to lifetime access to the "Who's Who" Reference Service. This service supplies letters of recommendation to student members and provides prospective employers with these students' biographical information.

Juniata Rushes Fraternity

by Lynn Merritt

Juniata College will soon take part in its first fraternity rush. For one month, Phi Chi Theta, the college's honorary business fraternity, will conduct pledging to increase its membership.

The New Membership Committee, consisting of chairperson, Phil Vollmer, co-chairperson, Kathy Nicholson, and six other members, will encourage people to join the honorary fraternity. They hope to do this through informational posters and speaking to each business class.

A mandatory meeting was held for all interested pledges on Tuesday, January 27. The meeting answered any questions,gave more information and added insight into the Phi Chi Theta fraternity. The pledges must perform a few simple tasks like getting acquainted with a percentage of the present members and cleaning up after a social gathering, but absolutely no hazing will take place.

Phi Chi Theta provides opportunity for business students to apply what they have learned in class, learn from practical experience-,meet professors and to get contacts and exposure in the business community. Vollmer commented,"I hope that as Phi Chi Theta grows, the business department will get more and more recognition."

The induction ceremony will take place on February 27, so that the new members can participate in the election of new officers.

Counselor's Corner

by Dr. Jay D. Buchanan

A very tragic event took place last week in Harrisburg. As most of us are aware, a well-known public servant committed suicide. Not only did R. Budd Dwyer kill himself, but he did it in front of cameras and press.

Since then psychiatrists, and psychologists, and many others have attempted to analyze and explain this particular public suicide. The fact that it was public becomes a critical variable in our analysis and discussion. There are many theories associated with suicide including the argument ". . .if I am not in charge of my own life, I am not in charge of anything." Dwyer felt that he was innocent and that he was a victim of the judicial system and an unfair press.

Yet another view of suicide is that it is an attempt to punish survivors. Dr. Magnus Lakovics, a State College psychiatrist, believes that Dwyer's suicide was the act of an angry man. Lakovics suggests that perhaps what Dwyer was communicating may well have been, "Now you will feel sorry for me. Look what you did to me."

The critical point of all of this, it seems to me, is that suicide can be viewed as a social act and thus has a profound influence on the behavior of other people. Family, friends, and much of society are affected by suicide. Guilt, shame, outrage, and anger are emotions elicited by this act.

A major concern of health care professionals, including yours truly, is the extent to which others might imitate the behavior of Dwyer because of the publicity associated with it. Whether we like it or agree with it, suicide is a highly romanticized act and one that generates a great deal of attention.

Dr. Juris Draguns, a psychology professor at Penn State, hopes that the possibility of "copycat" suicides will be reduced because the press has not overly publicized and glamorized the suicide.

Letters to the Editor

Student Condemns Reactions

To the Juniata "Community":

This letter is in protest and answer to the disgusting, immature, and contemptible actions and reactions to the recent highly over-televised TV suicide of Budd Dwyer. It is aimed personally at those of us who enjoyed the incident, in some baffling sick way. The ways in which a large number of our so-called "community" handled this event scream out for protest. . . The first thing that obviously needs to be made crystal clear to all is that Budd Dwyer is dead, period. His life as we know it is over, forever. Only memories remain, and for most people the only memory is that of a gun in his mouth, on live TV, on recast News clip, and (most repulsively) on video tape. Yes, ask around campus and you will easily find perverts who video taped the whole espisode for your further viewing pleasure. People all over campus happily gathered around TV's to once again see a man end his life violently. Gleeful cries of, "They're gunna run it again!" could be heard almost every hour for TV 27's religiously consistent re-showing. Personally, I thought it was violent, but others obviously disagreed, for instance the young woman who, after viewing it in upstairs Ellis on full panoramic wide screen TV, exclaimed,"Oh, it wasn't THAT bad!" It IS that bad, you idiots. Perhaps it was not as pretty, violent, or well orchestrated as a death bout in "Rambo", but that is too bad for you because that's the best you will get, he didn't do it to entertain, he did it to awaken people. A man's life is gone, for you he may be captured as you'd like to best remember him, that is dying, but for his family and close friends, he is absolutely gone, forever. His wife will never feel his touch again, and his children will never hear his voice again, he is gone, period. That a man was driven to such lengths is disturbing, but more disturbing is the way in which many of us chose to handle it. That is, childishly, thoughtlessly, and barbariously. I know that I am not alone in these feelings, but I also expect much mindless haranguing for this, well, if some chose that route, fine, but if you agree with my view, tell your peers. When they act like total buffoons, call them on it, or be equally guilty of stupidity and small-mindedness.

Sincerely,
Sean O'Sullivan

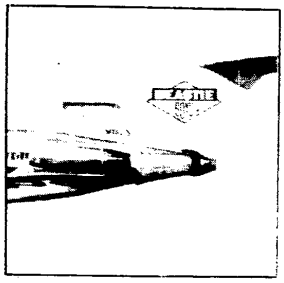
Hot Wax



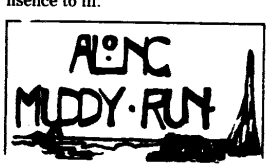
by Jeff Buehler

If you ever wanted to buy a "rap" album, this is the one you want. Lisence to Ill is the first album released by the Beastie Boys—a trio of kick-ass, tell-it-like-it-is Brooklyn natives. If you feel weak in the stomach after watching Friday the 13th (part whatever) or feel that Bonnie and Clyde didn't have any fun while they were out robbing banks, you might want to settle back to some Michael Jackson or even Whodini. "Mike-D," "MCA," and the "King Ad rock" don't pull any punches either lyrically or musically on this album.

I tend to describe their sound as "punk-rap". The Beastie Boys' music is for the most part what you would expect ftom a rap band. A little scratchim', the programmed drums, the rapid-fire vocals- these can be found throughout the 12 twelve songs on the album. So where do I get off calling yhem punk? It's their attitude that does it. The Rowdy, independently, live-for-today kind of philosophy which they carry was picked up in New York City during the late 1970s from Punk bands like the Ramones. This attitude of arrogance is best expressed through the Beastie Boys' lyrics, which are indeed quite interesting.

These guys aren't singing something like "Just say NO (to drugs)" or "Go to school and passively accept what's taught." No way. The Beastie Boys sing more about the exploits of your typical American male in his early twenties, or at least of a wild lifestyle that this person might think about. They rap about guns (their use), alcohol, running after girls (and catching them), partying and other similar topics. Some people might find such lyrics crude and in poor taste. To some extent this is true judgement, but there is also a lot of umor to be found.

So whether you are looking to blowoff, to party, or to shout along to a solid beat, the album for you is Lisence to Ill, courtesy of (without much courtesy from) the Beastie Boys. there are at least eight songs on this album which will give you a lisence to ill.



Very often I'm pleased by things that are most upsetting to other people; consequently, Juniata College overjoys me. After nearly four years of attending this prestigious learning institution, I can look around and find the most pleasing things that are in reality either miscarriages of common sense or simply impracticalities.

For instance consider $199.99. This amount could very well be the cost of a contact lens, a disc player, R. Boyer's weekly snack food allowance, or a year's supply of Pollident for Randy Deike. However, $199.99 was my bookstore bill for this semester, and needless to say, I'm now rapidly approaching the limit of my financial resources. It seems absurd that I should have to pay such an outrageous amount for merely a few hundred pages of text, but c'est la vie!

Of course there are ways to circumvent the rising cost of books. Many people offer to sell their used books. These copies are generally in fairly good condition, and if you're a smart shopper you can find some excellent bargins.

However, there are hang-ups associated with buying used books. Sometimes people try to sell you outdated editions, which can really be upsetting when you find out that everyone in the class has red books and you have a blue one. Another problem is the way people paint their books with highlighter. Now this sort of saturation may have some merit from an artistic perspective, but it only manages to confuse me. Besides, I enjoy highlighting myself. I think it is fun!

The next time you buy your books in the bookstore, do what I do and do us all a favor—complain! The price of books will probably not go down, but you'll feel better for doing it.

Until we meet again, ponder on this interesting little fact. . ."the cost of books nowadays is almost half the cost of tuition at an average community college!"

Take care and God bless you,
Yossarian Irving
P.S. American Novel students, you have my sympathy!

Nordin Named College Communications Director

Robert A. Nordin has been named director of college communications at Juniata College. His appointment was announced by Dr. Robert W. Neff, president.

In this new post, Nordin will provide Juniata with direction in representing the college to its various constituencies. The new College Communications Director will be responsible for developing a program to promote Juniata's outstanding academic reputation on the local, regional and national levels.

Regarding his appointment, Nordin said, "I'm delighted to join the Juniata College community. I have a great enthusiasm for the institution and the importance it places on values and vision for the future. It is exciting to accept this post at a time of vigorous new leadership from Dr. Neff."

"Mr. Nordin comes to Juniata with 20 years of experience in public relations and management," noted Dr. Neff. "We are very pleased to have him join us. We look forward to putting his excellent communicative skills to work for Juniata."

Nordin is a graduate of North Park College and received his master of arts degree from the University of Chicago.

Since 1985, Nordin has served as director of public relations for Oral Roberts Ministries, Tulsa, OK. While there he was responsible for the management, direction and coordination of all public relations program. Acting as a spokesman and liaison with the media at local, national and international levels, he was also responsible for the development of a variety of booklets, press kits and other promotional materials.

Nordin's work experiences encompass several tourist/convention executive posts, including assistant director of the State of Utah Travel Council. He has also served as community relations director for the Central Region Headquarters of Western Electric and as a staff writer for Paddock Publications in Arlington Heights, IL.

An Eagle Scout, Nordin has maintained an active involvement in community programs. He has served on boards of directors of the United Way and American Red Cross and has worked with both Special Olympics and Boy Scouts of America. He is a certified wrestling referee on the high school, college and international levels, and also officiates football and baseball.

Nordin, a native of Palatine, IL, is married to the former Kay Hornberg. The couple has four children. They are currently residing at Huntingdon, RD 3.

HAMILTON, Bermuda, November 7

Bermuda, continuing a 54-year tradition, expects to welcome as many as 12,000 students during College Weeks 1987, from March 1 through April 4.

During College Weeks the Bermuda Government sponsors an extensive week-long program of complimentary parties, lunches, contests, cruises, dances and sporting activities. Swimming, volleyball, running contests, tug-of-war matches, a sand sculpture competition and calypso festival are among the free activities offered to holders of College Week courtesy cards which are available to college students at no charge upon presentation of a valid college identification card.

According to Garth Pedro, promotional services manager of Bermuda's Department of Tourism, all of Bermuda's 110 hotels and other properties participate in the College Weeks activity program.

"So far, 28 hotels have confirmed that they will accept group student bookings in 1987, and this number is growing," he added.

The tradition of Bermuda College Weeks dates back to 1933, when students from Princeton and other Ivy League colleges challenged Bermuda's rugby team.

Annual spring visits to Bermuda became a student ritual, and in 1948 the Bermuda Government began promoting free student activity programs as a kick-off to the Island's tourism season.

"Bermuda College Weeks in 1987 should be bigger, brighter, and more fun than ever, as we welcome a new generation of students to our Island with a full program of events," said Pedro.

Interested students should contact their local travel agents.

UWE Sends Greetings From Germany

editor's note-the following is a letter received by the Juniata Staff by a former exchange student at Juniata:

Marburg says "HI",
On Monday, November 24, a meeting of several former and one present Juniata student with Dr. William Vocke took place in the small pub 'Alt Malburg' (which means Old Marburg) in Marburg West Germany.

Buff Vocke, who was on his Europe tour '86 could welcone a bunch of former exchange students from Marburg (including me), Dr. from Marburg University (one responsible for the exchange program in Marburg), and the only Juniata student in Marburg this year, Tommy Kochel.

As a matter of course we chattered about Juniata College (in German, this strange odd language!) and soon the Juniata spirit could be sensed. Buff Vocke talked about some new developments at JC. For instatnce, we got to know that the new president plans to stay in each dorm for a weekend. We heard about the problems with the new semester system (in Marburg we do have this system since ancient times or so).

Well I can tell you that the whole crew would have liked to walk over to Ellis to have dinner together. But of course you could get some good food in the 'Alt Marburg' too.

After a few beers (well, that is the advantage over Ellis) we switched to English and discussed many political issues, including current German politics. (The result of these discussions may reach some of Buff's classes).

Later this evening Stephanie Schwartz ('85) joined us. It was interesting to see that there really is a bit of JC in Marburg.

Maybe there will be such a meeting in 1987 with some more juniors from Juniata.

Tommy Kochel seems to like the challenge up to now he was even lucky with the weather (our fall was nice).

Harburg says "HI" to you Juniata folks, and I say "HI" as well.

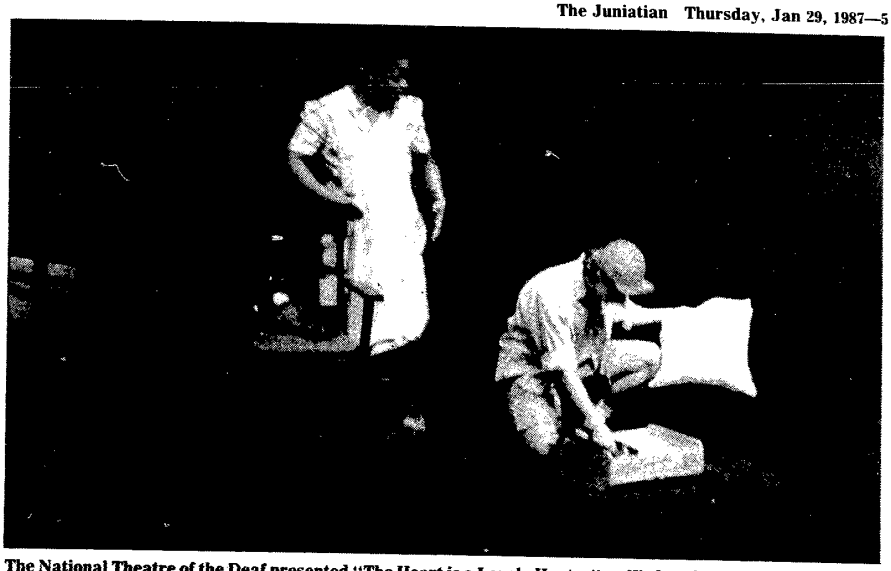
The Heart is a Lonely Hunter

The National Theatre of the Deaf, a professional ensemble of deaf and hearing actors, presented "The Heart is a Lonely Hunter" on Wednesday, Jan. 21, as the fourth program of the 1986-87 Juniata College Artist Series.

One of the most highly regarded theatre companies in America, the National Theatre of the Deaf (NTD) combines the spoken word with Sign Language to create a new dramatic form which speaks with one, rich voice.

Especially adapted for the NTD from the celebrated novel by Carson McCullers, "The Heart is a Lonely Hunter" explores the dynamics of communication — the need to connect. Set in a small Georgia town in 1938, the play investigates the universal language of loneliness, the burden of isolation and the triumph of expression. With the warm ironies and humor of rural Southern life intact, the author expresses her themes through five finely-sketched central characters. One of these five is a deaf mute, John Singer, around whom the play pivots. Each of the other four characters makes the mute the repository for his most personal feelings and ideas. Each sees in him a certain mystic superiority and he becomes, in a sense, their ideal.

The following is the reaction of a Juniata student who attended the recent production: "Amazing, intriguing and heart-warming. The National Theatre of the Deaf captured the hearts of the audience in their performance of " The Heart is a Lonely Hunter." The truly talented group of actors fascinated me as a viewer while presenting an interesting concept of love - the beloved and the lover. The performance was an educational experience in aspects other than the theme and symbolic meaning. The unique style of combining the spoken word with sign language initiated a respect for the deaf in their ability to communicate effectively. The overall effect created a desire to watch the performance as the deaf audience, to appreciate the actors for their ability and talent to convey a message through the silent word."



The National Theatre of the Deaf presented "The Heart is a Lonely Hunter" on Wednesday January 21 as part of Juniata College Artists Series.

"Amazing, intriguing and heart warming."

Hindu Photos on Exhibit in Shoemaker

An exhibit of 34 color photographs by Christopher Sholes—entitled "Living Gods, Hindu Faces"— will be shown in Shoemaker Galleries of Juniata College from Feb. 16-20. The exhibit is part of the "Festival of India" activities being conducted throughout the United States this year. The Sholes Exhibit has already been shown at a number of colleges and universities, including American University, George Washington University and the University of Chicago.

In his photographs Sholes attempts to capture what has been referred to as the "Soul of India" - the peace, the faith, and the devotion of Hindus and the solace that religion gives them. He focuses on people engaged in meditation, prayers and rituals in and around the temples of Tamil Nadu, which have some of India's finest religious sculpture. Reflected throughout is the intimate relationship that Hindus have with the gods they worship.

Shopkeepers vending their wares to the devout for use in rituals, devotees surging toward the sanctum and bending their heads to be blessed, and priests offering their trays of lignted camphor—all are part of this kaleidoscope of images which form a rich and unified pattern. In the words of one reviewer, "The images are strongly conceived and filled with the exotic so much expected from India."

Sholes spent nearly twenty of the twenty-eight years he served in the American Foreign Service in India and Pakistan before he opted for a career in photography. He made his debut in 1977 with a one-man exhibit entitled "Faces of Pakistan"

Study Reveals Common Views Of Students

LOS ANGELES, CA (CPS) + College freshmen generally aim to go into business, harbor a curious blend of liberal and conservative idealogies and may + or may not + be getting as much help from Pell Grants as their predecessors of five years ago, a survey of 290,-000 students from around the United State says.

Each year, UCLA and the American Council on Education survey entering freshmen, and issue reports that in recent years have become the source for most commonly held notions about student attitudes.

This year the study authors were most impressed by their finding that only 16.9 percent of this year's freshmen class received Pell Grants, compared to almost a third of the freshmen class of 1980.

By contrast, 25.4 percent of this year's freshmen have Guaranteed Student Loans, compared to the 1980 figure of 20.9 percent of the freshmen.

But the U.S. Department of Education's Bruce Carnes says the statistics are "seriously flawed," and that about 24 percent of all college students actually receive Pell Grants, which of course, don't have to be repaid.

Carnes adds the Education Dept., which has helped fund the survey "for years and years," has found discrepancies in its finanancial aid statistics for the past several years.

Study director Professor Alexander "Astin's work is good when it comes to talking about what students think, but when it comes to questions about finances, their parent's income, that's unreliable," Carnes says.

The week before UCLA released its findings, a congressional study found that + because there are fewer Pell Grants available + students who graduated in 1985 were five times more in debt than 1980 graduates.

But Carnes thinks the UCLA study didn't count Pell Grants going to students attending proprietary schools like Joe's school of Cosmetology."

"We stand by our statistics," replies Dr. Kenneth C. Green, the study's associate director. "We've done validity studies that show students do know the sources of their aid and have a very good sense of parental income."

Green says Carnes' figures "don't reflect the same population of first-time and full-time college students" that the UCLA survey covers.

"The Department (of Education) has purchased our data for years to use in their own analyses. Their own independent reviews have confirmed our data over the years."

John Skare, executive director of the National Student Roundtable in Washington, D.C., believes the survey is "valid" and that it can be a useful tool. "They've been doing it long enough now, and I have no problem with the methodology."

Carnes isn't sure if the department's arguments with the conclusions about aid will convince it to drop its support of the survey.

"I'm not saying we're not going to fund (the study) again, and I'm not saying we are," he says. "These races aren't fixed."

No one, moreover, has any problem with the survey's other findings.

It found that a greater percentage of freshmen planned to have education and business careers, while fewer freshmen planned careers in computing and health-related fields.

Slightly more students than last year + 24 percent + defined themselves as politically "liberal" or "far-left."

Slightly fewer students than last year + 20 percent + called themselves politically "conservative" or "far right."

Regardless of what they called themselves, however, big majorities of freshmen supported tradtionally liberal positions like abortion rights, school busing for desegregation, a national health care plan and cohabitation prior to marriage.

Fewer freshmen than last year expressed an interest in values like altruism. Only 40.6 percent of students said "developing meaningful philosophy of life" was important to them, compared to 43.3 percent in 1985 and 82.9 percent in 1967.

The Student Roundtable's Skare relates such feelings to financial aid relations that make sutdents "very, very careful about finances" and adopt pragmatic views of life.

Along the same lines, student support for abolishing capital punishment declined to its lowest point in the history of the survey (to 25.4 percent of the freshmen, down from 26.6 percent last year and 57.6 percent in 1971).

Support for legalizing marijuana also continued its decline (to 21.3 percent, from 21.8 percent last year and 52.9 percent at its peak in 1977).

For the first time in the survey's history, the majority of freshmen support laws prohibiting homosexual behavior (52.2 percent, up from 47.9 percent last year).

"This sudden increase in student support for laws against homosexuality might well be attributed to the widespread public attention currently focused on AIDS," Green speculates.

Other survey data suggest students are more liberal than ever in their views on a number of political and social issues.

Support for school busing as a means of intergrating public ashcools reached its all-time high in 1986 (56.1 percent, up from 54.4 percent last year and 37 percent in 1976).

The percentage of student support for legalized abortion, a national health care plan, and for the proposition that people should live together before getting married reached record high levels.

At the same time, student support for the notion that "the acitivites of married women should be confined to the home and family" reached an all-time low in 1986. Men, however, were twice as likely to support the idea (27 percent of men vs. 14.3 percent of women).

Wayfarer's Journal

To the Editor—

There I was, sitting in a political philosophy class, minding my own business, waiting for class to begin, when out of nowhere came my prof, and he handed me a small thin newspaper on which in big bold letters at the top was printed The Juniatian. My heart leaped (yes - leaped) and I couldn't wipe the smile off my face as I glanced through the paper, taking in all the headlines.

I admit it, this doesn't happen to every Juniata student when they receive a copy of our college newspaper. But here I am, in the midst of my junior year abroad in Munster, West Germany, and it happened to me!!

So, I'm a little homesick. I'm experiencing what Buff Vocke would call "Phase Two" of culture shock. In short, that means I've gotten over the touristy stage of being in Germany - shot ten rolls of film, bought thousands of grams of the best chocolate, visited all the museums, and now the real live subjects are coming into play, like studying maybe? And the bureaucracy is starting to get me down: if I have to fill out one more form, I am going to kill someone. And being an American at a German University is not always peaches and cream. If only the German students were not so politically aware! The first question they ask is "What's your name?"; the second, "What do you think of President Reagan?" The third question, which they only ask if you've answered appropriately to the second, is "Where do you live in the United States?" It's bad enough trying to explain where Pennsylvania is ("Is that anywhere near California?" groan), you might as well forget about explaining where Huntingdon is! But I'm getting over this problem. Now when they ask where I come from I simply answer: "From God's own country," and that usually suffices. Thank you. No further questions.

Seriously though, I can read anywhere about the good ole USA, in German or in English. I can even see Ronald Reagan and Washington, D.C., in the news practically every night. And for a while I did not miss "home" at all. But when I got The Juniatian it hit me. Reading about what was happening, even reading the names of the intramural volleyball teams - all of it struck a soft spot in me, and I missed J.C. I'm having a wonderful time in Muenster; I wouldn't trade this year for anything but it's nice to know that my "home" isn't just the America where the President is sending weapons to Iran and vetoing sanctions against South Africa - the America that the German students strongly criticize. It's also at Juniata, which few German students know about, (partly because President Neff doesn't send weapons to Iran), and therefore none criticize!

And now I will continue with my junior year abroad, and I will continue appreciating each copy of The Juniatian (in the blessed mother tongue!).

Lady Indians Volleyball Season in Review

The Juniata women's volleyball team recently wrapped up their 1986 season finishing fourth in the nation with a 36-10 record. After winning their sixth consecutive Middle Atlantic Conference championship, the Indians defeated Cortland St. (NY) and Albany St. (NY) to capture the NCAA Division III Eastern Regional championship.

Out of 269 schools in NCAA Division III the golden spikers finished fourth in the country, losing to University of California at San Diego in the semi-final match at the NCAA Final Four tournament in Grand Rapids, Michigan. The Tritons of San Diego captured their third National Championship with a 3-2 victory over Calvin College in the finals. The Indians fell to University of Wisconsin La Crosse in the consolation match.

Despite the two losses in the national tournament, Coach Larry Bock's Juniata team was the topic of conversation at the tournament. The Indians received national recognition for their ability to recover from the loss of four returning starters, two weeks after the season began. Two players decided to leave the team for personal and academic reasons. The team captain and Academic All-American, Lori Bason, suffered from mononucleosis, and had to end her volleyball career early. However, the most tragic experience that this team has ever faced was the death of their teammate Carolyn Stambaugh. One week after practice began Stambaugh was struck and killed by an automobile on the Baltimore beltway while she sat by her disabled vehicle. Stambaugh was a senior middle blocker. She was a three year starter and the most valuable player in 1985. She still holds the NCAA record for most blocks in a single game.

Perhaps Scott Scholten, assistant sports editor of the Grand Rapids Press, put it best when he said, "One of the most intriguing sidelights of the Final Four is the masterful rebuilding job at Juniata College. . .It is something close to miraculous that the Indians from Huntingdon, Pa., are in the Final Four for the second consecutive year considering they had to replace four of six starters after the season began. . .In a span of two weeks the squad lost four starters—one to academic difficulties, one to "personal problems," one to physical illness and one to a fatal automobile accident. The players all wear little happy faces on their blue and gold uniforms in memory of their deceased teammate Carolyn Stambaugh, whose nickname was 'Smiley'."

"If success is measured by the number of obstacles that are overcome en route to excellence, then this group of people has accomplished an awful lot," said Head Coach Larry Bock, the winningest coach in Juniata College history. Bock, who has compiled a record of 328-72 over ten years, was named C.V.C.A. Eastern Regional Coach-of-the-Year this year.

"Something that Susan (his assistant coach) and I came to realize through this difficult year, was just how much these people mean to us. I suppose that this can only help to make us better coaches," he added.

The twelve players remaining from the 1986 season continue to reflect on their past season. "It was really tough to recover from all of the tragedy at the beginning of the season. Our concentration wasn't very good because of all that we went through, but we pulled together and became a very close team. We were a cohesive unit and as a result we relied and depended on each other on and off the court. All of this has really put my life in perspective," said Beth Hoppel, the Indians two time All-American from Johnstown.

Coach Larry Bock has great admiration for this very special team, "They worked so hard to be the best that they could be that Susan and I could never ask for anymore energy from them. Realistically we're probably a year away from being a National Championship team, but even more realistically, next year we should be a legitimate contender."

Despite the hardships that each player individually overcame, the team had a very successful year:

—Finished second in the Elmhurst Invitational and the Coca-Cola Classic.

—Finished third in the Penn State Invitational and the Slippery Rock Invitational.

—Finished sixth in the Occidental/Tachikara Invitational in Los Angeles.

—Finished first in the Indian Invitational.

—Captured their sixth Middle Atlantic Conference championship, more than any other volleyball team in M.A.C. history.

—Captured the NCAA Eastern Regional championship for the fourth time.

—Appeared in the NCAA Division III National Championship for the fourth time in six years.

—Beth Hoppel named CVCA All-America first team.

—Cathy Miller, Jackie Rebert and Beth Hoppel selected to All-M.A.C. team.

—Larry Bock named CVCA Eastern Regional Coach-of-the-Year.

"We all learned a lot about each other this year and that will carry over into the coming USVBA schedule and into the next varsity season. This is a very good volleyball team that will only get better," Bock concluded.

Life on College Hill goes on for the golden spikers. Their uniforms, with the "smiley faces" on the collars, are tucked away until next year. The scholarship established in memory of Carolyn Stambaugh has surpassed $5,000 and continues to grow, keeping Carolyn's memory alive by honoring students who reflect her best qualities. However, the most vivid memories of Carolyn will remain in the heart of every person touched by her effervescent personality and contagious smile.

"We really miss her. She'll always be with us," echoed twelve courageous athletes who continue to reflect on a season of sorrow and joy.

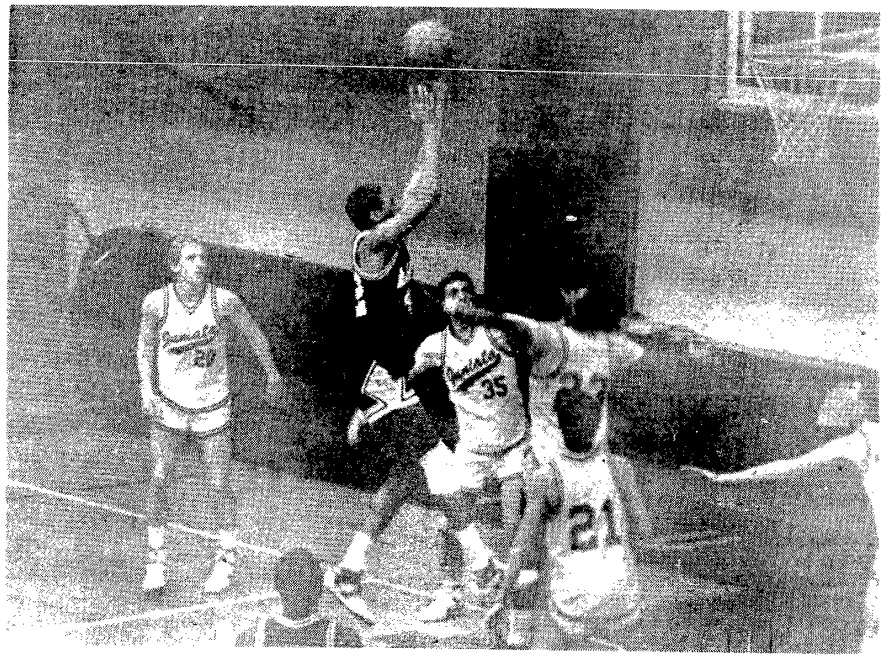
Sr. Bob Crossey Selected to GTE/COSIDA Academic All American Team

Bob Crossey, a senior linebacker for the Juniata College football team, was selected to the GTE/COSIDA ACADEMIC ALL-AMERICAN FIRST TEAM by Collegiate Sports Information Directors of America. Crossey, the team's leading tackler for three consecutive years, collected 131 tackles, four pass break ups, 2 sacks and a fumble recovery in 11 outings this year, leading the Tribe to a 9-2 season.

The 5'11, 230 lb. tri-captain received this prestigious honor for his performance on the field and excellence in the academic world. A pre-medicine major, he maintains a 3.57 grade point average. In 1985 he was selected to the Academic All-America second team. Earlier this season, Crossey was placed on the Middle Atlantic All-Academic team and the Middle Atlantic All-Star team.

"This is a great honor for Bob. He is a fine example of our football philosophy at Juniata. We stress the excellence in education, as well as pride and dedication to football. He's worked extremely hard academically and athletically to be the best he can be. This is a nice reward for his devotion," said Head Coach Rob Ash.

Crossey is a 1983 graduate of Penn Hills High School. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. William Crossey of Verona.



Grapplers Fair Well In Tri-Meet

by Mike Antenucci

This past weekend on college hill the Juniata Grapplers hosted a tri-match with La Salle and Haverford colleges. The Indians lost to La Salle 37-18, but 2 hours later beat Haverford. The La Salle match was closer than the score may indicate. A few Indian wrestlers were winning during their matches and just got caught.

Excitement was present in all the matches but Indian victories were turned in by Eric Olsen, Dave Cooper, and Russ Tshopps. All three Indian matmen pinned their opponents.

Against Haverford the Indians were a bit more successful as they romped past Haverford. Rich Hoag got things started for the Indians with a superior decision. John Swanson, Olsen, Cooper, and Tshopps were also victories along with teamate Larry Krizner who pinned his opponent.

The Indians next match is tonight at 7:00 p.m. against Gettysburg. Come to the Kennedy Memorial Gymnasium and support your Indians.

Indians Basketball Squad Is Just Inches From Success

by Mike Antenucci

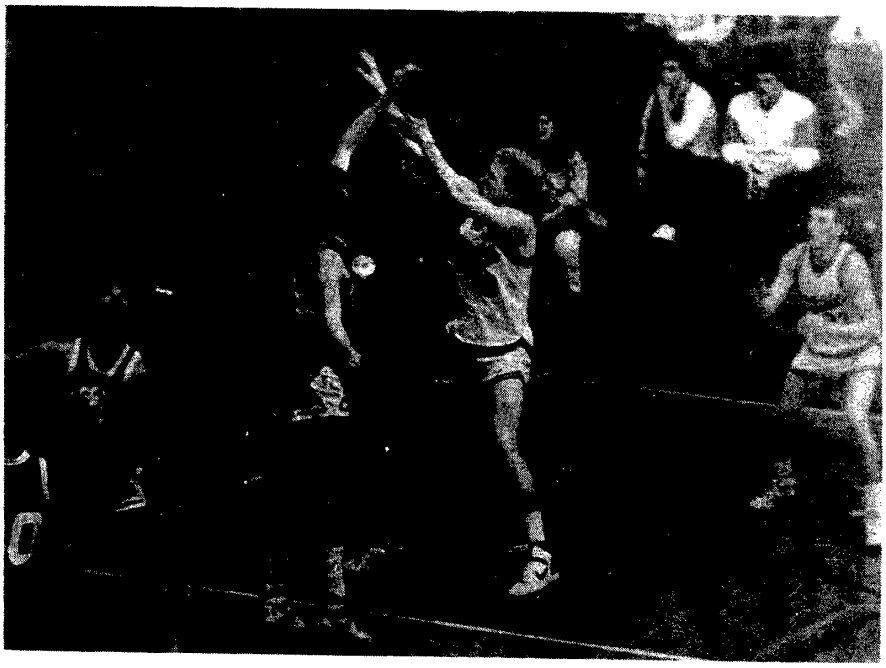
At the start of the second half of its season Juniata's Men's Basketball team finds itself tied for fourth in the northwest section of the Mid Atlantic Conference. The Indians could very well be the first place team and on their way to breaking a school record for most wins in a season. However, this is just a thought.

The Indian cagers have lost a total of 10 games so far this season, but each game has been an exciting one. In each game that the Indians lost they were, at one point in the game, either winning or tied with their opponent. To give you an idea of how luck isn't on the side of the JC hoopers listen to these results: An early loss to pre-season favorites Elizabethtown 60-64, JC was up by as much as five points during the game; traveling to Susquehanna before the break the Indians dropped another 2 point decision; in their Christmas Tourney JC dropped a four point game to highly rated Allegheny, after being in front for several spurts in the game; the Indians also managed to stay close to the Nittany Lions, trailing by 5 at the half; in a double-overtime rematch against Susquehanna Juniata dropped another 2 point game. After defeating league leading Albright JC suffered a buzzer beater at the hands of Scranton 65-63; last week the team traveled to Messiah where, once again they fell victim to another double-overtime defeat. So it is obvious that the ball just isn't bouncing in Juniata's direction.

Junior shooting guard Wayne Paul is leading the Indians in scoring as he vies for all MAC honors along with teamate Les Squiar, who was third in the league in rebounding. Center Chris Frew is the only senior starter, usually replacing Paul senior guard Tom Reese specializes in canning the three point shot. The Indians are one of the top teams in the nation (Division III) for making three point field goals. The Delaware Valley game is the only time this year when JC hasn't made at least three 3 point goals.

Sophomore foward Duane Dise has been averaging double figures up to this point for 7th year head coach Dan Helm. Freshman Shawn Habbakus rounds out the starters at the point guard position. The Indians have good depth off the bench, Joe DeBlase a sophomore guard/foward made this evident in the first game of the season, as he scored 24 points to lead his team to a victory over Washington and Jefferson.

Dan Lazowick, Glen Peters, and Mike Welker round out the guards; Randy Martin, Mike Antenucci, Dave Queen, and Andre Constantino play the foward and center positions. The Indians traveled to Dickinson on Monday and Lycoming yesterday. Tomorrow night Juniata hosts Drew at 7:30 and on Saturday will host Albright at 8:30. Both games are MAC contests.



New Women's B-Ball Coach Kathi Quinn To Rebuild Team

By Lisa Clapper

If 'new' is in this year, then Juniata College wil be on the top of the charts, because not only do we have a new president, new semester system and a new college communications director but also a new girls basketball coach.

Kathi Quinn, the new girls basketball coach, is a native Huntingdon resident who received her B.S. in Biology and her Masters in exercise physiology from Marietta College in Ohio. For the past eight years, she has coached hockey, basketball and LaCross of which six were spent at Central Bucks East High School in Doylestown, PA.

Mrs. Quinn felt she was put into a difficult situation, because there was no recruitment and only three players with college experience. The team is working hard on conditioning skills as well as mental and emotional attitude.

"This year was a year to get to know each other and to get adjusted." What coach Quinn wanted most was to have enough players for a scrimmage at practice and hopes that recruitment will help to bring greater participation in girls basketball.

The current record is 3-7, however they play the most difficult of the opponents in the first half of the season. The season ends February 21st and the next home game will be against Gettysburg on Monday, February 2nd.

Prez Visits Halls

by Lisa Clapper

"To mantain contact with the students," was the main purpose President Neff visited Juniata's Resident Halls last semester. Dr. Neff felt people got to know him by taking part in the daily activities-eating at Baker Refectory with the students, watching Monday Night Football with the students in Sherwood, talking about dating with the guys, and making paper snowflakes for decorations in South.

President Neff stated that by understanding the Residence Hall's lifestyles he would be better apt to know the Juniata College students, thus giving the students great sense of trust in him.

Perhaps the most crucial point learned from what Neff calls "the most important thing I have done in my first six months at Juniata" is that Juniata has Residence Halls not "DORMS", which is the key to understanding the contemporary Juniata College students. Dr. Neff believes it is helpful to think of the living quarters as Residence Halls, however, he was once an avid "Dorm-user" who learned his lesson by donating almost $5.00 to the "DORM" party fund before he stopped using the nasty word.

"There is a great feeling of ownership in the residence halls which gives more of a sense of home to the students." Students partake in room decorating contest to show pride in their rooms, rather than making them just a place to sleep.

The students made President Neff feel at home and treated him as a guest rather than the visiting president. "People gave up their beds and slept on the floor for me. . .they gave up their space and their time."

Neff stated, "A symbol to an open door policy is to speak what is on the mind." He wants the students to be able to go to him and to feel free to talk openly with him.

To keep in touch with the students, Dr. Neff plans to be where the students are which includes frequent visits to Baker Refactory as well as sporting and cultural events. "I need to go where the

Artist Series Presents Fifth Program

An evening of exuberant musical theatre is planned for the fifth program of the Juniata College Artist Series. Barksdale Theatre of Hanover, VA, will stage "Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" on Thursday, Feb.12. at 8:15 p.m. in Oller Hall.

Tickets, priced at $7.50 for adults and $3.00 for students (grade one through college), will be available at the door. The public is cordially invited to attend.

In the Book of Genesis, Chapter 37, it is described as "a coat of many colors." In the Tim Rice - Andrew Lloyd Webber musical version it's a "technicolor dreamcoat." In both cases, the hero is Jacob's favorite son, and his story is retold entirely with music: gentle solos, rambunctious company numbers and songs full of humor and tenderness.

"Dreamcoat" was the first hit by the English composer Andrew Lloyd Webber, who followed it with such hits as "Jesus Christ, Superstar," "Evita," and "Cats."

With boundless enthusiasm, a cast of 22 plays everything from unfavorite sons to an occasional Sphinx. A setting by Jann Paxton leads from Caanan to Egypt and back. Most of the touring cast were in the original production of the show at Barksdale, which played nineteen months to sold-out houses, the longest regional theatre production in the country.

According to a review of the tour's opening in Dayton, Ohio, " 'Dreamcoat' is not a star vehicle; it is an ensemble show requiring total cast excellence, high energy consistency and an unflagging sense of timing. All three are offered in abundance by a cast obviously still having fun with their show. That fun — exuberent joy if you will — plus a generally tidy script makes 'Dreamcoat' a theatrical high for audiences of all ages and sophisitication."

Barksdale Theatre at Hanover Tavern, established in 1953, was the nation's first dinner theatre. It is the Richmond area's oldest non-profit theatre and produces works ranging from Eugene O'Neill to Neil Simon and from "Equus" to "Three Men on a Horse." This is the company's first national tour.

Dating Game

By Missy Mohrey

Phi Chi Theta, Juniata's business fraternity, will be sponsoring "The Dating Game" Saturday, February 14, 1987. The event will take place in Oller Hall at 8:00 p.m. A one dollar admission fee will be charged at the door.

A total of five games will be played. For each game the female or male contestant will ask their own questions to a panel of three bachelors or bachelorettes, who will be concealed behind a screen. Each contestant will be given ten to fifteen minutes to get to know the hidden panelists by asking probing questions. When time is up, the contestant will have to choose a date. The five happy couples will be treated to an exciting and romantic evening.

Look for more information about "The Dating Game." If you are interested in participating in this fun-filled event, watch for a flyer in your mailbox. Who knows, maybe you can leave "The Dating Game" with the guy or girl of your dreams!

Once upon a time . . . in a land far, far away (you can't get much further than Huntingdon) there was an enchanted place known as Juniata College. Now this college was abound with tradition, but one certain night was especially exciting, this night was "All Class Night." Now, on this special eve, Juniata College students were given the "divine right" of students to go out and express their love and admiration for their faculty, administration and sometimes fellow students.

This year Juniata College has decided to make the theme of All Class Night, "Fairytales." There has been much talk of princes and magic spells and damsels in distress. Oh . . . and every class is anxious for help, so contact your class officers and get involved.

Wondering what people are CURIOUS about???
Read about research in the Juniatian.

Troy Demonstrates His Poetic Talents

Jack Troy, local potter and part-time member of the Juniata College art department, has been awarded a Fellowship in Literature by the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts. The award, in the form of a cash grant, recognizes Mr. Troy's achievements and promise as a poet. In 1981, he received a Crafts Fellowship for research into local clays and various types of wood as sources of ash glaze for the pottery he makes. He becomes the first person ever to receive Fellowships in two diverse fields, a Council spokesperson noted.

This year, the Council received 170 applications for Fellowships in Literature, and granted 27. Mr. Troy intends to use the proceeds of the Fellowship to set aside time for continuing work on a series of poems about his youth in rural Pennsylvania, along the Susquehanna - "the river that either divides our state or connects its two halves," he observed.

Troy's poems have appeared in West Branch, Pivot, and Friends Journal. His poem "Denim Men" received first place in a Kent State University poetry contest, and others have received awards at thw Central Pennsylvania Festival of the Arts and Huntingdon County Arts Festival. He received 1st place in the 1986 Senior Poetry Competition at the Westmoreland Arts and Heritage Festival, for "The Wind in the Jug."

Of his interest in poetry, Troy says, "Certain things can only be said in a poem. It's usually slow going to locate the best words and arrange them well on a page, but a good poem is worth whatever goes into it. Novel writing must be like picking thousands of apples in an orchard, but writing a poem is like trying to make one glass of cider from a few good apples. Haiku poems are boiled-down cider."

"Poetry and word-sounds always interested me, but James Dickey, an artist-in-residence at Kent State, where I studied, made me want to make my poems. I owe Dickey a lot more than the clay cup I gave him at the time. Others who have helped me a lot are poets John Balaban of Penn State University and Dan Masterson of Suffern, N.Y." Troy said.

This recent poem of Troy's was written after the visit to Juniata's campus by the National Theatre of the Deaf.

Some Words (Like Doves) to Fly After You (For the National Theatre of the Deaf)
Waking before six the morning after your performance,
I still see your hands gathering and jabbing,
cleaving and whipping the air
until it froths with expression.
We mutes, in numbered seats, have put our hands to sleep.
We mumble, whisper behind each other's backs
while your hands dance their eloquence behind the procenium of deafness.

We have so much to tell each other!
Once I learned to hold two flags and jerk them in the stilted alphabet of semaphore
- a dead language, rightly so. Now I see how you can hug the wind and make it a tornado at will.
None of us could ever find the words for that!
We are slowly learning from you how to shape anger without shouts;
how to say, with hands alone,
you are my beloved, or what a perfect evening for popcorn!
I'd like to see a wordless man kick a dictionary
so we could scuttle language, for a day, at least;
learn to articulate your way.
Would you show us? Could we learn from you?

Come back to our town!
If we'd known the signs, we'd have made them
by the hundreds at curtain calls.
All we could do was stand, smiling, playing our hands like cymbals.

— Jack Troy

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor:

We just wanted to take this opportunity to thank the many students, faculty, and administrators, along with those from the community, that have supported us during this season.

Also,a special thank you goes to the cheerleaders.

It was nice to see such a great turnout on Saturday against Albright. It was also great to hear that support throughout the game.

We hope you will come to the gym this weekend when we host nationally ranked King's College on Saturday night and conference-contending FDU-Madison on Saturday.

Thank You!
The Men's Basketball team and Coaching Staff.

Hazing Policy Adopted

by Rush Blady

Juniata College has recently adopted the following policy on hazing :"Juniata College prohibits all forms of hazing activity by student organizations and individuals. Hazing activities are those which could cause mental or physical discomfort, embarassment or ridicule. Serious disciplinary steps will be taken against individuals or organizations engaged in hazing."

According to Dr. Arnold Tilden, Vice President for Educational Planning and Student Services, the hazing policy was adopted by decision of the Student Affairs Council to express the college community's disapproval of hazing practices. "We have had no serious hazing incidents so far," said Tilden, "the council is adopting the new policy as a proactive step to contain hazings." He further added that the policy was to take effect as soon as it could be widely communicated via Student Services Newsletter.

Traditionally, hazings are incorporated in initiation procedures for organizations and fraternities. Since Juniata has no "social brotherhood" fraternities, the chance of a serious incident occuring "is small," says Tilden, "but to adopt an announced policy against hazing discourages that action."

Serious hazing incidents in American colleges are on an increase, according to a recent Newsweek article. Two college freshmen died of alcohol poisoning and exposure during pledgings at an unnamed Southwestern university, causing national interest in the hazing process. Tilden noted this and also cited a local incident, a hazing on a Huntingdon High School athletic team, as examples as to why Juniata is joining the ranks of colleges adopting stronger policies against hazing.

If you are like the majority of Juniata students, you probably had never heard of hazing before this article and cannot remember having ever been "hazed." In fact, it is hard to differentiate between hazing and the "hard time" anyone experiences as a newcomer to any competitive organization or team. Dr. Tilden stressed the need to single out hazing in organizations on campus such as athletic teams. "This policy is intended to stop dangerous, damaging practices rather than outlaw horseplay and practical jokes," he said. However, there is one tradition nearly every newcomer at Juniata has experienced : The 'Storming of the Arch.' Does this fall under the new policy? "We(the college community and administration) have no formal association with the 'Storming of the Arch' " said Tilden, "It is not a college sponsored event. Because it has no leader or membership, we cannot warn a group not to provoke or participate in the Storming." Dr. Tilden did offer his advice to freshmen;"I advise against participation."

Second Annual Jello Wrestling

That's right. Its time to get ready for the Second Annual Jello Wrestling Contest! This year's event will be held on Saturday, March 7, to benefit Tri-County Special Olympics.

Once again, wrestling teams will consist of two women vs. one man. This year, however, teams will submit their names and will be chosen by lottery to participate in the event. Interested teams must pay $1.00 to get their names in the hat. The teams that are drawn are then responsible for getting ten dollars worth of sponsors by the night of the event in order to participate.

This year the jello will be warmer, the prizes bigger, but. . . .WILL RONDO AND THE KILLER BEES BE BACK? Watch for more details next week.

Huntingdon Area Concerned With Bombs

To heighten public awareness about nuclear testing, area churches are being asked to toll their bells at 12:05 pm on Feb. 5, and 25 black balloons, one for each U.S. test conducted since the beginning of the Soviet moratorium on nuclear testing, will be released over the town.

The Soviet Union has had a unilateral moratorium on nuclear weapons tests in effect since Aug. 6, 1985, the 40-year anniversary of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima, and has called for international comprehensive test ban negotiations. The United States government has continued to test, refusing to join the moratorium. The Soviet Union has now announced they will end their moratorium whenever the U.S. conducts another test. The next U.S. test is scheduled for Feb. 5, 1987.

Churches in Huntingdon are being asked to participate because many have endorsed policy resolutions calling for an end to the arms race. It is hoped that these activities will spark discussion and a greater understanding of the issues surrounding world-wide attempts to achieve nuclear disarmament. "In the interest of global security it is an urgent task of our government to pursue every means possible to end the arms race and thus prevent nuclear war," said Kate Reinard, a spokesperson for the Huntingdon County Campaign for a Nuclear Weapons Freeze. "The failure of the Reagan administration to take action on the crucial issue of nuclear testing is of grave concern. The loss of this opportunity, coupled with the administration's intentional violation of the SALT II arms control treaty, puts the future of arms control negotiations into jeopardy, and will not go unnoticed in Huntingdon."

C.M.B. Retreat

by Buffy Heisey

The Campus Ministry Board retreat was held the weekend of January 23-25 at the Williamsburg Conference Center. All the Campus Ministry Board members, Father Dave and Andy Murray participated. The group engaged in various activities including cross country skiing.

Rich Brnich, President of Campus Ministry Board, explained about this year's retreat, "The main objective was to get to know each other. We discussed what we've done, what we plan to do this semester, and next year's events."

Student Of The Week Matt Varner

by Andrea Zavod

Note: This article is the first in a series of student of the week profiles. We appreciate all suggestions that have been submitted.

Why do you find a summer job? Most likely you need money. Junior Matt Varner certainly enjoys the money he earns from his summer job. More so, he likes the experience. Meet Matt Varner a licensed real estate agent.

Encouraged by a friend in his hometown, Matt's interest deepened and in the summer of 1986 he began the course work needed to qualify for a license.

Under the direction of Bob Schrack Associates, a realtor in Huntingdon, Matt took two courses, Fundamentals of Real Estate at the Pennsylvania Real Estate Institute, and Real Estate Practices at a Penn State branch. After successfully completing these requirements, he was then able to sit for the state exam held at Penn State University. The exam was given in two parts and after passing the second part in July of '86 he received his real estate license.

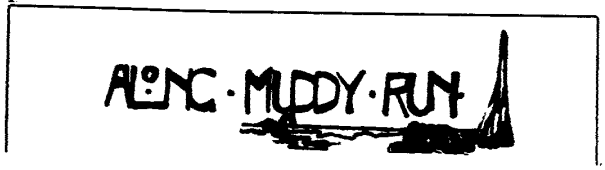
"I'm using the experience as a building block," says Varner. I'm not looking for it to be a career, but while I'm here studying marketing, it's great experience for sales."

As a real estate agent, Matt has experience in showing houses to prospective buyers and setting up financing. His biggest responsibility is to get people to list their houses for sale with the realtor.

"It gives me a general feeling of business practice and a good sense of progress toward a goal. I still haven't sold a property, but I've done every step in between."

Matt's looking forward to a successful summer of real estate work, hoping to gain more practical marketing experience for future career goals.

Side note: Matt is a graduate of the Chief Logan Mingoes. What is a mingoe? I don't know, but as a faithful Penn State fan, Matt followed the Nittany Lions to Arizona for the Fiesta Bowl.



by a friend of Ralph Sampson

For the past couple of months I've watched in amazement the Blue Army build these spectacular works of art all over campus. I never realized these men had so much talent.

The more I observed, however, I began to realize that these works of art were beginning to form a pattern, and there could be another reason for their existence other than their artistic beauty. The more questions I asked the more enlightened I became. These weren't art sculptures at all, they were parts of Juniata College's new outdoor Fitness center.

Juniata has put more money into the well-being of the students. For those students. For those students who cannot seem to get a good workout in the new multi-million dollar Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center, this fitness center is just for you. It allows you to perform an array of physical activities in the great outdoors. I'm not exactly sure what type of physical activities you can do on these structures, but I know once I find out, I'm going to be hooked.

So, for all of you blobs out there, and you know who you are (R.B.), get in shape. There are no more excuses. And thanks, Juniata, for giving us something we really needed.

Applications For RA

by Jennifer Nicholson

Applications for the Resident Assistant position are now available in the Housing Office. Applications will be due in the Residential Life Office by noon on Monday, Feb.9.

The Resident Assistant selection process will begin with informational meetings on Feb. 10 and Feb. 11. Group process sessions and group interviews will follow. The applicants will be evaluated and possible cuts will be made after the group interviews are completed.

Candidates will then go on to one-on-one interviews and, finally, a video presentation. The 1987-88 Residential Life Staff is projected to be announced by Wednesday, April 8, 1987.

According to Mrs. Betty Ann Cherry, Interim Associate Dean of Student Services, the RA application process involves group and individual participation and evaluation by present Resident Assistants, Resident Directors, and Administration.

Basketball Team Defeats Drew U.

This past weekend the Juniata Men's Basketball team managed to turn their luck for once. After a season plagued with 2 point losses, buzzer beaters, what have you—the Indians defeated Drew University of New Jersey. However, the Indians success would be short lived. Already beating Albright in overtime earlier in the season, Juniata played host to the team from Reading PA.

In front of a packed house the Indians just fell short of beating Albright, a playoff contending team. After leading by as much as 12 points in the first half, the Indians found themselves in a tie ballgame to start the second half. Trailing by 8, Juniata made a run and fell short by 3 points. Joe Deblase led the way for the Indians, scoring 22 points (7 3-pointers and 1 2-pointers from the foul line). For the Indians they set a season high mark of 12 3-pointers in a single game.

Wayne Paul continues to be the 2nd leading scorer in the MAC's while Les Squiar is still among the top 3 rebounders in the league. JC hosted Gettysburg on the night of publication, then traveled to E-Town yesterday, where they played league's leading team (whom the Indians lost to 66-64 in their second game of the season). This Saturday the Indians host the 19th ranked team in the nation, at 8:00, when King's College comes to town. The next day, at 3:00 pm, the Indians host FDU-Madison.

J.C. Grapplers Fall To Gettysburg

Wrestling, at any level, is a tough sport. It is the only one that puts a physical restriction on the participants, their weight. This makes it hard to field a full team, especially in Division III. This fact was evident in last Thursday's wrestling match against Gettysburg College.

Our Indians were the first beneficiaries of the problem. At the 11 lb. weight class, Rich Hoag took a forfeit to give Juniata at 6-0 lead. Matt Strohm, the 126 pounder, took another forfeit to build the lead to 12-0. The 134 lb. weight class produced another forfeit. This time it was Gettysburg which benefitted from one, cutting the overall lead to 12-6.

Finally, the actual wrestling began with the 142 lb. weight. Sophomore John Swanson took to the mat for Juniata. After a scoreless first period, the Gettysburg wrestler took a 1-0 lead on a second period escape. Swanson scored an escape near the beginning of the 3rd period to tie it. After being taken down, Swanson responded with another escape to cut the lead to 3-2. With Swanson as the aggressor, the G.C. wrestler was warned for stalling once and repeated moves backwards which should have constituted a penalty point for Swanson. But the referee never made the call. Near the end of the match, Swanson was forced to make a desperation move which the G.C. grappler caught him for a takedown and three point near-fall. The final buzzer sounded with Swanson down 2-8. The decision made the team score 12-9 J.C.

The next two matches were all Gettysburg College. Senior co-captain Erik Olsen lost an 11-3 decision at 150 pounds. The other co-captain, senior Dave Cooper, lost the 158 lb. match 11-3, after being caught in a five-point move near the end of the first period. It was Cooper's 1st loss of the year. While he lost the match, Cooper definitely had the funniest line of the evening. With Cooper in control, the Gettysburg wrestler complained very loudly to the referee. Cooper then told his opponent to refrain from voicing his opinion, in so many words. Following the 158 lb. match, the team score stood at 17-12 in favor of Gettysburg.

Tom Marte, a sophomore, stopped the Gettysburg run with a decision at 167 pounds. Marte built a 6-1 lead early in the 3rd period before allowing his opponent a takedown late in the period. His escape point completed the scoring at 7-3. Marte's decision cut Gettysburg's lead to 17-15. Unfortunately, those points would be the Indians last for the evening. Tim Crowley lost a 2-14 decision in the 177 lb. weight class to put the team score at 15-22. Gettysburg gained an insurmountable lead with 6-3 decision in the 190 lb. class. JC's Larry Krizner battled his opponent to a 0-0 standoff after one period.

Dr. and Mrs. Neff plan to invite next years incoming freshmen class to a barbeque at their home in the fall during Freshmen Orientation as well as invite the class of 1987 to a special occasion.

Not only is President Neff improving student/administration relationships, but he is encouraging faculty to hold more social events including students.

The administrators are looking into ways to help the faculty become involved with the students. There is a proposal which Dr. Neff is currently working with.

Dr. Neff requested that students and faculty submit ideas to enhance communication between students, administrators and faculty through a letter to the editor.

Harrisburg — The Senate is scheduled to cast confirmation votes this week on Gov. Robert P. Casey's nominees for state treasurer and agriculture secretary.

Beirut, Lebanon — The Moslem kidnappers of three Americans and an Indian U.S. resident vowed to kill the hostages Monday unless Isreal freed 400 jailed Palestinians.

Jacksonville, Fla. — Extra-tight security was ordered for Monday's hearing for a reputed Colombian drug lord and additional federal marshals will be in place throughout proceedings against him because of "generic threats," authorities said.

Ski Team member Mark Kearns approaches a gate at a recent ski race. The team's next competition will be this weekend.

V103 Staff Elected

by Joe Newhart

The V103 staff turned out last Wednesday evening in Alumni Hall to elect the management board members for 1987-88.

Junior Joe Newhart was elected to succeed Shelly Guest as station manager. Newhart's goals included an assurance that V103 would not be off the air during the upcoming frequency change. He also plans to develop a marketing survey, V103 field trips to other college and professional stations, and the possibility of selecting another network for the satellite dish. Joe will also establish a program of heavy sponsorships to build an account which will be used for future stereo broadcasting plans.

Replacing Matt Sherbine as Business Manager is sophomore Shawn Peck. Shawn plans to establish an organized system for financial matters at V103. He also plans to work with Phi Chi Theta, the honorary business fraternity, in order to build sponsorships and promotions for the frequency change.

Sophomore Dave Fouse steps in as Chief Announcer replacing Joe Newhart. Dave is looking forward to maintaining a solid training program and promoting professionalism by using the DJ evaluation committee extensively.

The Chief Engineer's spot being vacated by Greg Pawlikowski will be filled by Junior Ken Bear. Ken plans to be a liason between V103 and outside engineers during the frequency change. Ken will also look into the costs of stereo equipment.

If you think Juniata's alcohol policy is a lot of fuss about nothing, read on!

According to Arnold Tilden, Vice President for Educational Planning and Dean of Student Service, a recent finding in a "social host" case has widened the circle of potentially liable adults who can be sued for the actions of an underaged drinker. This judgment resulted from the litigation involving a number of law suits concerning the drunken-driving accident of an 18 year old that resulted in one of his passengers dead and the other crippled.

One Saturday night in September, 1982, a Villanova fraternity, Delta Kappa Epsilon, had sponsored a party at which alcohol was served. Early Sunday morning Corbin Evans drove away from the party where he'd been drinking, carrying 2 passengers, Monica Buckley (19) and Anne Fasset (17). Shortly afterwards, Evans crashed into a truck; Monica Buckley was killed, and Anne Fasset lost the use of her arms and legs.

Campus Survey Results Are Alarming

by Karen Reap and Sue Snyder

In October of 1986, six social work students ran a survey on the incidence of sexual harassment and violence among Juniata females. The results of the survey are alarming! The incidence of rape, physical abuse, and sexual harassment are more prevalent than we anticipated.

Sexual harassment has been defined as any attempt to coerce an unwilling person into a sexual relationship or to subject a person to unwanted sexual attention. This article is to bring about awareness of the prevalence of sexual harassment on our campus and to make one aware of the facilities available here.

Of five hundred and twelve surveys distributed, two hundred and fourteen were returned. Ninety-two women reported at least one incident of rape, physical abuse, threat or other forms of harassment.

The number of incidences that ocurred at Juniata were overwhelming. Of the nineteen rape cases reported, eight occurred here. There were a total of forty-three physical abuse cases reported; twenty-one happened at Juniata. Eighteen diverse abuses (i.e. verbal and mental abuse, peeping toms, and physical intimidation) were reported, of these eighteen, eight took place at Juniata.

The effects of the harassment were varied. Some women were left with a fear of men and of being alone. Others felt they were unable to trust anyone. Most of the women's self confidence was affected and they had a low sense of self worth. Some women were quiet and withdrawn, while others experienced a sense of guilt.

It was also surprising that many or most of the incidences were not reported. Only thirteen of eighty-three reported their situation to a position of authority. The women gave different reasons for not reporting the harassment. Many were afraid of being reprised by the assailant. Others were afraid the person in authority would not believe them or would ridicule them. Most of all, however, the victims felt that nothing would happen if the incident was reported, and therefore didn't feel it was necessary.

At Juniata there are a number of services available to students concerning sexual harassment. Incidences can be reported to the Campus Counselor, Dr. Jay Buchanan or to Mrs. Cherry in Student Services. In addition, Resident Directors and Assistants are trained to listen, and to make referrals when necessary to the appropriate authorities.

Editorial

Thanks for the Input

The Juniatian has been pleasantly surprised by the response to our new Student of the Week column. We have received many suggestions for Student of the Week from JC students, faculty, administration and staff.

We just wanted to say thanks. We've been very discouraged with the lack of support for our organization in the past. We appreciate your recent support as we try to reverse our situation by initiating new ideas like Student of the Week, Wayfarer's Journal, International Notes, and guest editorials.

I, as the editor, would however like to comment on the recent responce I've received concerning the last two Muddy Runs, which were written anonymously. It was assumed that one specific student was singled out in both articles. The person was referred to in the first article, however, in the second article, the initials stood for someone else.

I decided to allow Muddy Runs to be written anonymously because I felt it would improve the humorous, tongue-in-cheek attitude that is the purpose of Muddy Runs and perhaps encourage seniors to write more regularly. I had just assumed that Muddy Run would be received in a good natured way, much like the response to All Class Night has always been.

If anyone was offended, I apologize. I plan to continue with the new idea of anonymous Muddy Runs, hoping it will give its writers more freedom to maintain a humorous spirit. However, I will ensure that no specific names or initials are printed in the column again.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

I recently saw Platoon, the overpowering film about the U.S. experience in Vietnam. When I came out of the theatre, I saw a beautiful little boy of about three or four, and I was choked with tears when I thought about what might still happen to him if more people do not start working to make sure that we do not get involved in another Vietnam-style debacle.

I also thought afterwards about the fire that burned inside college students twenty years ago - the fire of protest. What has happened to that fire? The issues of war, racism, poverty, injustice, and human rights haven't disappeared. Have students surrendered to the "I can't do anything about it" attitude, or have we allowed ourselves to be lulled into complacency by a President who thinks he can smile and joke his way out of anything?

I know there are hundreds of students across the country that care. But I am painfully sure there are caring sudents on this campus, and there are sudents who couldn't care less what happens in the rest of the world.

I urge all my fellow students to see Platoon. The ones who care will be moved to make renewed efforts for peace, and the ones who don't care will hopefully start to care.

This isn't just our world, my friends. It belongs to that little boy I saw, too. Let's make sure the world he sees when he reaches our age is a better world than what we see today.

John E. Deppen

Counselor's Corner

"HAPPINESS IS . . . different things to different people", so goes the somewhat familiar line to the somewhat familiar song.

What is happiness to you? Responses such as, Happiness is: doing well on an exam, knowing that persons you care about care about you, feeling good about yourself, being there when others need you, or living life to the fullest certainly suggest how many of us describe happiness.

The current issue of American Health (you are welcome to borrow my copy or read the copy in the Wellness Room) takes as its theme, "HAPPINESS IS. . . . taking charge of your life". It examines the obvious importance of paying close attention to diet, regular exercise and, most critically, the sense of control that we have over our health.

Regarding the feeling of being in control, a recent Gallup survey reports that the single most important factor in personal happiness is being in control of one's health. Put another way, taking control of your health helps you take control in other aspects of your life.

Peter F. Drucker, well known author and management consultant, states that, "Health now means wellness: the capacity to function well-whether in work or in education or at the seashore." Being in control of our health means managing our emotions, managing our bodies, and managing our minds.

In the next few articles we will examine in more detail the wellness concept.

Plan A Fling For Spring

by John Valori

As winter months are quickly passing by us, it won't be long 'til spring time is here again and all of the fun-filled events that go with it. Old traditions are often hard to forget—Raft Regatta was one most Juniatians will probably remember for quite sometime. This year Centerboard is planning a Spring Fling weekend to be scheduled on the weekend of April 24 & 25. An eventful weekend of outdoor fun and entertainment is in the early stages of planning. One sure event which will kick off this festive occasion, will be Juniata's traditional Mud Volleyball sponsored by Phi Chi Theta. As many campus organizations and students as possible are being encouraged to get involved and help plan this successful weekend. The outcome will depend upon student input and participation. Come out and help make JUniata's traditions live on. An organizational meeting is scheduled for Thursday, February 12th at 7:00 pm in the Centerboard office.

CASE

Because Evans was a minor, anyone over 21 who helped him obtain the alcohol which was the probable cause of his mis-judgement can also be held liable as an "accomplice". However, before this case, the courts defined "accomplice" solely as the person who physically handed the alcohol to the minor. This court case has widened the definition to any adults who "substantially aided" the minor to obtain the alcohol. In this case, everyone even remotely involved was sued, but the court found the following people responsible: the president of the fraternity that sponsored the party—he helped organize the party and supplied some of the drinks; the treasurer (who wasn't even at the party)—he also helped organize and signed a blank check he knew would be used to buy alcohol; and more students who let the fraternity use their apartment for the party, knowing that minors would be served alcohol there.

So if I want to throw a party and serve alcohol, me and anyone who helps me out, run a very good chance of being sued if anyone gets hurt as a result of someone under 21 getting drunk at my party. I don't even have to be at the party; as long as I "substantially" contribute towards a minor who was at the party getting alcohol, I can still be held liable.

And it's possible that the courts could even further widen their definition of "substantially aid" to include the college, if the party is held by a college-sponsored organization. In another social host lawsuit, Penn State has already been sued for $22 million.

So this new policy isn't just a new way to aggravate students. It's protection for both the college and students. Most of us probably realize this already, because, according to Dean Tilden, the response of most students to the social host program has been "mature and understanding."

J.C. Grad Is Philly's #2 Man

by Jef Buehler

After blowing through a red light, being followed by police, getting the wrong directions from a lady who had a barely understandable accent from somewhere in the eastern hemisphere, and dealing with other not too helpful incedents, I finally reached my destination. Up an elevator, through a myriad of hallways, and into the broadcasting studio of WYSP in Philadelphia, there he stood. (actually he sat) Randy Kotz—Disc Jockey and Juniata alumnus—hangover and all. He had a good reason for being in his condition. (yeah, but we all have them, right?) It seems that over the past year WYSP went from being twelfth in terms of listenership to sixth; Kotz himself is now the number two DJ in Philadelphia and is quite happy about both of these changes. So happy was Randy, that he delayed eating his microwaved lasagna for lunch until almost the end of my visit.

After graduating from Juniata in 1974 as "something of an Economics major" and kicking about the Philadelphia area for a while, Randy landed his first job after college—working in an ACME warehouse. (who says those Juniata job placement statistics aren't true?) From the supermarket to part time at WEEZ in Chester, was Randy's next move. After a short period there, Randy was hired at WDEL in Wilmington, Delaware and even DJ'd at a country station (WRCP). Finally sometime in the late 70s, Randy broke onto the rock and roll radio scene in Philadelphia. He worked at current megastation WMMR as a part time DJ, but when he was denied a chance at a full time position, Randy got ticked off and took a job at WYSP. Outside of a short period where everyone at WYSP was fired, including our Mr. Kotz, Randy has worked there since 1982 and thinks that it is a "great" experience.

Randy does indeed love his job—in fact, he told me that in the radio business you HAVE to love it or else you probably won't make it. "There's a lot of B.S. and you have to stick with it. . ." A typical day for Randy includes waking up whenever, getting to the station by 9:30, and preparing for his four hour stint on the air which begins at 10 am. After the show he might do some production work at the station or play tennis. However, after a recent auto-accident, tennis has been put aside for awhile. In the evening Randy can be found hopping around the Philadelphia area, making club appearances and otherwise earning bucks the fun way.

So how about life at Juniata in the early 70s? Randy made things interesting for everyone concerned, or so I was informed. I mean, he didn't get the nickname "Randal the Vandal" for nothing! This man was one of the vanguard youth who got pinned with social probation—what an honor. Very much into explosions, Randy once pur a string of firecrackers under an RA's door and blew up mailboxes down in Ellis. (the latter netted him the social pro) In conclusion, Randy said that Juniata enabled him to "think on my feet while I sit down." As of yet, I haven't figured out what that exactly means, but in the entire scheme of life we can let a couple of things slide by.

SOS!

The Juniatian is in dire need of reporters. Reporters meetings are on Sundays at 4:15 p.m. at the Juniatian office in the basement of Ellis Hall. (Across from the V103 station).

Keep the freedom of speech alive, write an article!

The Juniatian is starting a new column, "Wayfarer's Journal." This column will relate the experiences of J.C. students who are presently abroad and the foreign exchange students here at Juniata.

Any foreign exchange student at J.C. or any J.C. student abroad wishing to submit an article on their experiences should send inquiries to: The Juniatian, Box 667, Juniata College.

V103

The Program Director's position will be filled by sophomore Mike Barnett who replaces Kelly Koup. Mike's goals include a comphrensive survey and a format which reflects the listeners' tastes. Mike would also like to bring back the V103 featured artist weekend.

Junior John Ehmann replaces Barnett as News Director. John looks forward to more involvement in the news in the sports department and a focus on campus and national news. Ehmann also plans to utilize the satellite dish fully.

Congrats to all elected board members at WKVR and best of luck in your upcoming year at V103.

Jello Wrestling

by Steph Seidle

Watch 500 gallons of jello wiggle on Saturday, March 7 at 8:00 pm. Wrestlers will don their costumes, Julie Keehner will don her new dress and the bell will ring to raise money for Special Olympics.

Interested teams (two women vs. one man) should detach the registration sheet and send it with one dollar FOR EACH ENTRY to Box 422. Teams may enter as many times as they like, and a lottery will be held on Friday, February 20 to determine the contestants.

RHA'S are in a competition to provide jello for the event. Remember, 500 gallons is a lot of jello. Contact your RHA representatives to see how you can help.

The question, however, remains: WILL RONDO AND THE KILLER BEES BE BACK?

I want to wrestle in the 2nd Annual JELLO WRESTLING contest to benefit Special Olympics.

Girl's Basketball Roundup

This Month In Review

By Andrea Zavod

While the rest of campus settles into spring semester schedules, the Lady Indians have continued with their winter season schedule, having played eight games since January 19th.

Despite a 2-6 record (4-10 overall), the Indians have had strong consistent performances from the team and individuals.

The Indians are a well balanced scoring team with Hillegass, Grubb, Lockawich and Kellock all sharing high scorer honors. Grubb had 14 points against Messiah, Wilkes, and Dickenson, Hillegass with 15 against Wilkes and Kellock and Lochawich with 13 against Dickenson and Kings respectively.

In a game over MAC rival Lycoming, the Indians suffered a team setback when Soph. Laura Hoffman went down with a knee injury early in the contest.

With a 20 point night from Grubb, the Lady Indians went on to beat the Lyco's 49-47.

The team's second win came last Saturday night against a tough Kings team. Behind steady scoring from Hillegass(12), Renee Malkin(12), Kellock(12) and Lockawich(13) and outstanding team foul shooting (27 for 32), the Indians handed Kings their seventh loss of the season.

Notes: The Indians traveled to York College last night for a MAC contest.

V-Ball Wins Opener

Juniata's Men's Volleyball Club started its 1987 season with a revenge win over Dickinson College Sunday. The spikers took three straight games 15-11, 15-8 and 15-11, avenging last year's hard fought, five-game loss at Dickinson.

The match got off to a quick start when middle hitter Dan Stambaugh floored a Tom Hunt set for an opening side-out against a surprised Dickinson defense. Accurate passing and deadly attacks by Keith Hall, Larry Hillman and Bobby Davies sparked the offense. Middle blocker Jack Winebrenner intimidated the opponents with blocks at the net.

The lead jumped to 9-0 before Dickinson could record its first points. After a 14-3 lead, Juniata plateaued and let Dickinson slowly chip away at the lead to 14-11, before the final point on a defensive net violation by Dickinson.

In the second game, Chris Hester and Gavin Reed provided an extra offensive punch, as well as sterling defensive play. Juniata jumped out to a 9-4 lead, but the visitors never got closer than 9-6 before the game ended at 15-8.

A cold start in the third game caused our spikers to fall behind at 0-7. We went through a complete rotation of six servers before scoring our first point. Then the tables were turned. Juniata picked up the offensive play scoring seven unanswered points to tie the game. Dickinson had seven side-outs against them with no points scored. Closing serves by Keith Hall and Dan Stambaugh put the clamps on the match.

The Men's club next plays at Lebanon Valley College Friday.

Outside Fitness

By Kelli Fahey

By now, some people must be wondering what the crazy wooden objects are that have been built all over campus. Occassionaly, you would witness a few Blue Army men constructing one of these wooden "things." Well suprisingly enough, these wooden "things" that are being built all over campus are the stations to a fitness and excersice trail.

Last year the graduating class donated the idea of a fitness and exercise trail. After completing all that they could afford, the students services office decided to continue and complete the project. The reason for this project is to keep people from jogging in the streets. This trail is designed so that individuals can work their cardio-vascular system and muscle tone, without being in danger of moving automobiles

The physical plant provided all the materials needed. They began building the stations in the fall and completed the trail at Christmas time. The Fitness and Exercise trail consists of a two mile long trail with ten stations. The first station starts at the gym parking lot in front of Sherwood. It continues all throughout campus and concludes at the parking lot behind Cloister. At each station a sign of easy to read instructions and pictures are available to help understand the trail clearer. A heart rate check is provided at four of the ten stations.

Bob Yankello, who is now in charge of the Fitness and Exercise Trail hopes to have a kick off day in early March. So keep your eyes and ears open in the Spring for information to help you get into good shape!

Cagers Split Week Beat FDU, Gettysburg

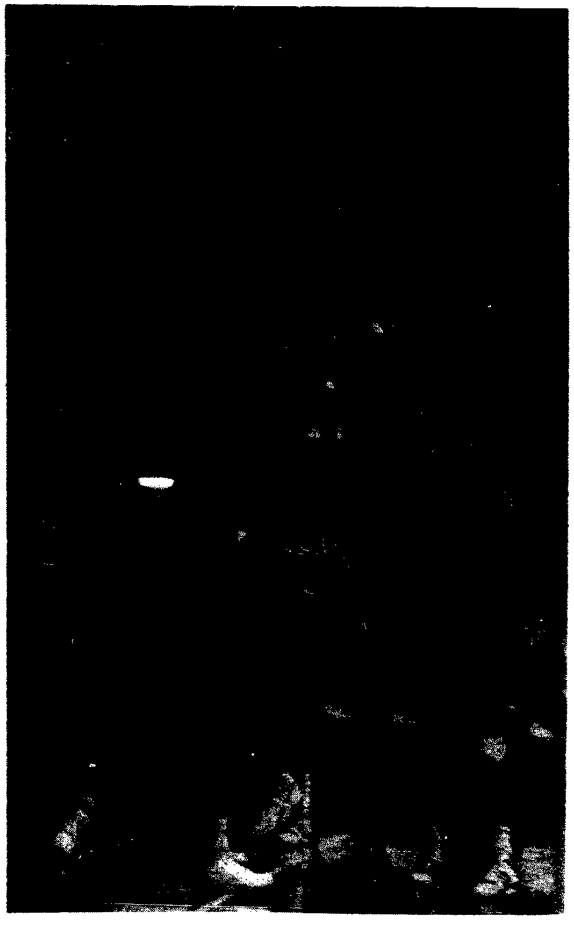
The Juniata Mens Basketball team went 2-2 this past week, compiling victories against Gettysburg and FDU-Madison, while losing close conference games to leauge leading Elizabethtown and 7th ranked Kings College.

Monday night Juniata hosted Gettysburg College and avenged last years loss when freshman Shawn Habakus hit a shot at the buzzer to win it for the Indians. This was yet another one of those see-saw battles for Juniata, however, this time the Indians found themselves at the top. Les Squair paced Juniata with 23 points and was on his way to being named MAC player of the week.

The Indians then traveled to Elizabethtown on Wednesday to try and knock off the leauge leading Bluejays, a team that JC lost to by two points in their second game of the season. After leading by one with two minutes gone by in the second half the Indians were in another nip and tuck battle. This time the bid for an upset fell short by 5 points. Wayne Paul, Shawn Habakus, and Les Squair led the way for the Indians.

Kings College the 7th ranked team in Division III, entered Juniata Friday night considered the best team in the Middle Atlantic conference. In front of the best crowd of the year at Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center Juniata took a four point lead into the locker room at half. All american center Ed moyer was held to 12 points, but the outstanding long distance shooting of Kings was enough to keep them in the game and in the end make the difference in the final score. With seven seconds on the clock JC had a chance to tie the game , but a shot at the buzzer fell short and Kings was victorious 78-76.

Only 18 hours later Juniata hosted FDU-madison (The 2nd place team in Kings Division). FDU was coming off a victory over Lycoming Saturday afternoon and needed a win to hold on to second place in their division. The Indians used all of their players and captured the victory to top off an exciting week of basketball.



MAC Player of the Week Les Squair goes up for two of his 23 points against Gettysburg. JC won at the buzzer.

Heavy Metal

by Lois Buchanan

A Christian Heavy Metal group? Isn't that a contradiction of terms? Not any more, it seems. On March 6, Messiah Prophet, a band that plays Heavy Metal Christian music, will be performing on campus, sponsored by the Christian Concert Committee.

Messiah Prophet, a relatively new band, is on their second tour, performing songs from their new album "Master of the Metal." They've become popular enough to pack houses in Chicago, St. Louis and Boston.

The band says that their music has been influenced by such groups as Kiss, Triumph, Styx, Journey, Foreigner, Judas Priest, and Metallica, and their style of music falls somewhere between that of Black Sabbath and Led Zepplin.

Bill Grabowski, who produced the "Master of the Metal" album, is impressed with the band, describing Messiah Prophet as "an awesome band on vinyl and even better live." Grabowski received a Gold Album award for his work on the Bon Jovi album "7800 Degrees Farenheit", and says that "Master of the Metal" is his best production so far.

"Joseph and the Amazing Technicolor Dreamcoat" was presented by the Barksdale Theater of Hanover, Virginia as part of the 1986-87 Artist Series. The spectacular performance brought the audience to their feet.

An Evening To Enchant

by Missy Iezzi

Friday, February 20, the stage of Oller Hall will come to life with the annual All Class Night production.

As is the tradition, each class will perform a skit based on an overall theme, which this year is fairy tales. The senior class will be performing Cinderella, the junior class, Alice in Wonderland, the sophomores are putting together Peter Pan and the freshman will perform Goose Tales.

The individual classes are scheduling rehearsals and set building, and the overall event is being coordinated through the Center Board appointed All Class Night Committee.

Tickets will be available the week of the event at the Information Desk. Each student is allowed only one ticket, and student ID is required.

Cast parties will be scheduled by the classes. On Saturday night the Center Board Dance Committee will be sponsoring a dance in the Sports & Recreation Center.

The only thing which remains to be seen is which class will win the coveted All Class Night trophy.

Battling Bands

by Rush Blady

The Dance Committee and the Judo Club are sponsoring the All Class Night/Battle of the Bands Party on Saturday night Feb. 21 from 10p.m. to 2. Yes, there are now two bands on campus, and it will be up to you to judge. Used Furniture and the newly formed Never Together. The two bands will alternate sets, "battling" in a four hour combination dance/ coffeehouse event. Both groups will play covers and original songs, and the many talented musicians involved are sure to provide skillful, danceable entertainment for the evening. In case you do not know who these 'skillful' guys are .... Used Furniture consists of Steve LeCrone - vocals, Dan Miller on lead and Brian McCallum on rhythym guitars, Eric Barnes and "Psycho" Mock on drums. (Forgive me, Alan) The new group Never Together has a front lineup of Jim Kaufman, Mike Morder, and Ben Hoffman on both guitars and vocals, with Chris Huff drumming. Being the neutral, nonbiased reporter that I am, I'll leave the decision up to you as to which is the better band. Either way, come out on Saturday for some good music and exercise, and a chance to make fun of the classes that lost. The dance will be 'open party' format, with soda, juices and food provided, all for a mere $2.

Indian Art At JC

For Christopher Shoels, the Indian subcontinent is a second home. He spent nearly two decades of the twenty-eight years he served in the American Foreign Service in India and Pakistan before he decided he wanted a career in photography.

In 1977 Sholes made his debut as a serious photographer with a one-man exhibit entitled "faces of Pakistan", which was well received in that country and on several university campuses in the United States. During the week of February 16-20 Juniata College will host the most recent of the Sholes exhibits, "Living Gods, Hindu Faces", as part of the college's "Festival of India" activities. The exhibit will be held inShoemaker Galleries with viewing hours 9:00a.m. to 4:00 p.m. daily during the festival.

"Loving Gods, Hindu Faces" consists of a collection of 34 color photographs and has been shown at American University, George Washington University (as part of the annual meeting of the Conference on Religion in South India), the University of Chicago, Carelton College, the University of Wisconsin, Broward Community College, and Applachian State University. It has also appeared in the Colorfax Gallery in Washington, D.C., and in each instance received excellent reviews.

In his recent work Sholes conveys his impressions of devout Hindus in South India. Among the images he projects are people engaged in meditation, prayer, and rituals in and around the temples of Tamil Nadu. Reflected throughout is the intimate relationship that Hindus have with the gods they worship, and Sholes attempts to capture what has been referred to as "the soul of India" - the peace, the faith, and the devotion of Hindus, and the solace that religion brings them.

Editorial

It would seem, to an uninvolved observer, that students at Juniata know how to wait their turn. A line is a very interesting concept which is generally accepted as a social norm. This observer could witness the effectiveness of a line in the bookstore-even when there are twenty people in front of you purchasing books, you take your place at the end. Right? On pay day when ten people need their checks cashed, you will stand in line, with check (and dime!) in hand, and wait your turn. Correct?

So, as students who have so much practice standing in line, why are there those who cannot wait their turn for meals? There is nothing more aggrevating to those students who do wait, than those who do not. It seems so harmless to just walk up and give Millie your number—meanwhile you are holding up the line, justifying this by saying 'I have a 12:00 class'. Now, if everyone who had a 12:00 class would do this, there would be as many people in "Millie's line" as in the line where they should be. Then to compound this problem, they preceed to hold up the line once again when they enter and get their food. Now, it seems out of character for students to think that they do not have to wait-what makes them so special to ignore this basic social norm? How can someone feel that they are more important than any other JC student?

This social dilemma is very easily rectified. The obvious solution would be for every student to wait their turn, then each and every student will be able to get to their 12:00 class or just get where they must because they didn't have to wait for those inconsiderates to go through Millie's line.

As I sit and reflect on the past activities which occurred this previous weekend, I realize the full creative potential we students have at Juniata. For those students who feel deprived of experiencing the fraternity atmosphere, this weekend presented the oportunity to kick off your shoes, wiggle your toes in the sand, and dine on the delicacy of fresh, unsuspecting goldfish. Yes, East Houses was the hubbub of activity.

To celebrate one's independence, one could venture to East, dressed in black to boycott Valentine's Day. One could be a man or woman hater for the evening and toast to their chosen, present state of abstinence.

For the young lovers on campus, all twelve of you, you had the pleasure of snuggling with your sweetheart while dancing dreamily on a romantic, sultry blue piece of plas

And for those optimistic students who "never say die," you were able to try your wit and luck at the infamous Dating Game. This was the night where students put on their Sunday best, dashing smile, and great personality hoping to meet the man or woman of their dreams. Done with the utmost secrecy, the contestants voices were well disguised and identity was well protected by the single verticle wall separating contestant and bachelors or bachelorettes. For many contestants, hearts were joined and love sprung. However, many went home broken hearted, ready to dream of what might have been.

In conclusion, I must say my observations have led me to continue the faith I have in Juniata.

SOAP OPERA REVIEW

THE YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS: Faren was stunned when Evan told her that they were married before she married Andy. John was shocked to find Ashley in the sanitarium.

Letters to the Editor

Dear Editor,

We as college students have many rights and responsibilities. One of the most important of these is the speaking out or protesting of injustices directly affecting us.

Freedom of choice and free enterprise have long been a right given to us constitutionally. This right becomes stifled by the state control of alcohol.

A bill is pending in the state legislature to deregulate the sale of "hard liquor". We, as students must support this bill. We must use our constiutional right of freedom of speech to help this bill become law.

In the sixties, students changed the American government's policy towards Vietnam; so please do not underestimate your power or potential. We have the support; we have the people and we have the authority.

We can not and will not waste time.

Sincerely,
Jerry Camalleri

SHAC Starts Off 2nd Semester

SHAC, the Student Health Advisory Committee, is starting off the second semester with a lot of ambition and new health related programs for spring term. The newly opened Wellness Room will continue to be opened during Health Center hours: Monday-Friday 8:00-12:00, and 1:00-5:00, and will be staffed during the evenings as soon as a schedule can be arranged. In addition to being a self-help and analysis center, the Wellness Room is a health resource center, providing many forms of free and informative materials.

One of SHAC's major projects for spring term is PTOPS, or Person to Person Support Groups. These support groups will be managed by students, well versed and knowledgable in a given area. While these members do not necessarily claim professional expertice, they know more in their support group topic than most of their peers. These people through special training, an intense interest and study, or personal experience have something in the way of support and advice that they can offer to others in need. In addition, these leaders will have the names and numbers of professional agencies and services.

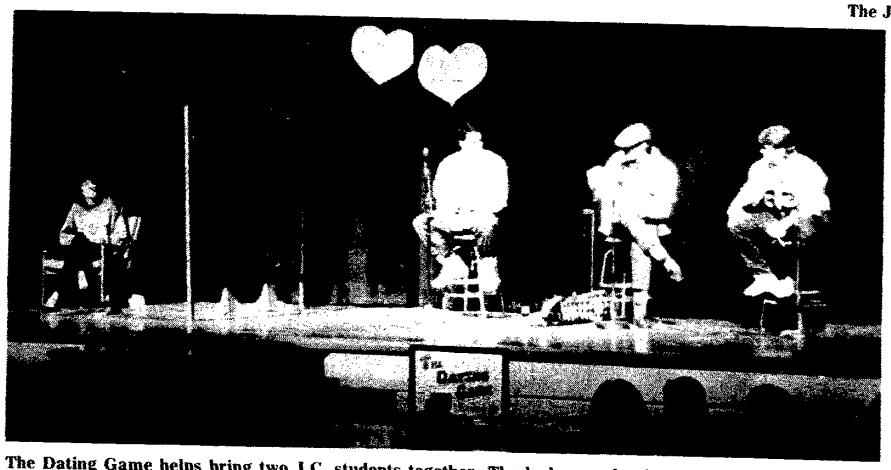
Starting TUESDAY, MARCH 3 from 7:00-8:00 pm., Crickett Julius, a recovered anorexic, and Juniata student, will be leading support group discussions on anorexia and other eating disorders. Anyone who feels that they, or someone they know could benefit from this informative yet casual opportunity to share ideas and experiences is encouraged to attend.

Starting WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, from 7:00-8:00 pm., CeCelia Barnes, State Bodybuilding Champion, Natural Physique Champion, active sportswear model and Juniata student will be offering a comprehensive support group on Fitness and Weight Training Techniques. Anyone interested in beginning a Fitness program, losing weight, or implementing a new program into an already existing one, is encouraged to attend. In addition to discussion, visits will be made to the Kennedy Sports and Rec Center to cover the machines and weights offered, and to demonstrate techniques.

These support groups will meet at the same time every week as long as there is an active interest. As with all SHAC activities, the support group programs are free. Those interested in participating are encouraged to sign up in advance at the Health Center. All groups will meet in the SHAC Wellness Room, located on first Lesher adjacent to the Health Center.

MONDAY, MARCH 23 and WEDNESDAY 25, the members of the American Red Cross will be on campus to provide CPR instruction and certification. All participants will be required to complete the entire program, even those seeking re-certification. There will be an allotted number of participants, so interested persons are encouraged to register in advance in the Health Center.

TUESDAY, MARCH 31 is WELLNESS DAY. From 11:30-2:00 representatives from several health related professions will be in the Kennedy Sports and Rec Center to offer a variety of free tests. Due to the rising cost of health care, Wellness Day will provide a unique opportunity to have dental screening, eye screening, urinanalysis, blood sugar levels checked, pap smears and pelvic exams, blood pressure checks and an aerobics program, not to be missed. All testing and services are FREE to all students, faculty, and staff of Juniata College.



The Dating Game helps bring two J.C. students together. The lucky couple of Mary Lou Miller and Larry Hillman will have a dream evening in the Faculty Lounge, along with the other winning couples.

ASF Phonathon

by Stephanie Seidle

Are you ready to lend an ear to the Annual Support Fund phone-athon?

The ASF drive is back again this year with a fresh new look under the direction of Garrett Hoover, the new Assistan Director of Development. The ASF phone-athon will raise funds to support the College: it provides money for scholarships, athletic equipment, classroom materials, special events, and other causes directly benefitting the students.

This year the phone-athon will be a competition between the classes. Likewise, members of each class will call not only alumni, but also parents. The parents will be phoned on Feb. 23-26; and March 2-5. Alumni will be phoned on March 30, April 2, and April 6-9.

Mr. Hoover explains that prizes for students will be bigger this year. Each participant will receive a T-shirt; individual prizes include a JC sweatshirt (for highest single contribution) and $25 cash prizes (for highest amount raised and highest participation rate acquired). Class prizes are OIP dinners for the members of the class that raised the highest total amount for their class and to those who had the highest participation rate for their class.

Remember, Juniata counts on your help. Please come out to support your school and your class by phoning for the Annual Support Fund. Interested individuals should contact Mr. Garrett Hoover in the Development Office.

Student Clogger

by Andrea Zavod

Fifteen miles south of Wheeling, West Virginia, lies Glendale, where the town of 1300 people tap their feet to the beat of Blue Grass music and watch one of our own clog with the best in the business.

Sophomore Lisa Williams watched Uncle Jed clog his way through the Beverly Hillbillies and after going to numerous dances with her mom, Lisa decided to learn how to clog. Once she learned the basic steps, there was no keeping her feet still.

Traditionally called flat footing, clog dancing has been adapted to the stage, bringing metal taps to the shoes and high kicks to the step.

Williams claims that it is not hard to clog, it's a lot like tap dancing. "You have to remember to click your heels on every beat and be on your toes in between."

While most cloggers dance to Blue Grass or folk music, Williams says that any music with a solid four beat rhythm is good clogging music. "I've danced routines using, 'Flashdance,' 'Freezeframe,' and 'I Wanna New Drug.' "

In her seven years of clogging, the past three with her partner, Scotty, she has opened and perfomed with Loretta Lynne, Louise Mandrell and Grandpa Jones, a Blue Grass mentor.

The highlight of her clogging career came when she opened for Bill Monroe, the father of Blue Grass music. After Monroe came on, he asked the cloggers back on stage and danced along with them.

"That was just the best. I don't know if he was just talking, but he invited us down to Nashville. It was a real thrill."

Lisa and her partner perform every year in WWVA Radio Jamboree. She has traveled to Detroit Michigan and clogged in the 1985 Budweiser Hoedown.

She brought her talent here last year and danced during Ray Owen's performance and with the Irish band, The Jim Corr Brothers.

Lisa likes to clog for pleasure, rather than competition, but when she performs at shows, that pleasure turns into some well earned money.

"I can earn $50 for ten minutes of clogging. . .it comes in handy."

Lisa realizes that in this part of the country, clogging is yet to gain popularity. In her high school of 1200, only two or three others clogged. She says the further south you go towards North Carolina, they teach clogging in every gym class.

Lisa is studying environmental science and though she has a Friday afternoon lab, if there is clogging to do, she'll make the six hour trip home to Glendale, West Virginia.

Oriental Inner Circle

by Elizabeth Radcliffe

This past Saturday evening, Inner Circle held its special Valentine dinner featuring a number of delicious entrees such as Shrimp Alfredo, New York Strip Steak, Steamed Scallops, and many more. To enhance the evening, songs by Mike Morder were sung to set an atmosphere of fine dining and romance. Many who attended the dinner felt it was a relaxing and enjoyable evening.

The Inner Circle Committee would like to extend its thanks to Food Service and the waitresses for making it a successful evening.

For all those who attended the Valentine dinner and for all those who have yet to attend Inner Circle, I would like to invite you to savor an evening in the Orient on Wednesday, Feb. 25. While dining in the Orient, you will experience wok cooking at your table and an original Oriental atmosphere.

Please make your reservations at the Info Desk by Monday, Feb. 23. Seatings for the dinner are at 6 p.m., 6:15 p.m., and 6:30 p.m. The cost to visit the Orient for the night will be $3.25 plus meal sticker number for students and $5.00 for non-students, faculty, and staff.

Juniata Hires Dickey Swim Team Arises

By Andrea Zavod

After 14 years of competitive swimming, Juniata swimmimg coach, Jon Dickey, has only one question, where are all the summers?

Worjing with only 12 team members, Dickey knows there are more talented swimmers on campus and is concerned with their whereabouts.

"I see them come to the pool, do their own workouts like they would at practice, but they don't want to join the team."

Dickey has recieved a go ahead nod from Athletic Director Bill Berrier to build the swimming program that Dickey took over this year. "I'd like to build a program. . .It's tough without numbers," says Dickey.

As a club sport, Dickey relizes he won't get 100% comitment from his swimmers. Nevertheless we hold practice two times a week, each session involving 3-5000 meters of swimming and individual and team instruction in technique and endurance training.

This season the team will compete in 6 meets with other MAC and PSAC schools.

This past week, the team traveled to swim against Susquehanna and Lycoming. Because of the number problems almost every team member had to swim in four events. Junior Steve Grater broke Susquehanna's pool record in the 100 meter breast stroke and the team came up two points shy in the loss to LYCO.

THE ADMISSSIONS OFFICE wishes to thank everyone who helped host the 138 high school students who visited campus on the "Journey to Juniata"

The reviews are in and it was a huge success.

Thank You!!

Rick, Marsha, Michelle, Mollie, Susan, Joe, and John.

Recently hired swim team coach Jon Dickey hopes his 14 years of swimming experience is enough to try and establish a swimming program at Juniata.

Be A Friend For Life

When a friend talks of suicide...

Listen

Let your friend tell you of his situation and his feelings. Don't give advice or feel obliged to find simple solutions. LISTEN and try to imagine how you would feel in his place.

Be Honest

If your friend's words or actions scare you, tell her. If you're worried or don't know what to do, say so. Don't be a cheerful phony.

Share Feelings

At times everyone feels sad, hurt or hopeless. You know what that's like—share your feelings. Let your friend know he's not alone.

Get Help

If you keep this secret you may lose your friend. Perhaps you and your friend can think of a helpful adult she would talk to. If not, talk to someone yourself—a parent, teacher, minister, counselor or Crisis Center—and find out what to do next.

Your friend turned to you because you could be trusted to help. You CAN help, but not alone.

Wrestling Roundup

By Andrea Zavod

"It's tough to win a match when you have to give up 18 points." This according to Wrestling Coach Bill Berrier, whose team without wrestlers at 126, 134, and 142 pound weight classes, fell to Muhlenberg, Scranton and Elizabethtown this past Saturday.

"Muhlenberg and Scranton have a lot of talent, they are on the upswing with their program. E-town is in a situation like ourselves," says Berrier as he assesed the compition.

Individually JC Junior Larry Krizner won 2 of 3 matches. Senior Dave Cooper faced three tough competitors, only able to pin his E-town opponent. Senior Eric olson and Sophomore Tom Marte were the only other Indian grapplers to register points for the team. Getting experience this past weekend was Senior Steve Camarota wrestling for the first time since high school.

Volleyball Scoop

Men Continue To Win; Beat Lebanon Valley

by Andy Rhinehart

The Men's Volleyball club stayed on the right track Friday evening by defeating Lebanon Valley College in three straight games 15-12, 15-6, and 16-14. The Men spikers are now 2-0 with their biggest test to come this Sunday at 2p.m. against Messiah in the I.M. gym. Everyone is welcome to attend.

The team started out slowly by falling behind 7-11, but after coach Donaldson's timeout the guys came back strong to put the game away. The first game was lead by the defense of Jack Winebrenner and Keith Hall. The spikers took the second game with no problems lead by the hitting of Danny Stambaugh and the setting of Tom Hunt. Lebanon Valley came back in the third game with a final surge to try and stop the Indians, but J.C. accepted the challenge and the serving of Chris Hester gave the spikers the momentum they needed to put the game away. Gavin Reed lead the final defensive stop by the Indians when they were behind 13-14. The set-hit combination of Andy Rhinehart and Bob Davies helped to bring the spikers back and take the game. But Larry Hillman provided the last bit of effort needed to take the match with a spectacular one handed defensive save at 15-14.

Make sure you come support the Men Spikers.

Indians Lose To York Season Almost Over

The mens basketball team had only played one game betwen last weeks paper and the printing of this edition, and that was against York College, where the Indians suffered a tough road loss.

Coach Dan Helm stated, "Our team is young and I hope we are learning from our tough road losses this year. Next season we play 14 games away, so we must learn to win on the road if we are to be contenders in the MAC's." The Indians only won 2 games (out of 9) on the road this season.

Going into the game the Indians were prepared to stop Yorks big men, but as Juniata has experienced all season, the oppositions weakness was at its best ever. York scored 75% of their points from the outside and made several three-point goals, forcing the Indians to come out of their zone and play man-to-man defense.

York took advantage of the Indians second half full court press, scoring uncontested layups to pull away from Juniata. Wayne Paul paced the Indians in the scoring department, making most of his hoops in the second halff. Paul is still among the scoring leaders in the leauge and will probably just fall shy of the "1000 point career plateau."

Les Squair also remains the conferences second leading rebounder. Tuesday Juniata played at Western Maryland and this Saturday, at 7:30, will host Wilkes in the last game of the season. Seniors Chris Frew"bear" and Tom "Pee Wee" Reese will be playing in their last game as a Juniata Hoopster.

Oratorical Contest

A tradition that began more than seven decades ago is soon to be revived at Juniata College.

On Monday evening, March 30, the John M. and Thomas F. Bailey Oratorical Contest will be held in Shoemaker Gallery, with a $500.00 award to be given for the best presentation. The final competition will begin at 8:00 p.m., with the contest open to any Juniata College student. The theme for the contest is, "Vision and Values: My Role in the Community."

The original Bailey Oratorical Award was established in 1915 by the Honorable Thomas F. Bailey, who served as President Judge of Huntingdon County from 1916 to 1936. The contest and the award was established in honor of the judge's father, John M. Bailey, who had also served as President Judge of Huntingdon County, he from 1896 to 1903.

In the early history of Juniata College the Oratorical Contest was a spectacle of major proportions. A prize of $50.00 was awarded to the winner of the contest, but this year, an enhanced endowment contributed by Judge Bailey's son-in-law, Sedgley Thornbury, makes possible an award of $500.00. In addition, the name of the winner will be permanently inscribed on an antique loving cup presented by Col. Thornbury's son, Thomas Bailey Thornbury.

The contest will be judged by a panel of three outside experts: the Honorable Charles C. Brown, Jr., President Judge of Centre County and Trustee of Juniata College; the Honorable Newton C. Taylor, President Judge of Huntingdon County; and Dr. Cynthia Begnal from the Department of Speech Communications at Penn State University. Professor Clayton E. Briggs will serve as Moderator.

All interested students are invited and encouraged to enter the competition, and lack of experience should not be a deterrent. For more information and for applications please contact Kay Stephenson in the Development Office in Founders Hall, or call extension 216.

Juniata College President Robert Neff announces a $750,000 bequest to the college from the estate of Mrs. Dorothy Baker Johnson at a college press conference held Friday, February 20.

Monetary Gift Presented To Juniata College

A gift from the estate of Dorthy Baker Johnson totaling more than $750,000 was presented to Juniata College on Friday, February 20 for the endowment of student scholarships.

Dr. John C. Baker, brother of Mrs. Johnson and a man renowned for his leadership and personal philanthropy, announced the bequest during a press conference in Shoemaker Gallery on the college campus. Mrs. Johnson's total gifts to the institution over a long period of years approximate one million dollars.

Mrs. Johnson's bequest continues a long tradition of personal and family support for Juniata College. The Baker name has for many years been prominent at the college, with intense interest displayed by all five Baker children who attended Juniata between 1911 and 1921.

Dorothy Baker Johnson attended Juniata College, received a degree from Radcliffe College, and did graduate work at the New York School of Social Work. She concluded a distinguished career in social work as Director of the Family Society of New Haven, and lived the last years of her life in retirement in Everett, Pennsylvania, in the family home. The very generous gift will provide needed support for the endowment of student scholarship, and is one of the largest single bequests Juniata has received.

Dr. Robert W. Neff, President of Juniata College, commented on the most recent Baker family gift saying, "We are overwhelmed by the generosity and graciousness of Mrs. Johnson and her support for the ideals and efforts of Juniata. Scholarships and financial aid last year provided four million dollars to over eighty percent of Juniata's students. It is, and will continue to be our goal, to ensure that every qualified student may receive a Juniata education, regardless of economic situation, and Mr. Johnson's gift, with those of the other Baker family members, is most deeply appreciated."

The funds from Mrs. Johnson's bequest will become part of the already established Dorothy Baker Johnson Scholarship Fund. Her previous gifts have been divided among, beside the scholarship fund named in her honor, the Jennie C. and Francis Baker Scholarship, the Robert C. Baker Scholarship Fund, the Margaret E. Baker Peace Fund, the Helen Baker Library Fund, the John C. and Elizabeth C. Baker Peace Fund, and the Dorothy Baker Johnson Anthropology Fund.

Bechetoille Visits J.C.

Bernard Bechetoille, director of the International Education Exchange Program for the Federation Universitaire et Polytechnique de Lille, France, was a visitor to Juniata College recently.

The purpose of his trip to Pennsylvania was to visit the seven French exchange students presently attending Juniata, to increase his familiarity with the college, and to assist in encouraging more Juniata students to consider a year of international study, particularly

Editorial

Editor's Note: The following is a guest editorial by President Robert Neff.

On Friday, February 20, Juniata College announced that it had received a gift from the Dorothy Baker Johnson Estate of more than $750,000. This gift has been designated primarily for the endowment of student scholarships.

Dorothy Baker attended Juniata College but received a degree from Radcliffe College and did graduate work at the New York School of Social Work. She comes from a family who has been deeply committed to Juniata College. Primarily, she was concerned to assure that persons of need would be able to receive education.

There has been much talk about the cost of a college education today. Juniata College is committed to providing the student with the highest quality education. To provide quality education requires a significant number of dollars; however, I want to assure the student body that our first priority over the next years will be finding additional monies, like the gift of Dorothy Baker Johnson, to make Juniata accessible to all students. We will provide scholarships for merit as well as for need, but most importantly we will strive to assure that anyone who qualifies to come to Juniata College will be able to do so. This announcement is the first step in reaching that objective.

Juniata Prepares To Plan Its Own Future

By Lois Buchanan

President Neff has appointed three committees, all composed of administrative, faculty, and student members, to assist in Juniata's Strategic Planning process. According to Dr. Arnold J. Tilden, this process will "allow the college to shape its own future; to take advantage of opportunities and not just react to new developments." The strategic planning process is described by George Keller in his book, Academic Strategy. The strategy is similar to the planning procedures of many business corporations, in that it requires the instutution first to define its goals, and then to examine its environment and resources to determine the best way to meet those goals.

The Mission Statement Committee will look at what Juniata represents, values, and wants to achieve in educating students. The committee will first examine the functions performend by the college, and for whom. According to Dr. Tilden, much of the decision-making that will occur after the college mission is defined will have to take the mission statement into account. Juniata's mission statement will have to be flexible enough to allow the college to take advantage of new opportunities, yet clear enough to keep Juniata on the right track.

The Internal Assessment Committee will be following the guidelines suggested by the Middle States Association which periodically reviews the quality of the college's programs and policies. The Internal Assessment committee will study the resources, planning and programs used by the college. Some of the areas under examination will be the library, the college's plant and equipment, the college's future plans and its follow-up on former status reports, its academis programs and institutional and organizational research , and Juniata'a policies dealing with student services, admission, retention and financial operation. Examining the college's internal environment will help the committee pinpoint Juniata's strong points and determine whether the college is using its resources effectively.

The External Assessment Committee will examine the facors in Juniata's external environment that have an effect on the college. Some of these factors include the demograghics for college-bound students, laws and regulations dealing with higher education, employment opportunities for collge graduates and Juniata graduates, technological innovations that could affect Juniata's programs, social and cultural developments, and factors related to Juniata's locale (such as the railroad service, Raystown lake, local industry). George Heller writes that ". . .three-fourths of all changes at colleges are a result of outside factors." By examining these factors, the committee will determine the changes and trends that will affect the college, and Juniata will be in a better position to decide on its own future.

Dr. Tilden states that the Mission Statement Committee hopes to have a finished statment by April, and the Internal and External Assessment Committees hope to be finished by May and October, respectively.

Bechetoille

in France.

Mr. Bachetoille, representing an institution of about 10,000 students, said he was very pleased with what he experienced at Juniata. He said there are certain differences in methods of teaching between the United States and France, but he felt those students who participated in the exchange program found the differences stimulating.

The exchange program with France was initiated 12 years ago, he said, and has enjoyed varied levels of success in participation. "There is no question that the students who study abroad find the program very worthwhile," he said. "But we would like to increase the number of students involved."

During an International Education Advisory Committee meeting which he attended at Juniata, Mr. Bechetoille reported that, as a means to stimulate student interest in France, his institution sponsors a "Parent's Day" to make both parents and students more aware of the benefits of international study. "Students frequently see what they perceive as difficulties in being a part of the program, but they fail to see the advantages," he said.

Stressing the 'one-world' philosophy in terms of business and human understanding, Mr. Bechetoille suggested that all professors should be encouraged to promote exchange and foreign language programs. "As I see it, part of the problem is that students - particularly American students - don't have enough confidence in their use of another language," he said.

Mr. Bechetoille also suggested that, as a means of alleviating student uncertainty about spending a year away from home in unfamiliar surroundings, students might be encouraged to participate in short-term international experiences by spending holiday vacations in homes in host countries. He said such experiences would go far in reducing the anxiety both students and parents feel when considering the exchange program.

"Both Juniata College and our institution in France are dedicated to this exchange program," said Mr. Bechetoille. "We need our students both here and in Europe to realize that more and more, with many jobs and life situations, it is a distinct advantage to know the larger world first hand."

Juniata College presently supports and participates in exchange programs with England, France, Germany, Japan, and Spain.

Counselor's Corner

It's Sunday evening and, as the weekend comes to a close, you begin to think about and, hopefully, plan for the busy and hectic week that begins early the next morning. Exams, papers, and the never ending reading assignments, not to mention all those meetings and activities, pretty much describe the demanding academic and social life of the average Juniata student.

How do we manage our lives and still keep some semblance of order and sanity?

As we continue our series of articles on wellness, it seems appropriate, particularly as it relates to the question of managing our lives, to discuss a concept introduced some years ago by Karl Albrecht. Albrecht, an organizational development consultant and pioneer in stress-reduction training, talks about the Wellness Triad. It consists of three factors that, together, play an integral role in our overall wellness.

The three facors can be remembered by the acronym RED: Relaxation, Exercise and Diet. Let's examine exercise as it relates to managing our lives more effectively and satisfyingly.

Very few would argue that regular exercise isn't important although a recent survey indicates that about one in three Americans is still totally sedentary. The 4.5 million dollar Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center is an indication of the importance that Juniata places on fitness and exercise in the overall well being (wellness) of our college community.

There is little question that we can deal better with the many stressors, work more effectively and generally be in more control when we include exercise in our lives.

Next week we'll talk about the benefits of exercise, how to get started, and, most critically, how to stay with it.

Along Muddy Run

One thing that really irritates me is the experimental mushroom dishes we're served in Baker Refectory. Now I'm not a connoisseur of fine foods, but I do know what my taste buds like and don't like. In all honesty, I hate mushrooms. I really think that they are disgusting.. I don't want them in my mouth. Unfortunately, somebody in Baker seems to think differently of mushrooms and they appear in great numbers . . . much to my dismay! Dishes like Broccoli/Mushroom/Cheese Casserole, Shrimp-fried Rice with mushroom bits, savory beef stew (mushrooms added), and salisbury steak smothered in mushroom sauce are just a few of the "lip-smacking" meals I try to avoid. Why do so many meals include mushrooms? A recent interview I conducted at Baker Refectory may shed some light on this mysterious subject.

I interviewed Mrs. Elmer P. Smazvzin IV, an Ellis janitor and Baker Refectory cooking consultant, to try to find a few answers. According to Mrs. Smazvzin, Her husband Elmer, Baker's chief cooking consultant and a recent graduate of the Quagmeyer School of Modern Art, is highly trained in mushroom impressionism. He takes his cooking seriously and he adds mushrooms to as many meals as possible as a way of expressing his natural creativeness. Mrs. Smazvzin further stated that Elmer's mushroom art is part of a growing trend in the art world and that his culinary genius is soon to be discovered. She encourages students to save their mushroom meals (instead of eating them) because one day they will be valuable masterpieces. Big bucks await the serious mushroom art collector and if you have any questions about how to frame Elmer's work, Mrs. Smazvzin said she would be more than happy to answer them.

Well, now you know why we have so much fungus on the menu. If you don't like mushrooms, start your very own Smazvzin collection today. Besides, looking at Baker food is not as bad as eating it!!

Until next time, take care and God bless you.

Steve Miller Band - "Living in the 20th Century"

Steve Miller is back and he's rocking as much as ever. But I should say that Steve and the boys seem to be experimenting with their music a bit more than usual on this album. Of course Steve Miller always did enjoy straying from the worn path, in his "Book of Dreams" album, Steve experimented with a synthesized rock sound in "Jet Airliner" and successfully pulled it off. This was a first in rock and set a precedent for Steve's future cuts, as well as for the modern Album-oriented rock formats of artists to follow.

As for the album itself, Steve experiments with styles of music quite different from his norm. The first cut - "Nobody But You, Baby" - is a surefire reproduction of the old Romantics tunes such as "What I Like About You." The sound is virtually the same and the feel is purely early '70's rock and roll. The next cut - "I Want to Make the World Turn Around" - is topping the charts and sounds very much like typical '80's soft rock (although a cut above the rest). Some of the other cuts on the first side resemble anything from Bruce Springsteen to Bob Marley.

As for the second side, you will only be happy if you enjoy old rhythm and blues rock and roll; rock at its beginnings. I found this side rather refreshing and commend Steve for his efforts (and courage) of leaving the typical '80's sound. All in all, this album is perfect vinyl for laying back, relaxing, and blowing off the work you have to do. And believe me, once you start listening, you won't want to stop - it's quite catching.

Oh, and by the way, I promised to thank Eric Barnes for some information that he contributed. Finally, if you are looking for a good, critical, knowledgeable opinion on the album, take it from Dave Fouse,"It's a good album!" Happy listening!!

Committee Reviews Promotional Strategies

by Lisa Clapper

Juniata's Retention Committee reviewed and evluated the nine strategies used to promote persistence of students, which were established fall term 1984, in order to make recommendations for future incoming students.

The committee, chaired by Arnold Tilden and consisting of Tom Baldino, Betty Ann Cherry, Rick Phalunas, Stephanie Seidle, Jill Shrum, Joe Stewart and Bob Yankello, discovered in the fall of 1981, 398 new students entered Juniata compared to the 288 students that entered last fall. Considering the persistence to graduation ranges from 60 to 67 percent, there is a possiblility the class of 1990 could be as small as 173 students at graduation.

One of the strategies observed was the reading skills inventory, because reading and writing are essential college-level skills. In 1984, the Committee proposed that the Nelson-Denny Reading Test be administered during orientation. The results were shared by advisors and students scoring below the 50th percentile were encouraged to enroll in the Baldridge Reading and Study Skills program. The committee observed that advisors appreciate having the Nelson-Denny scores but recommend that the Vice President for Academic Affairs and appropriate committees study the suitability of sharing reading scores with freshmen English instructors.

Last winter, the Retention Committee reviewed data gathered from the college's participation in Astin's Cooperative Institutional Research Project (CIRP). Pre-enrollment attitudes which would reflect on retention were much different by sex and changed significantly from year to year. Not surprisingly, those entry level attitudes were related to observed persistence patterns. In summary, men as a group were projected lower levels of satisfaction (45 to 92 percent) and a greater likelihood of transferring (9 to 11 percent) or dropping out (1.5 to 2.3 percent). Over time, projected satisfaction for all surveyed has declined (68 percent in 1979 to 58 percent in 1985). both plans to transfer (5.7 to 9.5 percent) and drop-out (1.7 to 1.9 percent) have increased.

The observations the committee made were: 1) student leader positions are dominated by women, 2) Some traditional male activities (e.g., Outing Service) have slipped in participation and prominence, and 3) "Involvement" was Astin's (1975) central theme in this study comparing students who persist to students who drop out.

The committee recommends that the CIRP survey should be administered each year and that more strategies to involve men in campus activities and organizations should be pursued.

The committee also discovered that the change to the semester system is felt to be more demanding by many of the students and there is evidence that J.C. students are working harder. Use of the library has doubled, inter-library loans have increased by a factor of three and computer literature searches are 10 times greater.

Wayfarer's Journal

Editor's Note: THe following letter from Jennifer Wade was written on Nov. 27, 1986

Dear fellow JC'ers,

Greetings from Leeds University. When Dr. Vocke was here a couple weeks ago, he asked Carol, Avril, and I if we would contribute a little something to the Juniatian. I'm not sure how interesting it will be, but her's my contribution.

You're probably all wondering about the weather. Does it really rain all the time in England? Not all the time, but a good deal of it. I arrived at the beginning of October and was lulled into a false sense of security by three weeks of warm, sunny weather. But, since then, there's been almost nothing but rain, cold, and wind. I've been assured that the rain and cold is "true" English winter weather. and I now have about three more months of it to look forward to.

Realizing that Juniata is a very vibrant and inventive linguistic community, I thought I'd share some of the words and expressions that are popular over here with you.

TRENDY - an adjective used to describe "the in thing" For example, hanging out in the Doubles Bar in the Union is "trendy"; studying or hanging out at the library is not. The word can have a slight derogatory sense.

BRILLIANT - an adjective used to describe anything that is/was extremely good and/or fun. It is often shortened to BRILL. For example, "The Hallowen Dance was brilliant." "The Suzanne Vega concert was brill."

ACE - similar to "brilliant" but means more like "the best." For example, Levi's 501s are "ace." (not used as frequently as "brilliant."

TA or CHEERS - both are shortened forms of "thank you" and are used in informal situations. If someone passes you the salt at the dinner table, you should say "ta" or "cheers". If someone holds the door for you while you gothrough, you should say "thank you."

Of course, they use different words for things over here, like calling elevators "lifts" and trucks "lorrys" but I haven't had too much trouble so far. There's really only one word which I have to be careful of and that's "pants." I, like you, use the word to mean jeans, trousers, or slacks. But over here, if you mean jeans, trousers, or slacks, you must say "jeans," "trousers," or "slacks." If I say "pants," they look at me funny because to them "pants" means underwear! So I do have to watch what I say.

I have, of course, met all kinds of interesting people, but I'll tell you more about that next time. I think I've rambled on enough for now. Hope this letter find you. See you soon, Jennifer Wade

T-N-T Resident Pipes Away

by Andrea Zavod

Most high school bands have trumpets, saxaphones, flutes and percussion, agreed? Occasionally you'll find a basson or harp, but how about a bagpipe player? How about seven bagpipe players?

Last year at St. Augustine's High School in Cambria County, there were seven pipers, one of them Juniata freshman, Russ Miller.

The bagpipes are unlike any other instrument explains Miller, but the individual parts are similar to other common instruments.

The chanter, for example plays the melody and is most like a recorder. The mouthpiece holds a double reed much like that of an oboe. The air bag is made of elks hide, the various wooden pieces are made of African Blackwood and is decorated with imitation ivory.

Miller says that a set of bagpipes can cost anywhere from $550 to $1100.

A self-taught piper, Miller has played for his church, birthday parties and has ambitions of participating in the Ligoneer Highland Games.

These traditional Scotish games, held just south of Johnstown are perfect opportunity for bands to gather and compete in their traditional garb.

Miller receives mixed responses to his bagpipes. To save his hallmates eardrums, he goes to Round Top to practice. He is looking foward to performing for the college community.

He has aspirations for the St. Andrews scholarship, which is given to a pre-med student to study abroad in Scotland. Miller hopes to pursue his academic endeavors as well as music.

KVASIR WANTS YOU!!

The Kvasir, Juniata's Art and Literature Magazine, wants the students of Juniata to submit their art work to be published. The Kvasir is published once a year and includes students' poems, prose, short stories (up to ten typed pages), black and white photographs, paintings, and sketches. If you have anything to submit, please do so by March 25 to Rob Boyer, Box 274. If you want the originals returned, please indicate this when you send the material in. Send anything that you would like to have published. The Kvasir editors wish to put out a very professional magazine and we can only do so with your help. Remember - the more submissions we receive, the better selection we will have to choose from and the better magazine we can create. . . So, don't be afraid, send us your art!!

All Class Night Is A Night Of Fairy Tales

by Karen D'Angelo

On Friday, February 21, some mystical force transformed Juniata's campus into fairyland. Several sources reported strange activities occurring around campus. Cinderella seemed to be in distress in the library; Little Bo Peep and Humpty-Dumpty were seen aimlessly wandering around Founders; Tweedle Dee and Tweedle Dum were seen chasing Alice around; and Peter Pan and Tinkerbell were spotted flying around campus. What was this mystical force? Did J.C. finally go bizerk?

Well, yes and no. Friday night was All Class Night 1987 and the theme was Fairy Tales and although all the forementioned activities did occur, they all occurred in Oller Hall.

Bob Yankello was the master of ceremonies for Center Board's presentation of All Class Night 1987.

The Seniors started the night's festivities with their presentation of "Cinderella." Cinderella, a J.C. senior, was faced with the dilemma of deciding whether to stay in and study - since her evil steprelatives piled work on her, or ateend the legendary "Dave's Ball." With the help of her fairy godfather, she attends the ball and even finds a prince.

The Class of 1988 was next in line and they presented "Alice in Wanitaland." Alice, a prospective student, dreamed about Juniata, the night before she was to "Journey to Juniata." Alice befriends a rabbit who shows her around the college. Alice meets a lot of students, faculty, and administration who inform her that Juniata is not what it used to be. In the end, Alice decides to give Juniata a try even though it does not have all the things she thought.

Freshmen were next in line with the presentation of "Oh Where, Oh Where Has Mother Keehner Gone?" The class of 1990 put together a mixture of nursery rhymes all centered on the disappearance of Old Mother Keehner.

The Class of 1989 concluded the evening's ceremonies by presenting their version of "Peter Yank and Tinkerbilly." Peter Yank and Tinkerbilly found the perfect candidate for the Assistant Dean of Student Services position in Wendy Keehner. Wendy makes friends with all the boys, girls, and Indians in Never, Neverland - but alas, all was not well. The evil pirates caused a lot of trouble for Wendy and the flying duo. But in the end, everything worked out and Wendy lived happily ever after.

In the end, the seniors seemed to be the class that "lived happily ever after" as they took first place in the competition. Sophomores took second place and the juniors ended up with third place. All Class Night judges were: Sue Benusa, Dave Drews, Julie Keehner, Paul Schettler, and Brad Small. Becky Hostetter was the head of the All Class Night Committee.

Alumni Profile

by Buffy Heisey

Sandra L. Beard, a 1984 graduate of Juniata College, returned to the campus this year as the Adjunct Instructor in Economics and Business Administration.

Beard graduated from Juniata with a major in Business and a minor in French. She was a Brumbaugh-Ellis Scholar and a member of the Juniatian staff. She took advantage of the Year Abroad Program and spent her junior year at Liehl University in France. In regard to her experience in France she said, "I would recommend the program to anyone. I would be glad to talk with anyone about it." After graduating, she continued her education at the University of Maryland for her M.B.A.

When asked what helped her most from her college experience at Juniata she replied, "The analytical skills were the most helpful. The opportunity to interact with professors and learn communication skills is incredibly important when you look for your first position. It is important to take advantage of the things on campus. As a student I was really impressed with the professors and what the student takes with herself from the classroom. There is really a concern with the students," she commented. When asked why she returned to Juniata, she said, "It was a surprise to be offered the position. It has been a lot of fun. I plan to stay at Juniata. I'd like to be here for a while."

The Coffee House Committee presented the group Neighbors on Tuesday, February 17, 1987 in Tote.

On the less positive side, recent changes in the alcohol policy and the cancellation of Raft Regatta have made campus life less attractive to some students. Even though there is a small class of new students, scheduling for courses was difficult. There was less of a variety of classes which included a larger number of students.

The committee suggests that the curriculum be reviewed, time management skills be taught and college support of co-curricular programs and social activities be added to current efforts.

PSU Presents W. Africa Lecture

At the March meeting of Penn State University's Social History Colloquium, Professor Philip D. Be A Friend For Life

When a friend talks of suicide . . .

Listen
Let your friend tell you of his situation and his feelings. Don't give advice or feel obliged to find simple solutions. LISTEN and try to imagine how you would feel in his place.

Be Honest
If your friend's words or actions scare you, tell her. If you're worried or don't know what to do, say so. Don't be a cheerful phony.

Share Feelings
At times everyone feels sad, hurt or hopeless. You know what that's like—share your feelings. Let your friend know he's not alone.

Get Help
If you keep this secret you may lose your friend. Perhaps you and your friend can think of a helpful adult she would talk to. If not, talk to someone yourself—a parent, teacher, minister, counselor or Crisis Center—and find out what to do next.

Your friend turned to you because you could be trusted to help. You CAN help, but not alone.

For immediate help, contact your local crisis center:

Season Brings Positive Future

A Look Ahead

The Juniata Men's Basketball team concluded their 86-87 basketball season with a 4 point loss to Wilkes College. The Indians, as they have all season, kept the game close and exciting. Trailing by 19 at the half, Juniata may have given up, however, they made a good run and started their comeback.

Albright and Elizabethtown will represent JC's conference in the MAC playoffs. Juniata beat Albright in Reading and lost by two in Huntingdon; the Indians were beat by E-town in the final seconds at home and lost a five point decision on the road. Close, but no cigar. In the Northeast section, Kings College and Scranton will be the two teams in the playoffs. Juniata lost to Scranton at the buzzer, then lost to Kings when they were ranked 7th in the nation, both by the same margin of two points. Once again, close, and once again, no cigar.

If you had to sum up Juniata's season the latter would be a perfect example. The ball never bounced JC's way this year. If you are wondering what a score of a past game was, just take it as it is - Juniata lost at the buzzer;JC downed by two;Indians nipped again.

However, a lot of bright things came out of this heartbreaking season. For starters, Juniata found out that they were one of the deepest teams in the league. The bench could be the key to next years success. Secondly, the Indians are only losing two players (one starter). Chris Frew, who at 6-5, was called to play center, will be gone, however the "Big Man" is the center of attention in the recruiting efforts of the JC coaches. Tom Reese, an outstanding, long range, shooting guard, will be the other player the Indians lose to graduation.

Juniata became a team who played for and went for the win this season, as compared to teams of seasons past who only played not to lose. Coach Dan Helm knew that this season could have been a better one, but he has been gearing the past two weeks of the season as a hopeful carry over for next year. The team's leading scorer Wayne Paul will be back next year after falling 59 points shy of hitting the 1000 point mark. Paul will be up for all MAC honors along with his teammate Les Squair.

Squair, this year, has been one of the leagues top rebounders and was also named MAC Player of the Week in early Febraury. Shawn Habakus, who canned the buzzer beater against Gettysburg, now has a year of college ball in his blood. Habakus was a main source to the Juniata program and will be calling the shots his remaining three years at JC.

Forward Duane Dise was up and down at times, but was a major contributer. Many times Duane led the way for JC in the scoring column. Dise will play a major role if Juniata is successful in future play. Joe DeBlase also showed he had the touch to get things done for the Indians. DeBlase canned many three pointers for his team this year, as he used the skills he worked on so hard in the off season. If DeBlase improves as much in this off-season as he had last summer, Joe could be deadly from the 19' 9" arc.

The Indian depth continues, especially at the guard spot, where JC had some good performances from Glen Peters, Mike Welker and Dan Lazowick. Peters has great speed and came off the bench to help beat the press and put pressure on. Welker was an intelligent player, while Lazowick had the knack of penetrating the lane.

The return of Darrow Murdock could add another demension of outside shooting for JC. Murdock missed most of this past season for personal reasons. Brent Flickinger, giving 100% all the time, was also a contributer at foward as was Randy Martin and Mike Antenucci in the paint. Andrei Constantino and Dave Queen also added strength inside, Constantino a junior and Queen a freshman.

Helm states he wished things could have went Juniata's way more often this year but knows his team is gaining greater experience, as well as the much needed team chemistry. Helm notes he worries about the road games (JC only won two away games this season.)"The attitude on this years squad was entirely different from that of teams past. They were excited about playing the game and played to win."

Juniata honored Reese and Frew in their last career game against Wilkes. The season is over, but the preparation for next year is already underway. The foundation and frames of a program in its rebounding stages are up. Now if the roof can be built in the off season, next year's Indians may be dancing on ceiling.

Lady Hoops

by Andrea Zavod

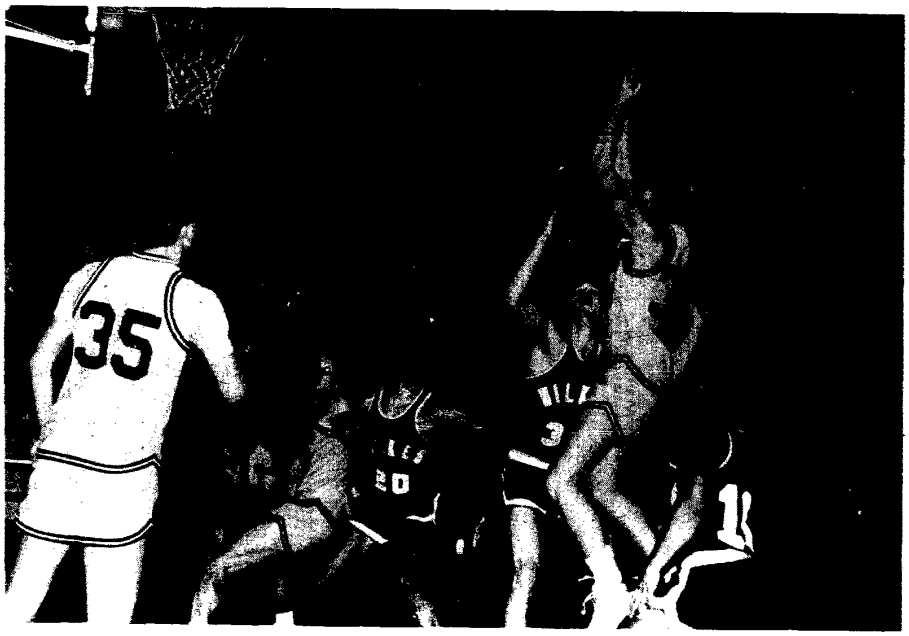
The Women's Basketball team finished the 1986-87 season this past Saturday, posting a 6-13 season record.

Their last three games, in which they went 1-2, showed continued strong individual performances and team consistency.

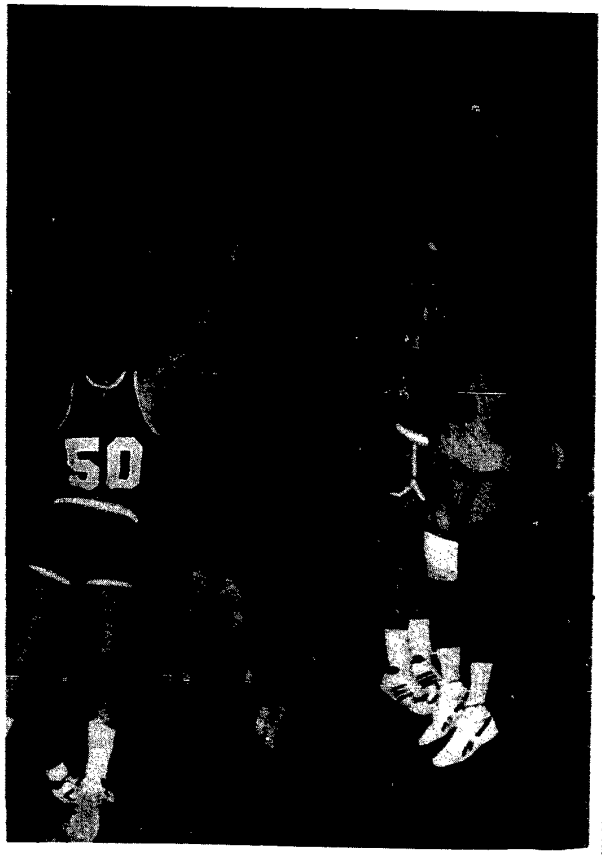
In a 75-65 victory over York, foward Sue Grubb led the team with a "triple double" scoring 24 points, grabbing 17 rebounds and came up with 10 steals. Other individual efforts came from guard Paula Hillegass with 17 points, 10 rebounds and foward Sue Lockawich chipped in 14 points and 9 bounds.

Overall the girls continued outstanding shooting from the charity strip, going 17 for 21 for the afternoon.

In a loss to Wilkes, guard Alison Kellock led all scorers with 18. Grubb led defensively with 5 blocked shots and 11 rebounds. The lady Indians led by five at half time, but had trouble containing Angela Wolfa of Wilkes who scored 24 points and brought down 14 rebounds.



Sophomore Duane Dise goes up for a short jumper in the seasons final game against Wilkes, as teammates Wayne Paul and Chris Frew look for a rebound.



Les Squair, the teams co-captain, launches a jumper for the Indians in their hard faught loss to Wilkes. Freshman Shawn Habakus looks on in the background.

Vol. XXXVIII, No. 17 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | March 5, 1987

Messiah Prophet concert will be held Friday, March 6 at 8:00 pm in Oller Hall. They are from Northumberland, PA and are a Christian heavy metal rock group. The concert is being sponsored by the Christian Ministry Board.

Jello Wrestling Raises Funds For Special Olympics

The second annual Jello Wrestling tournament to raise funds for 'Area J' Special Olympics will be held at Juniata College Saturday, March 7 beginning at 8 p.m. in Memorial Gymnasium, Kennedy Sports+Recreation Center.

Sponsored by the Residential Life Committee of the Juniata Student Government, the Jello Wrestling tournament will pit teams of two female students against one male student. Judging will be based on showmanship as well as skill, with a grand prize going to the winning team. Other prizes also will be awarded. The panel of judges will be comprised of faculty, administration, students and a member of the Huntingdon business community.

Local businesses are sponsoring teams participating in the tournament. Sponsors will be announced that evening.

Attendance at the Jello Wrestling tournament is open to the general public, and will give area residents an evening of entertainment that will benefit a charitable cause. Tickets, priced at $2 per person or $5 per family may be purchased in advance at the information desk in Ellis College Center or at the door the night of the event. All proceeds from the Jello Wrestling tournament will be donated to the Special Olympics.

Juniata Choir Announces Tour

Continuing a tradition that began more than five decades ago, the Juniata College Concert Choir has announced its 1987 Spring Tour schedule.

The 46-voice choir, conducted by Dr. Joseph Figg, will sing seven concerts in a period of as many days and visit six states. Beginning its tour in Bristol, Tennessee on March 16, the choir will then travel to Baton Rouge, Louisiana; Birmingham, Alabama; Fern Creek, Kentucky; Trotwood, Ohio; Greensburg, Pennsylvania; and concludes March 23 in Johnstown, Pennsylvania.

The choir, which over the years has made numerous radio and television appearances, in addition to presenting regular campus concerts, will present a repertoire that has been chosen from a wide variety of choral styles, ranging from Renaissance to Broadway.

Preparation in several fields of music is available at Juniata. In addition to studies in performance, often leading to graduate work in voice, winds, or keyboards, students can pursue history, theory or musicology backgrounds.

Juniata choirs and glee clubs have toured since 1920. The Concert Choir - once the A Cappella Choir - has toured since 1932. Members of the choir, most of whom are not music majors, are selected by competitive audition.

Dr. Figg assumed the duties of director of choral ensembles and assistant professor of music at Juniata College in the fall of 1984. Choirs under his direction have been invited to perform for numerous regional and national conventions, and have appeared in concert with such prominent artists as Robert Merrill and Vincent Price.

Dr. Figg has presented workshops and served as choral clinician and adjudicator throughout the United States. He is an active recitalist and oratorio soloist, and has appeared in opera and outdoor theater.

Executive Committee Decisions Highlighted

by Jennifer Nicholson

The Trustee Exceutive Committee met recently to decide on a few actions for the future, according to Juniata College President Robert Neff.

The Committee increased the cost of tuition, room, and board for the 1987-88 academic year to $11,650. This is an increase of 7.9 percent, the lowest percentage increase for Juniata College in ten years. This increase places Juniata in the middle of the price increases for Pennsylvania schools at about the fifty-fifth percentile.

The cost breakdown will be $8,750 for tuition, $1,380 for room, and $1,520 for board. Additionally, the Committee's tentative total budget for 1987-88 includes an increase in student financial aid of over 20 percent.

The Committee also made plans to include the following considerations on the agenda for the April Board of Trustees meeting: revisions in the bylaws of the Board, a five-year calendar of Trustee Board meetings, and an approved final plan for the Stadium/Track building.

Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan

Exercisers do it better! In fact, just about everything goes better when we include regular exercise in our lives.

Let's begin by examining some benefits of exercise. First of all, exercise is a mood elevator. Do you realize that during vigorous exercise, beta endorphims are produced by the brain? This creates a euphoric state commonly known as "runner's high." You obviously do not need to be a runner to experience this good feeling.

Secondly, exercise enhances our feeling of being in control of our lives. We are actively pursuing something that we know is beneficial, both emotionally and physically. We are taking the initiative, that is, acting on our environment (proactive) rather than reacting to the things around us.

In other words, exercise can be a major contributor to high self-esteem. (When is the last time you talked with a regular exerciser who didn't fell pretty good bout himself or herself?)

Additionally, exercise is a tremendous stress reducer and tension reliever, it can help us maintain a desired weight range, and it can help us eat and sleep better.

"How doe we get started?" We are social creatures and, as such, we like to engage in activities that will allow us to meet and interact with others. Exercise can be a social activity: jogging, running or walking with a friend; lifting with team members; playing hoops with students on your hall; going to aerobics class, all constitute social situations where we can have fun and meet people.

Remember, exercise can and should be fun. Not many of us engage in activities that we don't enjoy (except studying!). The following are a few suggestions for getting started and staying with exercise:

* As with any activity, set realistic goals. Begin slowly and build up. Don't overexert yourself initially.

* Establish a regular workout schedule as a way of staying with it. An irregular, haphazzard approach oftentimes brings on procrastination and eventual cessation.

* Make exercise a consistent priority. It is certainly not as important as studying (priority A) but surely it rates at least a B.

*Monitor your behavior as a means of reinforcement especially at the onset of your exercise routine. Kepp a record of progress made and reward yourself.

Wayfarer's Journal

by Mary S. Weir

Last year, when I was getting ready to go to France, I tried to gather as much information as possible. I wanted to dispel some prejudices, but still try to get an idea of what it was going to be like. I found that no matter how many people I talked to or how many pamphlets I read, I still didn't know what to expect from my year abroad. When I first arrived, I was excited, but scared also.

For the most part, I found the people helpful. I, of course, came across people who were openly rude, but as long as I was patient and considerate, I was treated in the same way. Although people as individuals are difficult to get to know, relationships are not superficial. The students can be reserved and held back at first, and it takes an effort to make aquaintances, but after friendships are made, they usually last.

Lille in itself is an industrial city but also a city for students. It has a large public university as well as the Catho, the private Catholic University. Though the city is large, there isn't many things to do on the weekends. For the most part, the students go home on the weekends and socialize during the week.

At first the schedule of classes can be confusing and frustrating. Each year of each school has set classes that are required. Being exchange students we can pick and choose between years schools. The problem is that the schedule of classes changes from week to week. For the French students this isn't a problem as nothing for them can overlap. For the exchange students, the problem comes when two different schools offer two desired classes at the same time. For the most part, the schedule works itself out after the first couple weeks.

At the beginning of the year, taking courses in another language is really impossible. No amount of preparation can get one ready to sit in a class and not only try to understand the words but also the meaning they convey. It wasn't unusual to sit through a class and not understand anything. This can be taken care of with a word to the professor and the help of another French student's notes. By the middle of the year, the problem ceases to exist.

The best part of my year in France is the travel. It still amazes me that a two-hour train ride would stop in another country while the same train in the states wouldn't leave Pennsylvania. This year has enabled me to do something that I have always dreamed about - see Europe.

Looking over the last five months and I can't believe that it has been that long. I realize it hasn't been easy. In fact it has been very difficult. There have been problems, not the least of which has been homesickness. It is not as easy to cope with normal

Student Of The Week

By Andrea Zavod

Would you like to know where the 1985-86 yearbook is? To be honest it's still on the drawing board, with 50 pages yet to be laid out. No one is working harder to finish the '85-'86 edition and continue meeting deadlines for the '86-'87 yearbook than Senior Deb Little.

Unfortunatley, the problem stems from a mishap back in the summer of '85. This is when Deb found out that the final deadline for the '84-'85 yearbook was not met. While she worked all summer to complete the unfinished job of the preceding editor, she hoped that summer students here at school would help get the ball rolling for the '85-'86 yearbook.

Little says that all the students were shown how to do layouts, but all that was accomplished was the typing of the senior directory. Upon returning to school in the fall of '85, Little set out to catch up from an unproductive summer.

With a skeleton staff of mostly underclassmen, Little was left to do much of the layout by herself. According to Little, a two page spread takes at least one hour which doesn't include writing the articles or getting the pictures taken and developed.

Besides the meager staff, Little is getting little cooperation from the college community. At various times during the year, Little has asked for write ups from the clubs or descriptions of the departments from faculty members; she has received seven responses.

Again, she was forced to take the time to go after various people to contribute. This is Little's strongest plea to students who are waiting for their yearbooks.

"It's important that people know how much time it takes. If people would respond to picture taking sessions and article writing, we wouldn't be behind." Little hopes that after the completion of the '86-'87 yearbook, that she will be able to switch companies in which she was dealing.This should make the task easier in years to come.

Right now, while she finishes the last fifty pages of the '85-'86 edition, Little says that the '86-'87 edition is going smoothly and hopes that it will proceed on schedule, coming out next fall.

In the mean time, Little pleads that the student body "Be patient," she's working as hard and as fast as she can.

Please note that applications for permission to reside off-campus for the 1987-88 academic year are now being accepted at the Residential Life/Housing Office. Permission to reside off-campus will be granted only to students with senior standing as of the end of the Spring Semester 1987. The deadline for completed applications to be returned to the Residential Life Office is Wednesday, April 8, 1987.

The room selection process will be held April 9 (multiple occupancy), April 13 (Junior Class), April 14 (Sophomore Class), and April 15 (Freshman Class). Information concerning the room selection process will be forthcoming.

A resident hall bathroom can be a very frightening and dangerous place for the unwary college student. Each day holds a potentially dangerous adventure in the fight to dispose of waste and cleanse our bodies.

Take, for instance, coarse anal wipes... that sandpaperish material that some people call "toilet paper." The toilet paper used in our resident halls is no doubt the same material invented by torture experts during the Vietnam war. The hours of pain and discomfort caused by Juniata's toilet paper has led to the near epidemic proportions of the much feared mental disease "wipeaphobia".

Victims of "wipeaphobia" suffer from many maladies. Most center on severe anal discomfort complicated by a paranoic fear of the numbers, 1 and 2. Wipeaphobia victims shun bathroom tissue of any type and are treatable only at the PUFF Wipeaphobia Care Center.

Wipeaphobia is not a joke and no one is immune from its devastating physical and psychological effects. It is a disease which can only be cured by a change in tissue brands. If you know anyone who avoids toilets or simply waddles when they walk, contact Rusty Krapper, in care of your friend, Yossarian.

Dr. Gasque To Lecture At J.C.

Dr. W. Ward Gasque, E. Marshall Sheppard Professor of Biblical Studies at Regent College, Vancouver, British Columbia, and a scholar of international reputation, will be the J. Omar Good Visiting distinguished Professor of Evangelical Christianinty at Juniata during the 1987-88 academic year. Dr. Gasque received his B.A. from Wheaton College, his B.D. and M.Th. from Fuller Theological Seminary and his PhD. from Manchester University, England. He has also studied at the Universities of Basel, Lausanne and Cambridge.

Dr. Gasque, has authored many articles and reviews, edited or co-edited a number of books, articles, and scholarly journals, and also has written a number of books on New Testament subjects.

During the fall semester at Juniata, he will teach a three-credit course, "The Life and Teachings of Jesus," designed to give an introduction to the gospels as sources for the life and teachings of Jesus and to discuss the main features of his mission and message. No previous academic study of the gospels on the part of the students is presupposed. The course will satisfy the historical/cultural requirement for those who will still be subject to the present core curriculum.

Centerboard Chairperson Named

by Lois Buchanan

A new chairperson, Karen D'Angelo, has been appointed to the Centerboard Committee for the remainder of this year's term. Rebecca Olsen, Chairperson of Centerboard, explained that the Committee had decided against the usual campus-wide election for the position in this case. The reason is that the candidate would only be holding the position until April.

Helm States His Case: Our Turn Next Year

Perhaps the old cliche, "So close, but yet so far," is a good way to describe the Juniata men's basketball season that recently came to a 7-18 halt.

Losing 18 games is tough enough, but it's even tougher to accept when 14 losses came by eight points or less. Six of those losses were by two points, including a 78-76 loss to eighth ranked King's College.

"This was a 'close, but no cigar' season. We lost a lot of games by two points, but a loss is a loss. It seemes like we're getting closer and the pieces of the puzzle are fitting together. Now we need to find a big man for the center spot," said Head Coach Dan Helm.

According to Helm, the lack of a big man hurt the Indians this season. "A lot of times we had to double team the opponent's center, this opened the door for someone else to score on us," Helm said, noting that Dobisch of King's College pumped in 28 points, a season high for him.

The Tribe opened their season with a 90-89 victory over Washington and Jefferson, then suffered a 64-66 loss to Elizabethtown. The loss to the Blue Jays set the pattern for what was ahead.

"We were always close but just couldn't get the one victory to turn things around. We just came up short," Helm said.

Four teams will enter the Northern Division playoffs, they are" Kings, Albright, Elizabethtown, and Scraton. Juniata lost close contests to Kings (76-78), Albright (73-76), Elizabethtown (64-66 and 71-79) and Scraton (63-65). Seniors Chris Frew 3.6 ppg and Tom Reese 3.6 ppg are the only two players that won't return next year. The Indians three leading scorers, Wayne Paul 16.7 ppg, and Duane Dise 11.6 ppg, will return along with Les Squair 13.0, the Tribe's leading rebounder (10.2 rpg). Shawn Habakus (8.8 ppg) the freshmen point guard played like a seasoned veteran for Juniata, winning two games at the buzzer. In addition to four returning starters, the Indians will have strong depth from the bench.

This season, the college hill cagers relied on strong bench performances from sophomore Joe DeBlase, a deadly perimeter shooter, 5.7 ppg; junior Glen Peters 1.2 ppg; and sophomore Mike Antenucci 2.1 ppg.

"Next year is the year we have to make our mark in the M.A.C. Our leading scorer Wayne Paul will be a senior and we have a strong group of talented letterwinners returning," Helm said.

Helm is optimistic right now, in addition to a strong nucleus of returnees, he says recruiting is going well. Besides a search for a big man, Helm is hoping to secure Neil Gearhart, a Huntingdon High School senior.

"We are looking forward to the future. I think we will have a lot of positives. This year's four playoff teams in the Northern Division aren't any more talented than we are. They just have good records and we don't," Helm said.

"One thing I can say for our guys is that they never gave up," added Helm. "We only lose two players from our squad. I think we have better returning talent than anyone in the M.A.C."

Ski Killington

Killington, Vermont - College students are invited to bypass the traditional pilgrimage to Fort Lauderdale and bask on sunny ski slopes instead during the second annual Spring Break Carnival vacation program at central Vermont's Killington Ski Area, March 15-20 and 22-27, 1987.

Co-sponsored by Merrill Lynch and Coors Beer, the Spring Break Carnival vacations offer five days of non-stop fun with on-snow activities and after skiing parties at a very special price.

On-mountain events include a Ski Rally, Giant Slalom Challenge, Snowflower Hunt, and a Merrill Lynch Investment Slalom Challenge. Killington historically receives six feet of snow after March 1 and has 38 miles of snowmaking terrain, offering collegians the greatest diversity of ski terrain in the East. Killington's six mountains are interconnected by "easier" trails so skiers of all ability levels can participate in the on-mountain events and explore all the mountain areas.

Prizes and awards for the day's events will be presented by Merrill Lynch and Coors at apres ski parties and dances held at Killington and various nightspots in the local area. One event not to be missed is a spectacular fireworks display by the world-renowned Santore Brothers of Millington, New Jersey.

The Killington Spring Break Carnival vacation package, including five nights lodging, a five day lift ticket and all Spring Break Carnival activities, is $144-$249 (pp. quad occ.) European Plan and $231-$320 (pp. quad occ.) Modified American Plan. Four people can stay in a two bedroom condominium for $208-$300. Rates do not include 6% Vermont rooms and meals tax and ski instruction and equipment options are also available.

For more information and reservations for Killington's Spring Break Carnivals call the Killington Travel Service (802) 773-1330.

For information on other ski vacation opportunities at Killington write for the Killington Vacation Guide and Lodging Directory, 203 Killington Road, Killington, Vermont 05751.

Women's Hoop Review

It wasn't an easy year for the Juniata College women's basketball team. However, despite a dismal mark of 5-13, only six names on the roster and an injury to the Indian's starting point guard midway through the season, the Tribe never gave up.

"It was a very difficult year, I think it says something for everyone involved that we made it through the season, won a few games and were in quite a few that we didn't win," said first year Coach Kathi Quinn.

The Indians started the season with nine healthy players, only three returned from the 1985-86 season when the team finished with a 16-6 record. By the time the season ended only six players were 100 percent healthy. At one point Quinn had to give a uniform to the team trainer when two players fouled out in a 73-50 loss to Dickinson. "The biggest frustration for all of us was our lack of players and our lack of experienced players. It really hurt us not to have the luxury of substituting frequently when the starters got into foul trouble," said Quinn.

Although the Indians staggered through the season, they never fell, thanks to the outstanding performance of junior forward, Susan Grubb.

"Susan Grubb did a really good job for us. She's a great player. She's one of the top rebounders in the country and the top rebounder in the Middle Atlantic Conference," Quinn said.

Grubb led the Tribe in scoring and rebounding this year averaging 13.5 points per game and 13.7 rebounds per game. She collected 91 steals and 45 assists while blocking 61 shots, breaking the old record for blocks in a season, previously held by Nancy Zinkham (1979-80). Grubb now holds the individual career record for blocked shots with 116 blocks.

Laura Hoffman, was second in scoring, averaging 9.8 ppg until she was sidelined during the eleventh game of the season with a knee injury. Senior captain Paula Hillegass replaced Hoffman at the point guard spot and finished her senior year averaging 8.6 ppg. In her seven games at the point guard position, she scored in double figures seven consecutive times.

"Paula did a nice job for us when Laura got hurt. She knew what she had to do and got the job done," Quinn said.

Sophomore Susan Lockawich was the second leading rebounder with an 8.2 rpg and 8.9 ppg average. Senior Allison Kellock averaged 6.7 ppg and 3.1 rpg, while freshman teammate Renee Malkin chipped in with 7.1 ppg and 4.9 rpg. Donnell Orleski added 3.1 ppg and 2.6 rpg during her sophomore season and Illona Gillette playing half of the season with a broken nose collected 3 points and 2 rebounds in 12 appearances.

"One of the positives about this year was that everyone got to play and get some experience," Quinn said.

"I really appreciate the support we received from the college community. I know the players appreciated the support too, in what we all knew was going to be a difficult season," Quinn added.

Despite the 5-13 finish, Quinn hasn't lost any enthusiasm or energy as she begins to plan for next year.

"Recruiting is going very well. My goal is to rebuild this program and be an M.A.C. contender. I have a lot of confidence that it can happen," Quinn concluded.

Indian Spikers Rolling Net .500 For Week

On February 22, the Juniata Men's Volleyball team played host to Messiah's Men's Volleyball team. In a tough battle between the two undefeated teams, Juniata came up on the losing end by a margin of three games to one. Messiah was on the attack quickly by winning the first game 9-15, but were slowed down when Juniata quickly rebounded, and won the second game 15-7. Juniata'a hopes for a victory were within sight, but came up short when they lost the next two games by close margins of 13-15 and 17-19 respectfully. Last Sunday, though Juniata'a men's team got back on track against Bloomsburg University with a decisive win of three games to one. Bloomsburg gave a good fight, Juniata took the first two games, with relative ease, from their rivals with scores of 15-0 and 15-9. In the first two games, Andy Rhinehart and Larry Hillman put on a excellent show of setting which allowed the hitters for Juniata to spike their way to victory in these first two games. Jack Winebrenner, Bob Davies, and Gavin Reed applied some impressive hitting for the J.C. spikers, while Chris Hester and Danny Stambaugh played excellent defense at the net by blocking many of Bloomsburg's attempted spikes.

In the third game Juniata suffered a slight set back and allowed Bloomsburg to take control of the game. Juniata never gave up, but battled back just a little to late, and ended up losing 10-15.

In the fourth and decisive game again Juniata started out slow falling behind Bloomsburg. But this time Juniata held strong behind the serving of both Danny Stambaugh and Chris Hester, which allowed Juniata to make a come back, and end up defeating Bloomsburg by a score of 15-13.

This weekend the men's team takes to the road to go up against both Albright College and Bloomsburg University. These games look to be very tough for the men spikers, let's hope they end up on top.

Be A Friend For Life

When a friend talks of suicide...

Listen
Let your friend tell you of his situation and his feelings. Don't give advice or feel obliged to find simple solutions. LISTEN and try to imagine how you would feel in his place.

Be Honest
If your friend's words or actions scare you, tell her. If you're worried or don't know what to do, say so. Don't be a cheerful phony.

Share Feelings
At times everyone feels sad, hurt or hopeless. You know what that's like—share your feelings. Let your friend know he's not alone.

Get Help
If you keep this secret you may lose your friend. Perhaps you and your friend can think of a helpful adult she would talk to. If not, talk to someone yourself—a parent, teacher, minister, counselor or Crisis Center—and find out what to do next.
Your friend turned to you because you could be trusted to help. You CAN help, but not alone.

Jello Wrestling Packs The House

by Buffy Heisey

The second Annual Jello Wrestling contest, Saturday, March 7, packed the house at the Kennedy Sports & Recreation Center. JC students, as well as the Huntingdon community came out to witness this wild and crazy event sponsored by Student Government's Residential Life Committee. The chairpersons for this event were Stephanie Seidle and Lauralee Snyder. All the proceeds were to benefit the Special Olympics.

The suspense was building as the crowd poured into the gym and anxiously tried to find seats. Nora O'Sullivan, the Special Olympics Representative, commented, "The benefits from this event will help to send one special olympian from this area to the International Games in Notre Dame." Special Olympics is an international program of sports training and athletic competition for mentally retarded children and adults.

Thirteen teams of two females and one male, gathered to dual in the ring of jello. They were led into the gym by the Special Olympics representatives. The wrestlers were one of the most memorable groups ever assembled on campus. Each team battled for one minute and forty-five seconds. The fans yelled and cheered for their favorite team. At the conclusion of each match, the judges scored their execution. The judges were Dr. & Mrs. Neff, Dean Arnold Tilden, Professor Bob Reilly and Mrs. Reilly, Chief of Police Varner and Jill Wineka. The competition was close but winners were named. The team of Les Squair, Donnelle Orleski and Georgia Stanaitis emerged victorious. Henry Marchen, Elizabeth Radcliffe and Patricia Schofield were tied for second place with Rondo and The Killer Bees. The winner was awarded a trophy and thirty dollars. During one match Mr. Jack Linetti and Randy Deike, the referees were taken down into the jello by three suspicious wrestlers. On another occasion, Bill Huston, the emcee was thrown in the ring by a herd of aggressive fans.

Besides everyone having a great time, this event raised money to benefit a very worthy cause. Jello Wrestling will be sure to become one of Juniata's favorite and successful traditions. It looked like so much fun—everyone should try it once!

Inauguration Events

by Lois Buchanan

The inauguration at 2 pm, Saturday, April 4 of Dr. Robert W. Neff as Juniata's ninth President will be the climax of a nine day celebration featuring guest speakers and theater perfomances.

The keynote speaker for the inauguration, Dr. Ernest L. Boyer, is president of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. The theme of the inauguration is "Juniata College—An Education with Vision and Values."

Thursday, March 26, at 8:15 pm in Alumni Hall, Dr. Mary Stewart Van Leeuwen will open the celebration with their presentation, "Social Science Issues for Concerned Humanitarians in the 80's." S.V.S. classes will be required to attend. Dr. Van Leeuwen, a professor at Calvin College, has served as editor of a number of magazine publications, and contributed to many others, including International Journal of Psychology and Christianity Today. She has also done cross-cultural research in Africa, and written and co-authored a number of books dealing with issues in Psychology, religion, and attitudes towards women. Dr. Van Leeuwen has spoken at numerous colleges across the U.S. and in Canada.

Friday, March 27, at 2 pm and 8 pm and at 8 pm Saturday, a play directed by senior Rob Boyer, entitled, "The Night Thoreau Spent in Jail" will be presented in Oller Hall.

Two-time pentathlete, Marilyn King, will be presenting her speech on world peace, Wednesday, April 1 at 8:15 in the Kennedy Sports & Recreation Center.

Finally, Friday, April 3, the evening before the inauguration ceremony, there will be an ecomenical worship service at 8:15 pm in Oller Hall, featuring a message by Dr. Arnie Brouwer, general secretary of the National Council of Churches of Christ.

Mary Stewart VanLeeuwen will lecture on March 26 to begin the Inauguration ceremonies in honor of Pres. Neff.

J.C. Art Exhibit

A month-long exhibit highlighting the work of two Juniata College Art Department faculty members has been scheduled in Shoemaker Gallery. It began on March 6 and will run until April 6. The exhibit is open weekdays 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and the public is welcome.

Editorial

I remember I started out my first editorial as editor-in-chief with "This is it - the chance I've been waiting for."

Well, I've had my chance and I'm ready to hand over my position. The year has been full of ups and downs, mostly downs but the important thing is that I've learned. When I first walked into that office, opening that door with my own key, I was so excited and so full of ideas. It is no longer so exciting to walk into that office and lately I find myself with less energy to implement new ideas. I've done my best but I can tell it is time for me to give someone else a shot. The main reason for my not returning as editor next year was because of other committments but now I see that I am personally ready to let someone else take over.

I am pleased to announce the 1987-88 Juniatian staff - Jodie Monger, Editor-in-Chief; Patricia Schofield, News Editor; Marylou Miller, Features Editor; Mike Antenucci, Sports Editor; Andrea Zavod, Sports Editor; Matt Varner; Business Manager; Jennifer Jensen, Ad Manager; James Griffiths, Circulation Manager and Computer Consultant. (There are still positions open for Managing Editor, a Features Editor, Copy Editor, and Photography Editor.)

All of the new staff have been members of my staff who will retain their positions or just got "promoted."

They have been my backbone many times and I certainly couldn't have persevered without them. Because of this, I have a lot of faith in their ability to improve the Juniatian and put it on stable ground.

Thanks, guys, for helping me to keep it afloat - in the next year, I'm sure you'll have it swimming on its own.

Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan

"To be fit, you don't have to kill yourself," so states Dr. Henry Solomon, cardiologist and author of the book, The Fitness Myth.

The statement certainly is consistent with our previous assertion that exercise can and should be fun, particularly if we want to make it a regular part of our lives.

Unfortunately, there are many among us who subscribe to the "no pain, no gain" argument. There may be some merit to this axiom if you are training for a sport or competition, but for those who want to stay fit through exercise, it is no longer true. If you have to ask the now-famous question, "Are we having fun yet?" perhaps you are looking at exercise too seriously.

Exercise experts tell us that aerobically or cardiovascularly, a twenty minute workout at least three times per week is sufficient to realize effective results. To achieve maximum cardiovascular benefit, we must increase our heart rate to not less than 60% to not more than 90% of its maximum capacity.

By way of example, a twenty-year-old Juniata College student's target heart rate range is 120-180 beats per minute in order to achieve maximum cardiovascular benefit. An easy way to remember the formula is to subtract your age from 220 and then take 60% and 90% of that number to arrive at the maximum benefit range.

What are some exercises that can provide maximum aerobic value and still be fun?

*Walking. Dr. Solomon suggests that walking is the nearly perfect exercise. A fifteen to twenty minute mile should prove more than beneficial. It is also consistent with our "keep it fun and exercise-as-a-social activity" position.

*Aerobic dancing. Again, it's a regular event at Juniata, it's fun and it's also a chance to meet new people.

*Cycling. Now that the nicer weather is with us (hopefully), why not take to the country roads as an excellent form of exercise and relaxation? Don't forget to bring your bike back after break.

*Swimming. A nice aspect of swimming is that there are fewer stress points such as ankles and knees to worry about. It's good for hip and ankle problems and is great for toning muscles.

Letters to the Editor

An open Letter to the Juniata community:

The second annual Jello Wrestling contest is (finally) over. . .and it was a huge success. As a result we hope to donate $1000.00 to Special Olympics.

Two weeks ago, I think some people (myself included) might have said it wasn't worth it: we had a lot of business to solicit, arrangements to make and to top it off, our jello wouldn't jell.

I can only thank the Residential Life Committee members for their tireless help in making the jello over and over again and for setting up the gym. It was a lot of work for a few people to do. Randy Deike, our staff advisor, also tirelessly put his time into making the jello.

Likewise, last year Bill Barrier, Jack Linetty and the Physical Plant staff were left with a terrible mess. But they had enough faith in us to allow us to try it again. With their tremendous support this year, we were able to hold the event. It was not a fun job for Jack and his staff, but I thank them for their guidance and support.

Without all this help the event would not have been possible. Also, Food Service with the assistance of John Garrity and his staff were of great help. I thank everyone for all their support and I know that the children of Special Olympics will appreciate it more than we know. That's why I know now it worth it.

Sincerely,
Stephanie Seidle
Co-Chairperson, Residential Life Committee

Dear Editor:

With a College as proud of its international contacts as Juniata, I find it disappointing that you accepted a cartoon as nationally chauvenistic as that in your last edition (Feb. 26).

Support For Eating Disorders

by Crickett Julius

Last week, the Student Health Advisory Committee sponsored a support group, for anyone interested, on eating disorders. Well, I was the support group leader, and I arrived, sat there for thirty minutes (by myself)—and no one showed. Maybe it would be a good idea for me to share a little about myself first.

Approximately two years ago, I weighed 85 pounds. Yes, I lost twenty-five pounds over a period of six months. No one could tell me that I was as skinny as a rail, because it went in one ear and out the other. My family and friends were constantly encouraging me to take a good look at myself and to eat. I didn't completely starve myself, but I only ate foods with a low caloric value and then I exercised constantly. I would never eat sweets, because I'd feel absolutely awful afterwards. That period of my life was the worst for me, as well as for the loved ones around me. Eventually, my mother forced me to see an internist and I was diagnosed to have anorexia nervosa. In addition to taking ten vitamins per day to build up my immune system, I was put on a

It's amazing how friendly some people can be when all you want to do is cash a check, pick-up a package, or purchase a few stamps. Take, for instance, the postal clerk at the Juniata College Post Office. She is definitely the warmest person I have ever met. The pleasant atmosphere she creates by her mere presence makes my mailing experiences moments of pure beauty.

This weekend I had a stimulating encounter with that warm, wonderful person who I will hereby refer to as "Mrs. G." On Saturday morning I rolled out of bed fully rested and happy. Due to the convienent Saturday morning window hours, the post office was still open and I leisurely strolled down to get my mail. In my P.O. box I found that familiar red card that I frequently exchange for a package from home. There in the dim light, half-hidden by a pile of envelopes, I saw my queen—Mrs. G. Immediately, she skipped over to wait on me. Her smile, a large wonderful greeting, made me feel so excited that I began to bubble with joyful anticipation. Contact between us was physically draining and before I knew what had happened I had a big bulging package resting in my hands. Mrs. G. whispered a sweet, "goodbye" and with a wink of her eye and a click of her heels, she rushed off to perform some important duty.

Pepsi Buys Prof's. Art

Alexander McBride, Chairman of the Department of Art at Juniata College and a resident of Boalsburg, Pennsylvania, has sold three of his paintings to Pepsi Co. Inc.

The three canvasses, "Winged Figure" 1981, "Oriental Interior" 1981, and "Couer de Lion" 1984, will become a part of the prestigious collection at Pepsi Co.'s headquarters in Purchase, New York.

Since 1965, when Pepsi Co. moved its headquarters from New York to Purchase, it has become renowned for its sculpture collection which is displayed, open to the public, on the headquarter's grounds.

In addition, however, Pepsi Co. also has an excellent collection of paintings containing the works of such luminaries as Helen Frankenthaler, Pablo Picasso, Frank Stella, William de Kooning, Jean Dubuffet', Alexander Calder and Robert Motherwell.

McBride, who has been on the Juniata faculty for 17 years, has a variety of his paintings on display at Shoemaker Gallery on Juniata's campus during a month-long exhibit that began on March 6. McBride joined Juniata Art Department colleague Jack Troy for an outstanding two-man exhibit of paintings and ceramics.

States and Europe. In addition, he has been the recipient of a variety of awards.

Troy, who was recently recognized for his work as a poet with a Fellowship in Literature by the Pennsylvania Council on the Arts, has also gained prominence for the pottery he makes. In 1981 he received a Crafts Fellowship for research into local clays and various types of wood used as sources of ash glaze.

The exhibit will feature some of the finest work of both participants, and will provide a showcase for two of the college's many talented faculty members. McBride and Troy will be honored at a reception the opening day of the exhibit, from 3 to 4 p.m., and the public is invited to attend.

Singers Wanted

Dr. Joseph W. Figg, Director of Choral Activities at Juniata College, has extended an invitation to all interested persons to participate with the Juniata College Choral Union in a performance of the "Requiem" by Gabriel Faure' scheduled for May 5 on the Juniata College campus.

Rehearsals for the production will be held on Monday evenings at 7 p.m. in the ballroom of Ellis Hall beginning March 9. This program is a continuation of a cooperative series between the College Choral Union and the greater Huntingdon community and is representative of the commitment Juniata President Robert W. Neff has stressed for sharing the resources of the college.

For more information please contact Dr. Joseph Figg at Juniata College at 643-4310.

Dr. J Honored

Dr. Jay D. Buchanan, Director of Counseling Services and Assistant Professor of Psychology at Juniata College was recently selected as one of thirteen alumni to be honored by Westminster College during that school's Homecoming festivities.

The thirteen, chosen to initiate Westminster's first Distinguished Alumni Lecture Series, spoke to classes, sharing their expertise, and then were presented Distinguished Alumni certificates at a dinner held in their honor.

Dr. Buchanan, a 1966 graduate of Westminster, earned his M.Ed. and Ed.D. degrees from the Pennsylvania State University. He joined the Juniata College staff in 1978.

special diet and I visited a therapist twice a week.

Today's society is so obsessed with bodies. We look in every magazine and imagine ourselves to have a body like a fashion-plate, because no matter where you turn this is what you find. Yes, I used to desire a pencil-thin body, but I suffered as a result of my obsession. I know that most college females are quite concerned with their figure, but please don't fall into the trap. Anorexia and bulimia are so prevalent today—girls just don't realize what they are doing to themselves. it's so difficult to admit to having these disorders, also. I guess that's why no one showed for my support group. I believe that I'll try this again, because maybe now some won't be afraid to share. Anyone is invited to come to our group. I'm willing to share and help anyone if possible. There won't be any administrators or doctors, etc. . . present—this program is open to all Juniata students.

Please, if you think you know of someone having questions, encourage them to come!!

Hot Wax

by Jef Buehler

I don't know why I haven't reviewed this album before. It's like not seeing the tree while looking at the forest (or something like that). This "tree" is better known as the album Especially For You by the Smithereens.

At first glance, you might think that this was another typical neo-60s album. (Boring!!) The cover borders on psychedlia, the picture of the band shows them wearing clothes which they actually do wear on the street, and the album includes songs like "Groovy Tuesday" and "Crazy Mixed-Up Kid."

However, here's what you get: a 60s and blues-influenced rock and roll album for the 80s with no frills—only music which for the most part can be called "cool." The comments I most often hear about various songs go something like: "That's a cool song!", etc. . . (I didn't just invent the term myself!)

Among all of this cool music, we have the "coolest" four songs on the album: "Strangers When We Meet," " Time and Time Again," "Behind the Wall of Sleep," and "Blood and Roses." The first two will give you that 60s flavor in a great way and the latter two will knock you off your feet.

Pat DiNizio's vocals are often soulful, but sometimes carry a bouncy "surf" sound to them. The guitar is amply provided by Pat and lead guitarist Jim Babjak who really cranks on "Behind the Wall of Sleep." Dennis Diken's drums are not those of Niel Peart, but are solid and shine during "Time and Time Again." The coolest (there's that word again) Bassline I have heard recently comes from Mike Mesaros and makes "Blood and Roses" the great song it is. (This guy even looks like an incredible bassist!)

I would give you their address too, but to find out where the Smithereens are really coming from, check out "Especially For You."

Lady Indians Ready For Season Experience Leading The Way

The first signs of spring flooded the campus this past weekend, bringing spring fever to students and action to the softball diamond.

After about two weeks of pre-season practice, 2nd year coach Dick Scialabba is especially happy that the team has been able to get outside this early in the spring.

This year's team is led by five returning lettermen. The Lady Indians finished tied for 2nd in the MAC's with Susquehanna, posting a 13-6 record.

Coach Scialabba hopes this year's squad will be able to maintain or improve upon last year's standings. "We should be successful if we concentrate on our abilities and maintain a positive winning attitude."

Last year's MAC leader Elizabethtown is expected to be the team to beat again this season. The Lady Indians open with the Lady Jays March 21, at E-town. "We should be happy with a split," said Scialabba.

Reviewing his team during these pre-season session, Scialabba sees good team unity, especially considering only five returning team members. "We still have a lot to learn. . . we will look for more intense practices, but the girls are very willing and attentive to learn and develop into MAC contenders."

Returning to the '87 team is outfielder Emily Beach, who also brings a left-handed bat to the lineup,and So. Beth Higgens, who started in left field last season, but will find herself behind the plate at catcher, taking over for transfer Lisa Gray. Another So. Amy Oiler, who started at third a year ago, will use her speed and strong throwing arm from the outfield.

Jr. Sue Stump returns to the infield, with team enthusiasm and spirit, looking to use her height and flexability at first base. In her second season on the mound, Sr. Kathy Bednarczyk returns to the rubber having been ranked 9th in the country in Division III with an earned -run-average of .74.

Also in this year's squad are three returning letterwinners from the '85 season. Presently ,Sr. Sue Mitchell and Sr. Laurie Nartatez will use their talents in the outfield. Nartatez, in centerfield will be looked upon for leadership up the middle, and Mitchell's strong arm and power hitting ability will add strength to the batting order. In her second season, Jr. Andi Zavod is a versatile player, able to play both infield and outfield positions, but will most likely see action at third base.

Filling out this year's team are six freshman, two of which will fill the shoes for graduated All-American short-stop Janet Robison and 2nd baseman Cindy Corle. Looking to step in are Pam Lau at short-stop and Bert Goshler at second.

Freshman Amy Leitao and Mary Louise Hartline bring first base experience to the team, while Jen Musser adds depth to the outfield. Kirsten Grell brings strong glove work to the infield and both she and Hartline will look to gain some pitching experience to take over on the mound after Bednarczyk finishes her last season of eligibility.

Coach Scialabba is hoping both Bednarczyk and Higgens will be the defensive leaders. "It's the pitching and defense that will win our games for us," says Scialabba.

Offensively, coach doesn't see the power of last year, but will look to Mitchell for her bat strength. Lost to the team speed is So. Laura Hoffman who will be side-lined with a knee injury suffered during basketball season.

The team faces a tough MAC schedule, with E-town, Susquehanna and Wilkes early in the season. Having beaten all MAC teams at least once last season, the Lady Indians look to better their record if not for the standings, but for themselves.

Berrier States Outlook

"Pitching Is The Key"

According to Head Baseball Coach, Bill Berrier, "Pitching is the key to winning college baseball games," and if the Indians can get consistent pitching, they'll be a force in the Middle Atlantic Conference this season. When Juniata travels to Albright this Saturday to open the season, they will be led by 13 returning lettermen, including 7 seniors.

After losing 3 of their top 4 pitchers from the '86 campaign, the Indian staff will look to regroup behind senior hurlers Tom Kelley and Frank Briner.

Although the pitching staff may be inexperienced, Coach Berrier can't complain aboout a lack of pitchers. Fifteen of twenty-three players can be called upon to pitch. Other keys to the Indian starting pitchers will include Sr. Ed Fee,Jr. Kurt Speiss, So. Paul Hayduk and So. transfer, Kurt Wenrich.

From the bull pen, Coach Berrier will look to Sr. Vince Anselmo, sophs, Charles Gumby, and Henry Marche, freshman Michael Mair, Michael Poole and Sean Filliben.

Behind the plate will be Jr. Dan Webb, last year's team batting leader (.432). So. Dave Reed or Fr. Daryle Dobos will get the call for back up spot. The infield will be led by Sr. Steve Meeker at shortstop, while sophomores Amadeo Cianci will be on first base, George Zanic at second, and Jim Tomassetti at third. Senior Chris Williams is also expected to see action in the infield.

"I'm very impressed with this group of guys. They work very hard. I'm anxious to get the season underway and see how the chips are going to fall," said Berrier.

Hooper Makes All MAC

Wayne Paul, Junior co-captian of the Juniata College men's basketball team, has recently been selected to the Middle Atlantic Conference North All-Star Second Team.

The 6'2 gaurd was the Indian's leading scorer for the second consectutive year collecting 418 points for a 16.7 average in 25 outings this season. He shot a blistering .520 from two point range and .324 from the three point range. In addition to his accurate perimiter shooting, Paul collected 119 rebounds, 74 assists, 51 steals and 11 block shots.

"Wayne is a tremendous athlete who continualy improves. He's the team's best leaper and has done a super job for us. A coach couldn't ask for any more from a student-athlete. This is a well deserving honor," said Head Coach Dan Helm.

A 1984 graduate of Richland High School, Paul received many honors as a senior including an honorable mention All-State selection. The personnel management major is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Kenneth Paul of Johnstown.

V-Ball Team Rolls

Holds Onto Second Place In The MAC's

By Tom Hunt

Juniata College Men's Volleyball team chalked up two more victories Sunday, to run its overall record to 6-1 for the season. The Indians defeated Albright College to raise its Middle Atlantic Conference record to 4-1, good for second place. The other victory was registered over Bloomsburg University in an exhibition match.

In the first match, J.C. faced a taller Albright College team who already owns a victory over a tough Elizabethtown college squad. Juniors Chris Hester and Jack Winebrenner started at middle blocker. soph. Dan/Stambaugh, a starter, did not make the trip to Reading due to personal reasons. Keith Hall, a senior outside hitter, started off the opening game with four tough serves which Albright could not handle. After an Albright timeout, the Indians kept the pressure on with well placed from soph Bob Davies and Jr. setter Larry Hillman. The exclamation point was administered by a Chris Hester kill of Andy Rhinehart's set to clinch the first game 15-8.

The second game was a duplicate of the first. Juniata jumped out to an early lead and applying the pressure to Albright before clinching the best-of-three match, 15-7.

Freshman Pat Sterner replaced Winebrenner midway through the 2nd game. Sterner, who is only in his second month of playing, clamped down on most of Albright's spike attempts. Davies and Craig White, playing for Hall, provided JC with excellent defense which gave setters Tom Hunt and Andy Rhinehart the opportunity to run the offense.

In the first game, of the Bloomsburg match the front line of Hall,Hillman, and Winebrenner did their imitation of a brick wall, repeatedly knocking back the Bloomsburg spikes. The few spikes that did get through them, during the 15-8 JC victory were dug up by Hester, Davies, and Rhinehart. Coach Jim Donaldson, juggled the lineup somewhat for the second game. Hillamn and Jeff Boshart, a soph, started as setters and Sterner started at middle blocker. The new team fell behind early because of some service reception problems.

Despite the offensive punch of Hall and Davies, the Indians were faced with match point. After saving three match points, they fell 6-15. In the third game Rhinehart, Hester, and Hunt came back in. The move paid off when JC jumped to a 4-0 lead. Rhinehart crushed a Hunt back set to cap the run. The Indians kept rolling until it held a 13-6 lead. Then the roll stopped and Bloom scored 2 points in a row. Craig White came off the bench in an attempt to liven up the team. The move didn't work as Bloom scored 2 more points. But, Juniata stemmed the tide and scored the last 2 points of the match for the 15-10 win.

After break the men's team will travel to E-town for a Wednesday night match then, Friday the 27. they host E-town in a 6 o'clock match in the varsity gym. Come out and support the team!

Artist Series Presents Sixth Program: The Audubon Quartet

The internationally acclaimed Audubon Quartet, heralded from to New York to California and around the world for their viruosity, brilliance, and the sensuous beauty of their music, will be in concert at Juniata College on Monday evening, April 13, at 8:15 p.m., in Oller Auditorium.

Formed in 1974, the Audubon Quartet attracted international attention by winning three world-wide competitions within the first few years of its existence - these included top prizes in the International String Competition in Evian, France, and the Portsmouth International String Competition.

Highlighting these accolades was first prize in the International String Quartet Competition of the Festival Villa-Lobos in Rio de Janiero, Brazil.

The members of the quartet include David Erlich, violin; David Salness, violin; Doris Lederer Horwitz, viola; and Thomas Shaw, cello.

As individual artists they have distinguished themselves as soloists and recitalists. They have recieved training in the finest centers of music in the world: Cleveland and Curtis Institutes; Yale and Tel Aviv Universities; and the Israeli and Oberlin Conservatories.

The Audubon Quartet has many "firsts" to its credit. Among the more unusual honors is their invitation to visit and tour China. This gave them the distiction of being the first American string quartet to visit China in fifteen years.

They were also the first Americans to win prizes in the Evian and Portsmouth competitions, and the first quartet to be spotlighted on the nationally televised CBS program, "Sunday Morning." The quartet has also performed at the White House for President Carter and Prime Minister Menachem Begin of Israel.

Besides numerous performances in major concert halls in the United States and Canada, they have toured in South America, Europe, and Asia.

The program by the Audubon Quartet will be the sixth in the 1986-87 Juniata College Artist Series, and will be presented as part of the Ellis Humanities Series. Intended to provide cultural and aesthetic opportunities to both the campus community and the interested public, the concert is open to all. General admission tickets are $7.50. For more information please contact the Office of College Communications at 643-4310.

Student Government and Centerboard Elections Held

Student Government and Centerboard held its annual election on Tuesday, March 31 to determine who will be the officers for the 1987-88 academic year at Juniata.

The new Student Government President is Sophomore Amy Courten. Amy is also the Vice-President of the Sophomore Class as well as being a member of Campus Ministry Board.

Student Government's new Vice-President is Junior Sue Gulla, a member of the Cross Country team.

Junior Karen D'Angelo has been appointed as the new Centerboard Chairperson and Junior Deb Dechert is the new Vice-Chairperson.

Mary Lou Miller will be the new Centerboard Secretary. As a Junior, Miller also serves as Features Editor of The Juniatian.

The Student Government senators will be elected by the student body later this month.

Pat Konitzer Wins Oratorical Contest

"Extremely close" is the phrase that best describes the competition for the revival of the John M. and Thomas F. Bailey Oratorical Contest held Monday evening in Shoemaker Gallery on the campus of Juniata College.

After a long period of deliberation the panel of qualified judges named Kennett Square, Pennsylvania senoir Patrick T. Konitzer as the winner of the competition and recipient of a $500 cash award. His name will also be engraved on an antique silver trophy which will commerate his achievement and that of future winners.

The subject of the contest, "Vision and Values: My Role in the Community," was selected to complement the theme of the inauguration of Dr. Robert Neff as Juniata's ninth President. Fourteen contestants entered the event, and seven finalists took part in the Monday evening competition ans an interested and appreciative audience of about 100 people looked on.

Dr. Neff, introduced by contest coordinator Kay Stephenson, welcomed the overflow crowd and applauded the courage and the commitment of the students taking part. Moderator for the event was Clayton E. Briggs, Associate Professor fo Speech and Theatre at Juniata.

Konitzer, using examples of personal experiences, detailed for the audience and the judges how specific life events had helped him to develop his values, and how those values had in turn helped him to develop his visions for the future.

He told of an experience working with the elderly in a nursing home, and he shared how that experience had helped him develop a deep seated concern for others.

The Juniata micro-biology major also related how his association with one particular individual, a 39-year old man afflicted with a fatal degenerative nerve disorder, helped reinforce previously established values, but also helped provide direction and purpose for his education and life.

Over all, the quality of the presentations was excellent, as was indicated in the amount of difficulty the judges had in coming to a decision. The revival of the contest, begun more that seven decades ago, was greeted with much enthusiasm by spectators and participants alike.

The finalists of the competition, other than Konitzer, were R. Scott Stephenson, John Deppen, David L. Kantner, James R. Smith, Sarah C. Yerger, and Jerry J. Camalleri.

Judges for the event were: The Honorable Charles C. Brown, Jr.,

Congratulations are in order to Dr. Robert W. Neff as the ninth president of Juniata college.

The inauguration on Saturday, and the related events, was the most spectacular display of careful planning and organization that I have ever witnessed. There were countless individuals who dedicated their time and energy to make the entire week a success. As a student, it was very inspiring to witness the network of administrators, faculty, employees, Hallmark Food Service, parents, and students who, through a combined effort, made President Neff's inauguration the success that it was.

Those who participated in or attended the inaugural ceremony must have been aware of the eminating sense of pride in Juniata College. Beyond the formality of the event itself, there was a feeling of individual importance as vital components of our college community. Possibly as a result of his past involvement or possibly a result of his personality, Dr. Neff drew each person into his special day, a day that was dedicated in honor of him. I was not the only one who recognized the aura of closeness that surrounded the ceremony.

President Neff, I would like to extend my personal congratulations not only for your inauguration, but also for the many ways you have touched Juniata College. In her address from the students, Danielle Rupp accurately summed up the effects of your presence - the sense of family here at Juniata has grown considerably stronger since you have arrived - and I couldn't agree more. For anyone who is involved with Juniata, the Inaugural Week simply served as a reinforcement of your committment.

Letters to the Editor

Racism on J.C. Campus

To whom it may concern:

On the night of April 2, 1987, a black car driven by Juniata College students passed by me, and as they did so, the occupants of the car called me "nigger" and other insults of the same kind. I hope that they are reading this letter right now because it is specially addressed to them.

They may have been drunk, but to me, it is no excuse for what they said. There are no reasons for racism in any part of this world. I am black. It is something that I cannot change (and may I add - something I would never want to change). I eat, drink, sleep, and do everything else like any other human being. I cannot begin to understand why my skin color means so much to certain people.

I don't know who those kids were and probably never will; but, I dare them, if they have any courage, to come up to me and tell me that I shouldn't be accepted in this society or world because of my skin color. I dare them to come up to me and tell me that I am less than a human being because of my skin color. And, finally, I dare them to come up to me and tell me that I don't deserve to be respected for what I am, that I don't deserve the right to be accepted for who I am and not what I look like.

I don't deserve to be treated that way. I will not stand for any type of prejudice. It may seem to be a little thing taken out of proportion to you, but when a HUMAN BEING is verbally attacked for no reason it is a big thing. It is a big thing, because I know that I, as a MEMBER OF THIS COMMUNITY and a PART OF THIS WORLD deserve better than that, for I am a person just like you. And in case you don't know it by now, the color doesn't make the man, it's what's inside. It may not have been the last time someone called me "nigger", and if I have to keep on writing letters to let certain people know that even though I am black I still have feelings, then they better be prepared, because I am ready to write letters like this one until the day I die.

Sincerely yours,

Mireille Tshiteya

Praise For Tote

To the Juniatian:

An open letter to all alumni who have not yet experienced the cuisine available at "Tote".

I am a member of the class of '68 . . . and in those days the best you could do at "Tote" was a chocolate donut and a coke. "Tote" itself was in the basement of the women's gym. . . dark, cold, and not very inviting. The building no longer stands.

I realize that our memories of a place sometimes differ from the reality of the time, but my remembrances of the cuisine circa 1964-68, are less than pleasant . . . in appearance, flavor, and presentation.

This week I had the opportunity for the first time to experience maybe the best kept secret in Huntingdon County . . . the Roast Beef Buffet at "Tote". The food was very tasty, fresh, and nicely presented. The atmosphere open, airy, and warm. The price was unbeatable.

A Seafood Buffet is available on Fridays, and you can bet that I will be trying that one in the very near future. Maybe I'll see you there!

Juniata, your food's come a long way Baby!

Elections Approach

To the Editor:

Elections for Student Government Residental Hall Senators and Senior, Junior, and Sophomore Class Officers are soon approaching. We would like to encourage all interested students (experience not necessary) to vie for these offices. These offices are prestigious and useful.

Class officers are resonsible for organizing their respective class to help set up for Madrigal Dinner, prepare the class for All Class Night, help with Homecoming responsibilities, organizing fund raising activities, plus organizing their class for any other activities during the year.

The Student Government Senate charters and funds all student organizations. The Senate also takes action on any recommendations brought to it by the student body.

The student body is responsible for electing conscientious students concerned with the well-being of our college.

Again, we would like to encourage all students to participate in the elections.

Thank you,

Amy Coursen

Hi! We were asked to say a couple words summing up our experiences, thoughts, and opinions of the Exchange Program in France. It is very difficult to do in just a few short words.

To sum it all up, we can say it is a fantastic experience and a once in a lifetime chance that should not be passed up. This does not at the least suggest that it is an easy or blowoff year. The first couple of weeks or even first two months can be very difficult just learning simple things, such as where and when to but bread or milk or even aspirin. You will go through a lot of changes here, but you will definitely profit from it.

You have probably gathered by now that schooling is just one part of the whole experience. Studying in a foreign language does require extra work and perserverence, but the subjects, especially in the sciences, are the same. This tends to make the school part one of the easiest to adjust to. ISA, our school in particular, is also well equipped on the level of lab facilities and provides a very competent and helpful staff.

Here, you will get an equivalent education to that at Juniata on the level of schooling, but the education you will receive culturally and the mind broadening experiences you will have make this year abroad different from any other. Look at it this way, Microbiolog, whether in French or English, is still the same subject, but learning how to eat the 365 different kinds of cheese just can't be experienced at Baker Refectory. And if we haven't convinced you yet, how about considering yourself dressed in some find French duds sitting at an outside cafe o well equipped on the level of lab facilities and provides a very competent and helpful staff.

101 Ways to Flush a Toilet

By Jani Lewis

Well, every 2 or 3 weeks I receive the update of The Juniatian with joy and great pleasure. "The Juniatian" catches all us exchange students up on what's the latest at J.C. and lets us know that there still is a J.C.- which we fondly love and miss. Yet, many J.C.ers don't know anything of what goes on with their fellow students who have chosen to spread their wings and take off to other foreign places for a year. And thus it is this though that has brought me to write this article. I wish to enlighten J.C.ers with our new found knowledge and experiences and to let them know that we are still alive and well over here.

Well, for a start, I can tell you some of the fun experiences we have had in trying to adjust to our new and very different surroundings. I must add that being a freshman at J.C. can be a very difficult and trying experience- BUT try living in a foreign country.

The first thing that you might notice here is the cars- or what "little" there is of them. They are all small. A Toyota station wagon is considered to be one of the bigger models. They are also all piloted by crazy drivers who make Danny Balantine look like a grandpa out for a Sunday drive. I believe that on their driver's tests, there is a queston pertaining to what to do when you see a pedestrian crossing the street- and the answer is 'speed up'. And they start learning to drive radical at a young age, despite the fact that they have to be 18 to have a driver's permit. Just the other day, my roommate, Shelly, nearly go run over by a 10 year old with a shopping cart in the local supermarket.

The next thing that you have to quickly get adjusted to is the strange business hours. No, there isw not a Sheetz in France nor a market of any ressemblance. If you want to make a munchie run, it had best be done before 8:30 p.m. After that, the only thing open is the train station and that closes soon thereafter. Just try to imagine liveing through finals without being able to run down to Sheetz at 1:30 a.m.

And of Course, there is the slight problem of the language barrier. It does take time to learn to speak and understand a foreign language quickly, no matter how many years of training you have had. Situations such a searching for a certain word or phrase can end up rather embarrassing. Joey, another fellow Juniatian, had the hardest time finding the word for raisin in French and in her efforts to explain the word to her French friends, she demonstrated with every sort of bvody contortion imaginable. After a good ten minutes, her friends were sure that she was having an epileptic fit.

Oh,and we do use a bit of Franglais here and there which is the taking an English word and pronouncing it with a French accent. It does, more often than not, work very nicely but unfortunately, the system is not fool-proof and the results can be rather embarrassing. Joey told her French exchange family that she was giving them a "sneaker of flowers", not knowing that the word "basket" in French is a name for sneakers. More embarrassing was when Wendy wrote to her exchange family and told them that she was very "excite" (excited) to be in France. Little did she know that the word 'excited' in french has only sexual connotations. Alas, embarrassing as these situations are, the Frenc people do understand and it becomes a great ice breaker because we all end up in laughter, some of us a bit red in the face, but none the less. . .

This brings me to the most difficult part of liveing in Europe in general. It is trying to figure out how to flush the toilet. Now this may seem like a very simple task, but it is quite the contrary. Every toilet seems to hve a different gadget to flush it and often times, they are well disguised. Some can be found beside the toilet, some on top of the toilet, some you push, others you pull or lift, and yet there is the variety which you step on located on the floor to the side of the toilet. It is never so frustrating when you have to spend 15 minutes extra in the bathroom trying to fugure out just how exactly to flush the toilet.

And to the person who wrote "Along Muddy Run" in the November 13 issue and complained about getting used to the toilet paper dispensers at college, I would like to reply with the following: Toilet paper here is not only found in those irritating little squares, but also has the consistency of a cardboeard box. it is not so bad after the derriere develops callouses, but the first few months are almost unbearable.

All in all, living in France so far has been quite an experience, but one I would not trade in easily. I believe most of the other foreign exchange students would agree with me. The people here are very nice and have been very helpful. Oh, and there are many great advantages to living here. Shelly, Joey and Wendy went to Greece for Cristmas vacation and i chose to go skiing in the French Alpes.

For the past week, I have continually heard people complain about the weather. Why, I ask myself, is everyone so upset with rain? Hasn't anyone ever heard of April Showers? We need them - they bring May flowers. I feel it is my duty to point out the good aspects of the weather we have been expeiencing lately.

My first point is that, if you haven't noticed, rain provides a wealth of excuses or rationalizations the student can use. I have seen repeated accounts of students missing their Monday morning classes due to rain (excuse 1). The second rationalization I observed was on Saturday when the power went out due to the rain. Students could rationalize their not studying due to the lack of lighting. They also felt it was their duty to start drinking early for fear the beer would get warm from the refrigerator being out of use.

I also find it rather pleasant to observe the colorful and decorative umbrellas one sees on the way to class. However, I do have a problem understanding why people are afraid to buy a new umbrella. I have consistently seen umbrellas with broken wires, handles, and those which do not shield them from the rain. Sentimental value, I guess?!

One has to admit that the rain stirs up those childish feelings we all possess. We can catch raindrops in our mouths, splash and stomp through the huge puddles (and I must say we do have rather large puddles or streams running across campus). I have also witnessed students singing (or howling) such popular classics as "Singing in the Rain" or "Raindrops Keep Falling on My Head."

I guess the biggest complaint was that it had to rain during President Neff's Inauguration. I thought the storm added dramatics to the ceremony. I saw the storm as more of a salute to President Neff. The thunder acted as a drum roll or twenty-one gun salute and the lightning lit up the sky like fireworks, which are forbidden on the campus. (Although if asked, I'm sure an apartment from East could have helped out in that area!) Many of the guests at the Ball were appalled to walk outside and get their lovely attire and perfect hair-sprayed head wet. I think people should remember though, that everyone would be looking like drowned rats. I have personally never seen a rain cloud attack a certain individual and just rain on them.

Last but not least, I dedicate this article to the rain, for without it, there would be no Muddy Run, gushing and flowing this weekend instead of laying stagnant and depressed. So now I propose a toast . . . . "To the rain for without you, this article would not have been written!"

I overslept and missed my appointment. Who cares. I don't have a doctor. I feel fine. I missed the bus. The canary got out so I chased it around for hours. I forgot I had to get a haircut. The kids wanted ice cream first. The traffic was terrible. The weather was great so I played golf instead. I'm not sick, ever. I don't have the money right now. If cancer's in the stars, it's in the stars. I went to the doctor's on the wrong day. I went to the wrong doctor's. Maybe next week I'll make it. It's against my religion. I'm... need to lose a few pounds first. I'm too busy right... to fall apart without me. My father... doctor's and he lived until he was 90. I don't like to... about it. Nothing's wrong... cold. I'm... care. I thought... home and fix dinner. I never heard of it. My boss wouldn't give me the day off a... great sale on linens. I couldn't miss... rattle. No one in my family ever... cancer. I'm not afraid of cancer. I lost a button that... a football game. By the time they find... may be too late. I was doing laundry. I... a day in my life. Cancer of the what? Doctors are boring. It's my business. I need every... tomorrow. I couldn't care less. But... bridge club meeting... Stop... far away. I forgot to cash a check. My dog was lost, and I had to find it. It was hunting season. My clothes were at the laundry. I feel great. It appears... The kids would mug me if I were apart... sorry why. If I haven't got cancer by... I never get it. I just don't want to know. No one in my family ever had cancer anyway. My husband... I'm not... worry... going to die. But I remembered the... I never needed to. It was raining out, and I was afraid I'd get sick... on the way.

Everyone has an excuse for not seeing their doctor about colorectal cancer. However, every year 52,000 men and women die of colorectal cancer in this country alone. Two out of three of these people might be saved by early detection and treatment. Two out of three.

Stop excusing your life away.

Neff Inauguration Keynotes Weekend

By Alex Jones

Despite bitter weather and a massive power failure that rendered a considerable portion of the campus without lights for most of the day, the Inauguration of Dr. Robert W. Neff, Juniata College's ninth president, was a large success.

As early as 10 a.m., delegates form 75 prestigious institutions, including Harvard and Yale, began to arrive on the Juniata campus. They were met by the many members of the Juniata community, consisting of both staff and students, that had volunteered to serve as "hosts" for the day's events.

After the Inaugural Luncheon, served in the Baker Refectory, the delegates of higher education joined seven representatives from the Church of the Brethren and 65 students representing 32 student organizations in the multi-purpose room of the Kennedy Sports Center to don cap and gown for the Inaugrual Procession. The ceremonies took place in the main gym. Music was provided by Terry Murray (piano), Ronald Dekker and Kenneth Young (trumpets), Dr. Joseph Figg, and the Juniata College Concert Choir.

The Inaugural Ceremony featured the keynote address of Dr. Ernest L. Boyer, the President of the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching. Dr. Boyer also received an honorary Doctorate of Humane Letters from the college. The Reverand Arie R. Brouwer, who spoke on Friday night at a special All-Campus Worship Service, was also presented with an honorary degree. He was presented a Doctorate of Divinity. Dr. Brouwer is the general secretary of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A., and has earned a reputation for his involvement in social justice issues, especially those pertaining to the anti-Apartheid movement in South Africa. A reception in Gibbel Lobby followed the inaugural ceremonies.

There was little room on the dance floor in Baker Refectory as a large crowd was present at the Inaugural ball. The Kim Sherry Revue provided a large variety of music, ranging from soft jazz to polka to contemporary music. The most popular were the "group" dances, such as the "Snake" and the "Boogie-Woogie". In all, the band evoked a generally favorable reaction.

Congratulations to Dr. Neff, and to all those who worked so hard to organize this weekend, on a tremendous inaugural success.

Dr. Charles Ellis, Chairman of the Juniata College Board of Trustees, presents President Robert W. Neff with the Presidential medallion at Saturday's Inauguration in the college's Memorial Gym, Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center.

Baldino Named As Commonwealth Speaker

Dr. Thomas J. Baldino, Associate Professor of Political Science at Juniata College, has been selected as a member of the prestigious Commonwealth Speakers Program.

Initiated by the Pennsylvania Humanities Council and designed to provide humanities programs throughout the State. The Commonwealth Speakers Bureau represents some of the most distinguished humanists in Pennsylvania. Chosen each year by a special Commonwealth Speakers Selection Panel, participants are selected not only for their scholarly credentials and authority in their fields, but also for their reputation as engaging speakers.

Dr. Baldino offers presentations on two topics, The Battle of theFederal Budget: A Constitutional Approach, and The Nature of Representation in the American Constitutional System.

In the first of those subjects Dr. Baldino stresses that we need an objective evaluation of the powers granted in the Constitution to the President and Congress to assist us in gaining a clearer understanding of events. During discussion of his second topic Dr. Baldino, using the "Federalist Papers" and "Madison's Notes of the Convention," examines the Founders' conception of representation.

Pennsylvania Humanities Council Commonwealth Speakers are available to any non-profit organization in the state interested in sponsoring a public humanities program. For more information call toll free from anywhere in Pennsylvania at 1-800-462-0442.

Student Of The Week

Statistics show that more women in today's society are going back to school and entering the job market. Our college community doesn't need to look far; meet Donna Lawler wife of sixteen years, mother of three children and a Juniata College sophomore.

"I always wanted to go back to school and to work again," explains Lawler who is studying Elementary Education. "I wanted to provide myself with a profession, and I know I can be a good teacher."

While attending college has added a new dimension to her life, Lawler emphasizes that her family remains a priority.

"I like to be with the children before and after school. I take them to music lessons and ballgames, and when they do homework, I do homework. The only thing that has changed is that I have less time for myself. I am constantly busy!"

Lawler contends that her main reason for success thus far is her ability to organize her activities and responsibilites. She's able to coordinate her classes, housework and her children's taxi service, so that she makes most efficient use of her time.

"It takes cooperation on everyone's part. The kids are beginning to take on more responsibilities and things are done on a more consistent basis, says Lawler who is grateful for her family's support.

"My husband, Ray, is my number one fan!"

Like many upperclassmen who have made the transition fron trimesters to semesters, Lawler claims the semester system has helped her daily organization.

"Semesters are better for me, because I only have to plan to be on campus two or three times a week rather than every day."

On her way to completing her second year, Lawler can reflect on her first thoughts as a college student. "I think I was a little gunshy and lacked confidence that I could go through with the classwork. But after I started to see the benefits of hard work, it gave me the boost to keep going."

Lawler admits that some days are tough but on those days she thinks of her long term goals and she agrees that it is worth it.

Now we can detect a breast cancer smaller than this dot.

At such an early stage, your chances of living a long, healthy life are excellent. But we need your help. The only proven way to detect a cancer this small is with a mammogram. A mammogram is a low-radiation x-ray of the breast capable of detecting a cancer long before a lump can be felt. If you're over 50, a mammogram is recommended every year. If you're between 40 and 50, or have a family history of breast cancer, consult your doctor. In addition, of course, continue your regular self-examinations.

Peace Corps To Visit JC

Peace Corps recruiter Bill Butler announced that he will hold a general information session on Monday, April 14 in Career Planning, Ellis Hall, at 7 p.m.
A film will be shown and questions answered by Butler, A former Peace Corps volunteer.

"Peace Corps is able to utilize the skill of people with a wide variety of backgrounds, however college graduates with degrees in certain 'scarce skills' are particularly needed," states Butler. Degrees sought by Peace Corps include biology, chemistry, physics, special education, engineering, mathematic French and Spanish. However, students who do not have degrees in these areas are encouraged to apply as well. Persons with experience in farming, health, construction and industrial arts are also needed.

Cancellation authority for Peace Corps and Vista volunteers was approved on October 17, 1986, by Higher Education Bill (S. 1965). Loans will be forgiven at the rate of 15% per year of the total loan obligation, plus accrued annual interest for each of the third and fourth years of service. The provision is effective for loans made to cover cost for periods of enrollment on or after July, 1987 and covers NDSL (National Direct Student Loans) only. The Bill also provides for the continuance of the current deferment of loan repayment while a volunteer is in service.

Interviews are scheduled for Monday, April 20, 1987. Seniors are urged to sign up immediately at Career Planning and Placement, where they can obtain application packets. Only applicants with completed applications will be interviewed.

For more information contact Peace Corps in Philadelphia at 800-462-1589 toll free from Pennsylvania, or (215) 597-0744 outside Pennsylvania.

Morality and Affirmative Action

By Alex Jones

The Supreme Court's latest decision, a 6-3 ruling that upheld a California city's Affirmative Action Plan, rejected a sex discrimination case filed by a California man who was not promoted because he was a man, even though he attained higher scores on a placement test than the woman who was eventually given the job. The case will have serious repercusions in the open job market for years to come, in that the court has now established that affirmative action, and sexual discrimination, is here to stay.

This case is significant because it is the first time that the Supreme Court has enacted a ruling that pertains to affirmative action favoring women over men. It was also the court's first unambiguous ruling that employers, who have not previously been guilty of discriminatory practices in their hiring policies, may show preference to minority groups and women, regardless of ability or tenure, to promote balance in traditionally segregated job categories.

Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 declares that:

"It shall be unlawful employment practice for an employer -

1) to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual, or otherwise discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or priviledges of employment, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin; or -

2) to limit, segregate, or classify his employees or applicants for employment in any way which would deprive or tend to deprive any individual of employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin."

Justice Antonin Scalia, who voted against the decision, claims that the Supreme Court has now completed "the process of converting this from a guarantee that race or sex will not be the basis for employment determinations, to a gaurantee that it often will."

Justice Scalia is right. Now every employer will have to be extremely careful to avoid a lawsuit each time employees of a different race or sex compete for promotion. Every employer will have to be extremely careful to avoid a lawsuit each time applicants of a different race or sex compete for a job. Under Affirmative Action, when you are an employer, you will have to hire the best of each category, black as opposed to white or male as opposed to female, instead of hiring the most qualified applicants. Affirmative Action is unconstitutional. Affirmative Action is wrong, both in practice and ideology, because it promotes discrimination between the races and discrimination between the sexes.

It is the goal of the News Department to make V103 more than simply a music station. That is, the station believes that it has an obligation to the students to serve also as a source of information.

With respect to "national" news, V103 will utilize its satelite dish to its greatest capacity. In areas of local news, the News Department has an obligation to inform the student body and the local community about college and local events. Being in a rather "remote" area, the radio should be your best source of local news. V103 will keep you in touch daily with its "News Beats".

V103 also keeps its listeners up to date with the latest in rock news, by way of the "Rock Beat". Your opinion in how the News Department can best serve "you" can be expressed in the present survey being conducted by the station.

And finally, in order to see the above become an on-going reality, we must have dedicated staff members. for just a half an hour a week, you can become a "vital" part of the V103 staff. Anyone interested—please contact John Ehmann at 643-9891 or leave a message in my box at the station. Let your voice be heard on the "One that Rocks".

The Business Department has arrived at V103. Yes, we are here and we want YOU to become an intricate member. Over the next year, our department will be assuming more responsibility then ever before and we need your assistance in developing V103 into a college radio station which you can be proud of.

How can you help us while gaining valuable experiences and rewards for yourself? Well, we have just started a thorough sponsorship package and we need people to market and sell the sponsorship material. The funds raised through the various sponsors will be used in helping V103 become a full-time Stereo broadcasting station.

If you are interested, want a challenge and want to become part of a dynamic new staff, please contact me, Shawn Peck (Business Manager) or our station manager, Joe Newhart, for further information. EVERYONE is welcome! I promise that this will be an enjoyable, informative, self-satisfying experience. Come on and join us on the "Road to Stereo", and as the song goes, "Let's Make Lots of Money".

SHAC Extends Gratitude

By Cecelia Barnes

The Student Health Advisory Committee (SHAC) and the J Health Center would like to thank all students, faculty, administration and Juniata College staff who helped to make Wellness Day such an outstanding success. On Tuesday, March 25, over 22 health agencies were represented in the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center Mezzanine by state and nationwide organizations. We are very pleased with the turn-out and the participation of the entire Juniata College community. Over 225 participants registered for Wellness Day, but at least as many took advantage of the free testing and educational information offered without registering. Over 80 TB Tine tests, and well over 100 Blood Cholesterol tests were given. Those participants that kept their registration form with their test results may either keep them for their own records, or turn them in to the Health Center to be filed in their health folder here at the College.

For Spring term this year, the Student Health Advisory Committee will continue to offer the Peer To Peer Support Groups (PTOPS) on weekday evenings, as long as there is a continued active interest. Crickett Juliu is leading a support group on Eating Disorders, C.B. Barnes is leadinga support group on Fitness and Weight Training Techniques, and Ann Tinsman will be beginning a support group in conjunction with the nutritionists at the JC Blair Memorial Hospital on Nutrition. Participants arerequested to register in advance in the Health Center located in first Lesher. All support group meetings will be held in the SHAC Wellness Room adjacent to the Health Center. Time and date information is available in both the Health Center and the SHAC Wellness Room.

Cystic Fibrosis Chairmen Appointed

Five Huntingdon County residents have been appointed by the Western Pennsylvania Chapter of the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation to serve as Chairmen of the 1987 Spring Campaign. Huntingdon County Chairmen are: Mrs. Jayne Grier, Mrs. Marina Dietz, James Nichol, Mrs. Nellie Brown, and Mrs. Sandy Peterson.

"These community special events are part of a nationwide effort to continue our fight against cystic fibrosis," said Richard Bruni, Chapter President. "With the support of the residents of these communities, we can be assured of a successful campaign."

According to Bruni, the money raised from these events will help fund research to determine the genetic causes and develop better treatments for cystic fibrosis, the nation's number one genetic killer of young people. Cystic fibrosis is presently an incurable disease which primarily affects the lungs and digestive system. Thanks to money raised in previous campaigns, tremendous strides in CF research have been made in the past two years. These advances mean that the development of a cure for cystic fibrosis is closer than ever.

Anyone wanting more information about cystic fibrosis or about these special events may call (412) 321-4422.

Hot Wax

By Todd Mullen

With his latest album One to One Howard Jones displays his innovative style with a new high-tech sound. Produced by Arif Mardin, the album contains 10 new tracks that should be enough to satisfy most musical tastes. Most of the cuts are about love and hardships; but although Jones seems to be really down on a few songs, the general mood of the the album is upbeat and hopeful.

As for the music, Jones experiments with a variety of sounds and instruments. A few of the tunes, such as the Already released "You Know I Love You. . .Don't You?" and "Step into These Shoes" are typical top 40 fare, both heavy with the synthesizers that HoJo can play so well. Great backing vocals and a variety of other instruments give songs like "Don't want to Fight Anymore" and "Give me Strength" an almost reggae flair and "Will You Still Be There" promises to be a hit with its powerful lyrics and Howard's voice at its most emotional. Even more moving is the last track on the album, "Little Bit of Snow," whose simple composition proves that less can be more.

Jones has written the words and music for every song on the album, but his excellent choice of musicians, variety of sounds, and creativity ensure that One to One should have something for everyone.

Men's Season Over
On To MAC Tourney

By Tom Hunt

The men's volleyball team completed its regular season play in the Middle Atlantic Conference Sunday with a 3-1 victory over Dickinson. The victory snapped a four game losing streak which included a tough loss at first-place Messiah College earlier this week. The team is currently tied for third in the MAC.

Eight players travelled to Messiah on Thursday to take on the league leaders. J.C. opened up a 4-0 lead in the first game led by the tough serving of senior Keith Hall, but Messiah gained momentum with strong blocking and eventually won the game, 10-15. In game two, Coach Jim Donaldson juggled the lineup, moving Junior Chris Hester to outside hitter and inserting freshman Pat Sterner at middle blocker, but the move failed to produce the needed passing and offense as Juniata fell again, 7-15. The third game proved no different as the Indians fell 9-15 to complete the match. The positive note from the match was the return of junior setter Andy Rhinehart, who had been sidelined for almost two weeks with a separated shoulder.

Sunday was a completely different story, when Juniata took six of seven games in the two matches with Dickinson. In the first match, Juniata won 3-1 with scores of 16-14, 12-15, 15-6, and 15-8. In the opening game, Juniata battled back from an 8-13 deficit behind the blocking of junior Jack Winebrenner and the spiking of Keith Hall. After the second game loss, the Indians took control and overwhelmed the opposition. Perfect passing from sophomore Bob Davies and Hester gave junior setter Larry Hillman the opportunity to vary the offense. Rhinehart and Hall were the recipients of Hillman's picture-perfect sets. In the second match, J.C. swept three straight games, 15-11, 15-7, and 16-14. In the first game victory, Dickinson was unable to handle the serving of junior Craig White and junior Eric Lippay as Juniata built an 11-1 lead. Setter Jeff Boshart and middle blocker Pat Sterner provided Juniata with outstanding setting and passing, respectively, to lead the team's second game effort. In game three, the Indians fell behind 8-14 before coming back behind Jeff "Judd" Mroz's serving. "Judd" served the final six points of the game for the victory.

The men's team completes its second season this Sunday when it travels back down to Dickinson for the MAC tournament. With the return of Rhinehart and the full week of preparation, the team has a good chance to win the second annual tournament. The team would also like to thank the faculty and students who have supported them this year.

JC Plays 1 Of 3 Games

By Mike Antenucci

As we all can attest to, the "April Showers", which bring May flowers, never seem to want to stop. The Juniata's Mens baseball team has also been effected by the rain storms, already having two games (Bucknell and Susquehanna) cancelled due to inclement weather, while playing another, against Grace College, on a wet field.

However, the rain did not manage to stop the Indians, who were on their way to a 9-5 victory. Grace managed to get on the scoreboard early, scoring 3 of their 5 runs in the top half of the first inning. Grace compiled only 6 hits in the game, half of those hits were also in the first inning.

Juniata, still trailing 3-0 going into the bottom of the third, got things going in the right direction on Mike Culvers no out triple. George Zanic then reached base on an error, Dan Webb reached on a base on balls, than Daryl Dobos cracked a double to score Zanic. JC still trailed 3-2 with two out and a man on third when Paul Hayduks single scored Dobos to knot things up at three.

The Indians put a quick halt to the Grace College fourth and Chuck Gunby started off another JC scoring inning with a walk, followed by a Culver single. George Zanic's single with two men on proved to be the winning hit of the game as two runs crossed for JC. Grace managed two more runs, while the Indians added four more themselves.

Vince Anselmo was given credit for the win, while teammate Mike Culver proved to be the hitting star of the game, going 3 for 4, scoring 3 runs, including a triple. While Zanic was only 1 for 3 he manged to get on base on all of his four at bats. Zanic also scored two runs.

Dan Webb went 1 for 2, scoring a run, and was 1 of the 5 Indians who had RBI's in the contest. Dobos went 2 for 4, both hits were doubles. Gunby went 1 for two, scoring twice, and also having an RBI.

Juniata also missed out playing Susquehanna, there is not yet a rescheduled date for the important MAC contest. The Indians played at Penn State-Harrisburg yesterday, and travel to Dickinson this Saturday. JC's next home game is Monday at 3:00, when the Indians host Gettsyburg.

The Women's softball team has rescheduled their rained out game against Wilkes for this Monday at 2:00.

- St. George's received a similar approval in 1985 from the New Jersey Board of Medical Examiners; this establishes St. George's as the only foreign medical school with instruction in English that has state-approved campuses in both New York and New Jersey.
- Over 700 students have transferred to U.S. medical schools. St. George's has graduated over 1,000 physicians:
  They are licensed in 39 states;
  They hold faculty positions in 20 U.S. medical schools – 25% have been Chief Residents in 119 U.S. hospitals (according to a 1986 survey).
- St. George's is entering its second decade of medical education. In the first decade, we were cited by The Journal of the American Medical Association (January 1985) as ranking number one of all major foreign medical schools in the initial pass rate on the ECFMG exam.
- St. George's is one of the few foreign medical schools whose students qualify for Guaranteed Student Loans. Our students also qualify for the PLUS/ALAS loans and, under certain conditions, VA loans. St. George's grants a limited number of loans and scholarships to entering students.

Yevtushenko Presents: Almost At The End

By Lisa Clapper

World famous Russian poet Yevgeny Yevtushenko will present an evening of poetry reading from his latest book, "Almost at he End," at 8:15 p.m. in Juniata College's Oller Hall on April 22.

Known as the most famous Russian poet of our generation and marked by the New York Times as "possibly the most famous poet in the world," Yevtushenko describes his poetry as a kind of borscht, the Russian beet soup in which anything goes as long as it tastes right in the end.

Raised by his parents, a geologist and a professional singer, he grew up in a shaken nation that had undergone World War II as well as the terrors of Joseph Stalin. He was educated at the Literary Institute in Moscow and at the age of 16 he was a published poet.

In 1961, a promotional poetry reading in Mayakovsky Square was interrupted when the audience spotted the 27 year old Yevtushenko in the crowd and they began to shout, "Yev-tu-shen-ko!" as an invitation to the podium. He did not disappoint his audience and the crowd showed him their appreciation by hoisting him on their sho9ulders and carrying him through the streets to a statue of Pushkin (a famous Russian port), stopping all the traffic on Moscow's busiest street.

"It was the first time that I realized what kind of power poetry could have," said Yevtushenko.

With 100,000 lines of poetry, two novels, a book of photographs with prose and poetic commentary and a film about his childhood that he directed and in which he played a prominent part, all added to his line of credits. Yevtushenko has been translated into all the major languages of the world. He has toured and traveled world-wide including all the states in the U.S. with the exception of North Dakota and Montana.

Mr. Yevtushenko comes to the Juniata College campus through the Peace and Conflict Lecture Series and is supported by the Foreign Language Department therough the support of the Harold Brumbaugh Lecture Fund. Tickets are $3 for students and $5 for the general public and may be purchased the night of the lecture at the door.

J.C. In The Midst Of Strategic Planning Process

Juniata College is in the midst of a strategic planning process under the guidance of Dr. Arnold Tilden. Three committees have been created by Dr. Robert Neff to assist in the planning process: Mission statement, External Assessment, and Internal Assessment. These committees include faculty, administrative, and student representatives.

The Mission Statement Planning Committee has completed a draft after nine meetings and are inviting responses to any committee member. The proposed Mission Statement appears as follows:

"Juniata College is a community dedicated to providing a liberal education of the highest quality. The aim of that education is to free individuals from the limitations imposed by ignorance and provincialism and to enable them to lead fulfilling and usefull lives.

As a community, Juniata is especially concerned with the environment necessary to foster individual growth. It therefore values mutual support, the free exchange of diverse ideas, and the active pursuit of both cooperative and individual achievement.

Individual growth requires, first of all, the mastery of basic intellectual skills: to read perceptively and critically, to write and speak clearly, and to think analytically. With these skills as a foundation, Juniata students develop an informed appreciation of their intellectual, aesthetic, and moral heritage. In addition to mastering certain information and techniques, they acquire an understanding of method and purpose in a variety of fields, an openness to new ideas, and an affinity for excellence and integrity.

The qualities of mind and character nurtured by a Juniata education combined with the experience gained through involvement in the Juniata community prepare our students to live as productive contributors to society, as informed and concerned citizens, as caring and responsible adults, and as legatees and caretakers of their cultural heritage.

The Mission Statement Planning Committee members include Dr. Mark Hochberg, chairman, Dr. Arnold Tilden, Dr. Ronald Cherry, Janet Lewis, Dr. Andrew Murray, William Alexander, and Jodie Monger.

World News Update

PRAGUE, CZECHOSLOVAKIA-Soviet leader Mikhail Gorvachev proposed new talks on the reduction of short-range nuclear missiles and conventional military forces in Europe, saying he wanted to remove the obstacles to an early U.S. Soviet agreement on intermediate missiles on Friday.

LOS ANGELES-President Reagan welcomed Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev's suggestion to accelerate talks to limit the number of short-range nuclear missiles in Europe on Friday.

WASHINGTON-Soviet diplomats took reporters on a rare tour of their new embassy complex Friday and showed off an elaborate collection of "bugs" to expand their public counteroffensive against charges of KGB snooping on the U.S. Embassy in Moscow.

Editorial

April 9 issue of The Juniatian contained an alarming letter to the editor pertaining to social justice and racial equality. The letter was so potent that the Juniatian staff thought that it deserved a reply, and in this case, support.

"Juniata College is an independent, privately supported, coeducational institution committed to providing a liberal arts education to qualified students regardless of sex, race, religion, creed, color or handicap."

You can read that sentence in almost every pamphlet that this school publishes. It is a shame that there are students on our campus who care to insult and defame members of this community because they are different. In our society, at a professedly "liberal" school, there is no room for racist prejudice.

Obviously, Dr. Martin Luther King's dream is still far from reality. Mireille Tshiteya was right to complain about the unfair treatment to which she was subjected, and I think that she should be commended for making a mature response to such immature behavior.

A message to the students who harrassed Mireille Tshiteya, and others who share their sentiments: Get out. Kindly pack your bags and go home. Juniata College is not the right place for you.

AFTER 40 YEARS OF SUITS AND COUNTER SUITS, THE SUPREME COURT HAS FINALLY RULED ON THE BABY M CASE....

Letters to the Editor

Good Show!

Dear Editor,

Those attending the Spring Concert of the College Band on Saturday evening were rewared with a program of great beauty and intellectual interest.

The students performed difficult and demanding works with skill and verve. Professor Tower, a virtuose clarinetist as well as an enthusiastic and meticulous conductor, used both those skills to great effect in presinting an evening of music that is both informative and pleasurable.

That the audience included only 15 students and 2 faculty members does not speak well for the levels of culture or collegiality at Juniata.

Yours sincerely,
Howard F. Long '50

From the Pen of. . .

By Alex Jones

On March 31, 1987, the tragic plight of Baby M, and her natural parents, Mary Beth Whitehead and William Stern, was decided upon in the courtroom of Judge Harvey R. Sorkow. Judge Sorkow gave legal custody of the child to the natural father. The conception of the child, named Baby M by the court, was made possible through the practice known as surrogate motherhood. A legal dilemma arose when Mary Beth Whitehead, after giving birth to the child, refused to accept payment and release the baby to the Sterns. This landmark case has highlighted all of the potentially disastrous pitfalls of the surrogacy program.

The first, and most prominent, issue is the child. Baby M, someday, will be told that she was born through a surrogacy program and come to realize that she was conceived to be sold. She may grow to wonder about her value as a child against her value as a commodity. She will always wonder what life would have been like if she had become Sara Whitehead instead of Melissa Stern. What is a fair price for a child, anyway? As Russell Baker of the New York Times has pointed out, the Dutchess of Windsor's jewels were sold for $50 million and a Van Gogh painting was sold for $39.9 million. Now a human life has been sold for a mere $17,500. It is my opinion that any contract stipulating the terms of the sale of a child should be deemed null and void because in our society, baby-selling is illegal.

What about Baby M's natural family, Mrs. Whitehead's other children? They were witness to the bearing of their half-sister. Won't they grow to fear that they too will be sold?

Another issue that developed during the Baby M trial centers around Baby M's "best interests". The socio-economic indications imply that Mr. and Dr. Stern can provide more, materially, for the child. But what about the natural mother's inborn affection for her child? Although the practice of adoption has shown that motherly affection can be replicated by an adoptive parent, adoption also takes place under different circumstances. In adoption cases, the natural mother either can not or does not want to parent the child in question. Mary Beth Whitehead wants to keep her baby. This material exploitation, by a well-to-do couple of another couple of a lower socio-economic class, is a blatantly undemocratic justification for parenthood in our "democratic" society.

Adoption is less fraught with moral ambiguities. Adoption has proven to be a successful instrument in our society. Adoption gives the child in question a secure and acceptable home. And of the man's desire to have a child that carries his own genes - this desire contains elements of narcissism and ego that pertain to the man's needs over the child's "best interests". Let a couple that wants to have a child adopt.

Surrogate motherhood should be outlawed. There can be no price for the life of a child.

Wayfarer's Journal

By Wendy Williams

My first time in France was during my junior year in high school. It was an exchange for three weeks; long enough to let me get a taste of a foreign culture and the desire to live that culture for a year. Now four years later, I'm here. How do I like it after five months? After such a short time, it has really grown on me - the culture and the people. If it wasn't for my personnal connections in the states, I could stay.

When I first arrived, I was pretty tired after an eight hour plane ride, so Lille and France in general seemed like a totally different world. But after a little time and a lot of concentration on the language it really is a neat place.

What is different? For one, the food. You thought mom's homemade bread was delicious! And of course the pastries and the cheeses (there is at least one different type for each day of the year). Oh yes, and we can't forget the wine. The french's pride and joy. All over, no matter where in France, there are numerous locally owned bakeries, butcher shops, and grocery stores. Then of course there are the open air markets where one can buy anything from carpets to carrots, and all the produce is usually fresh. As for large supermarkets—yes they exist. But don't think someone is shoplifting if they start putting food in their own bag. They are allowed! Restaurants in France range from very classy french cuisine, to creperies, to pizzarias, to chinese, to fast food restaurants. There is even a McDonalds in Lille.

How about transportation to these stores, and to the many other shopping locales? Well, France has an excellent public transportation system (trains, buses, and metros) and of course there are the slightly expensive taxis. But if all else fails, take to your feet. After five months here a thirty minute walk to a favorite restaurant is nothing! Places where one wants to go are numerous. There are shopping centers or "Centres Commerciales", plus many local shops. But remember, look, don't touch. The french prefer to serve you instead of you helping yourself—this applies to the smaller epiceries too! Besides clothes (and other) shops, there are movie theaters galore (reduced prices for students on weekdays), cafes, student (university) parties, and an excellent art museum — so one can really never become bored!

The university I found to be quite different. For one thing, the students in Lille live in private apartments or rooms — spread out all over the city. And, most go home on weekends. So, getting to know the students was a little difficult. As for picking courses, it was a little nerve racking at the beginning of the year trying to get all the courses I wanted, and keep them from conflicting. After a little patience though it all worked out. I actually have some classes here I could never get at Juniata.

Once I started attending classes, things started getting a lot easier. For one, it is a great way to get to know the students and to practice up on french comprehension. The professors did speak a little fast at first but with the help of the notes of a french student I've managed to keep on top of things. One really huge difference are the exams. There usually are only two during the year. Sometimes you are aloud to bring notes with you, and sometimes you're not. Also, the lack of exams makes one tend to forget studying!

The people in France I've found to be all very nice - and very proud. Trying to argue against something french, and win, is almost impossible. Also, getting to know people is a little more difficult. The french, at first meetings, are not quite as open as Americans. But, once you've made a friend, you've pretty well got a friend for life. They will go out of their way to make you feel at home and they will refuse any help from you for a while. One thing, though, if they offer to you to visit or to come to dinner, it is up to you to make the next move. So one can easily feel like he's inviting himself to dinner when actually he's not.

How about parties? They exist privately and publicly, usually on a weekday. For the private ones, bring along a bottle of wine. And music? Well, I don't miss any! The french nationalized radio offers the same music we get in the states plus some of their own music.

I guess you could say that my experiences, even the bad ones, have made me lose part of myself to this country. I'll definitely be coming back.

Hi,
Straighten your room,
do your laundry,
study more,
get some new friends,
wear clean underwear,
get a nice haircut,
and while your at it...
TURN THAT STEREO DOWN!
love, mom

Counselor's Corner

COUNSELOR'S CORNER
By Dr. Jay D. Buchanan

"DR. J", the real Dr. J, that is, and not yours truely, is retiring from basketball at the end of this season. What more can be said about Julius Irving and his spectactular play in both the now defunct ABA and in the NBA that has not already been stated?

More inportantly than his court play, it seems to me, it what the "Dr." has meant to the game as an off-the-court role model. Going back to University of Massachuttes after all those years and finally earning his degree and then to be asked later to deliver a commencement address at his alma mater, suggest that there is more to Julius Irving than the finger roll and the slam dunk.

We are all quite familiar with the currently popular phrase, "Go for it!" Perhaps that is the message we can get from Julius Irving and other popular athletes of his class. Indeed, very few of us are born with the physical talent and natural skills of a Dr. J or a Magic Johnson, but each of us has the innate ability and opportunity to develop into something very special if we would just dare to dream and then go for it.

This is the very message The Marilyn King, two-time Olympic Pentathlete, brought to JC just two weeks ago. Interestingly enough, she stated that the quality deemed most critical to success at the world-class level was not physical skills but rather mental skills.

As we wind down the 1986-87 academic year and head into final exams, why not with this attitude: GO FOR IT!! (You may just surprise yourself.) Someone once said that when we give it our best, good things are bound to happen.

Best wishes to you and your family at Easter. Don't forget to be good to yourself.

Note: This article is not an album review per se, but does include information on reviewing albums.

A bunch of people have come to me recently and asked what it takes to review albums. My answer was, quite simply, "albums". I mean, you don't need a high I.Q., a lot of money, or even the ability to complete a compound sentence in order to review albums. I'm proof of that.

Seriously, all that one needs is several creative adjectives, some knowledge about music, and feelings or ideas about the album being reviewed. In basic terms, it's the ability to B.S. and sound like you mean it. I'm not saying that all that you read in fine publications such as Rolling Stone, SPIN, or the Juniatian is a lie. (Except ,of course Menudo reviews-these are pure fiction). No matter how objective a reviewer tries to be, personal tastes and moods will always show up somehow. For example, say I was reviewing So, by Peter Gabriel. Let's also assume I had just eaten some eggplant quiche and nachos for dinner. The fact I feel like throwing up would tend to add to a more negative review. On that note, I'd like to share a few suggestions for those who wish to pursue reviewing albums for business or pleasure.

Number One: Do it sober. You'd be amazed at what you think you hear while under the influence. I'm sure you can find forty minutes a week of "straight" time to sit by the turntable. (Exception, again is a Menudo record, you definitely want to be totaled for this.)

Number Two: Pick something that the half-dozen people who read your articles can possibly enjoy and at least are able to pronounce (Me-nu-do).

Finally, Number Three: This was my big problem and I repent. Get the %!! article in on time! At a professional magazine, they will fire you if you're late. Not good. Even on the college level, they can still screw-up your life. (Like making you review-yes-Menudo albums.) Really not good.

Anyway, if anyone has an interest of my opinion of the rest of the new U2, feel free to ask! Otherwise, it's off to review albums in Germany for a year. See ya later.

Freshmen Win Monopoly

By Rush Blady

The real worries came Friday night when the weary organizers of The World's Largest Monopoly Game called their work to a halt because of inclement painting conditions- it got dark. "St. Charles Place" was halted in mid-title, like this: ST. C H A. I remember personally acknowledging defeat when a woman in a Buick Skylark ran down my artistic creation on the roadbed, leaving white tire tracks down the length of Moore Street while I shook my fist vengefully at her departing taillights. That was it, I give up. Meanwhile,

ALONG · MUDDY · RUN

What is a NATATORIUM? Why is the sauna located where it is? The answer has something to do with the Kennedy Sports and Recreation Center. Over the past few years, I have enjoyed, to a greater or lesser degree, the facilities of the sports center and along with the memorable hours of "pain and strain", I have acquired some criticisms.

The Breadfinder Natatorium is my biggest criticism. I've always wondered why someone didn't just call it a swimming pool! A better name for it would be the "Breadfinder Baby Pool." The temperature of the water is at least 98.6 degrees — slightly hotter than the circular pool the kiddies tinkle in back home at the Y!

Another criticism I have is the inability to get racquetball courts at a conveniant time, especially during the winter months. Usually the courts are filled with fat, sweaty professors and administrators who are trying to be athletic. I hate being in a court after one of those guys plays because the smell of their body odor really makes me nauseous. I don't know why they stink; maybe it's because all that running brings out the farts.

Well, if this article gets too long, the editor will never print it so I guess I'll have to bring this to an end. But before I go let me give you a few more things to think about and criticize: 1) Why does the sports center have 60 million doors and only 1 is usually open? 2) Why are we required to wear "activity shoes" . . . when the college builds huge wooden platforms on the gym floor for inaugurations and allows guests that are dressed in high heels to mark the floor to their hearts' content? 3) . . .in the words of senior John Slick, "Why wasn't the money used for the gym to build a building to have bands, kegs, and parties?"

Until next time take care and God bless you!!!

Spring Fling Schedule - Surf and Turf '87 - Juniata's a Beach

By Pam Greenauer

Just when you were saying that this year was flying to a close, there is one more blowout to look forward to. . . Spring Fest!! The theme this year is Surf & Turf '87- Juniata's a Beach. This theme ties together the activities planned for April 21-25.

The week will kick off with a last jammin' Coffeehouse in the Catharsis Lounge Tuesday from 9-12 a.m. The spotlight will be on Used Furniture— that band that we all know and love!

Thursday, April 23 at 8:15 p.m., the Lecture Committee will sponsor The Comedy Laff-Off in Ellis Ballroom. It will feature three hot new comedians from New York City.

Friday will find everyone slopping in mud over by Sherwood as the fun and famous Mud Volleyball gets underway. Also, in the gym at 8:15 p.m. there will be a dance featuring the band AR 15 from Baltimore.

All of this is just the appetizer for what Saturday holds — the biggest blow-out on campus! The day will begin about 9 am with 3-legged football games, tug-o-war, and obstacle courses between the classes. The faculty and administration has even been recruited to pull against the winner of the tug-o-war in the leftover mud from Mud Volleyball.

Starting at 11:30 a.m. there will be Raft Rales on wheels on Scott Street (the street in front of Ellis) between the different RHAs. There will be prizes for the host original raft, the most original costumes, and the 1st place finish. Who said there will never be another Raft Regatta ?!

For lunch, food service will be providing a clam bake (the surf part of the surf & turf) adjacent to Ellis from 11:30 -1:30 p.m. There will be a DJ and sound system to get us primed for the afternoon events on the tennis courts.

There will be an opening ceremony at 2 p.m. Everyone going will be getting a free stadium cup to consume with. The party will be B.Y.O.B so it might be a good idea to bring coolers back from break to keep things cold. There will be three bands from State College playing all afternoon — Tic-A-Poo Brain, Stolyn Hours, and The Screaming Ducks; in between the bands there will be contests and prizes given away. There will be lots of munchies all afternoon and the tennis courts will be transformed into a beach area.

For dinner food service will be putting out another fabulous spread — a Pig Roast! (the turf part of the surf & turf) and finally to end the weekend, there will be a concert for everyone in Oller. The concert will feature Damascus and is scheduled to begin at 8:15 p.m.

As you can see the Springfest Committee is working hard to make this weekend one of the best.

$28K Grant Awarded to JC

Juniata College has been awarded an unrestricted operating grant of $28 thousand from the Household International Committee for Gifts to Higher Education.

The funds, which have been committed to the support of Juniata College economics and business programs, will be payable to the institution in increments of $5 thousand over a four year period. Approximately thirty percent of Juniata students presently major in economics and business.

In commenting on the grant to Juniata, Norman Ridley, Director of Philanthropic Service for Household International said, "We appreciate the significant contribution Juniata College is making as it permits increasing interest in economic issues through its undergraduate curriculum. We commend you for your many faceted involvements with the business community."

Economics and busines majors represent the largest single concentration of students at Juniata and reflect an increase of more than one hundred percent in student interest in the last decade.

Greetings from V103's Programming Department! As Program Director, one of our responsibilities is to keep campus and community announcements in the broadcast booth for our disc jockeys to use during their shows. I believe it is one of V103's obligations to not only play the best of new and old rock and roll, but also to alert students as to the activities and events pertainant to their college lives.

Many students, administrators, and faculty have used V103 as an information tool-an action that benefits both of our organizations. For you, it is "free advertising". For us, it gives our announcers a greater variety of subjects to discuss on the air.

We would be pleased to announce anything from special events such as Spring Fling weekend or graduation updates to everyday information such as your organization's meeting schedule or cancelled classes.

I encourage anyone in the college community to use V103's services and, please, if you have any questions, feel free to drop me a line at V103, Box 1005. Finally, when sending an announcement, please include all important information. Place all announcements in the announcement envelope directly in front of the main door. Thanks from the Music Department - Matt Varner and John Morturano have sent out and collected the marketing research surveys and the results are being tabulated. It looks like V103 may be in for some slight changes. The results and recommendations will be in soon.

Also, John and Assistant Music Director Jef Buehler are looking for interested people to be on a music staff. They will be organizing the staff very soon. Interested people, leave a message in the station lobby.

For all of us at THE ONE THAT ROCKS, I look forward to hearing from you!

R.A.'s are Selected

After a rigorous multi-phased process, the Resident Assistants for the 1987-88 academic year have been selected. Placement for the new staff will not be announced until after room draw. Congratulations are in order for Juniata's newest RA staff:

Centerboard presents Laff-Off

By Pam Greenauer

For the first time on Juniata's campus, Centerboard's Lecture Committee will present "The Great Laff-Off", a contest of quick minds, sharp wits, and verbal mudslinging. It will be staged in Ellis Ballroom Thursday, April 23 at 8:15 p.m.

The Greater Talent Network of New York City are sending three of their hotest new comedians—Mike Reynolds, Eric Kornfeld, and Bill Keller. Each of these comedians has a very funny track record, performing at such places as The Comic Strip in New York City and Ft. Lauderdale, The Improv, The Comedy Factory Outlet in Philly, and Catch a Rising Star in New York City.

Tables and chairs will be set up in the Ballroom to give it a Cabaret/nightculb atmosphere and waitresses will be coming around to serve free nachos and cheese and other munchies. Tickets are priced at a phenomenally low $3.00, and are on sale now at the Information Desk.

A reminder from the Kennedy Sports Center:

You are required to carry the shoes which you plan to exercise in, into the gym. The security guard on duty is required to not permit you into the center unless you are carrying your activity shoes.

Party in the pool!!

Any college club or organization is welcome to use the Binder Natatoruim for group activities. If you would like to reserve the pool, please contact Brad Small, ext. 515, or stop by his office in the Kennedy Sports + Recreation Center.

Student of The Week

By Lisa Clapper

Juniata is not known for its politically active students, however, Juniata Senior Bill Diana has been in several rallies against President Reagan's policies in Central America and demonstrations against Apartheid throughout the Washington D.C. area.

Diana, a Political Science student from Bellmeade, New Jersey, attended Rutgers University, but transfered to Juniata in 1985. The time he spent at Rutgers aroused Bill's polical and moral conscience which inspired him to become active in the demonstrations at the university.

Bill remembered that the Black students at Rutgers were the students who were concerned with South Africa, because Rutgers had stock holdings in South Africa from 1974 until 1985. He stated, "The Blacks stirred up interest on the Rutgers campus to propagate the cause of the stock holdings in South Africa."

Bill has participated in such demonstrations as the April 20, 1985 March on Washington, a demonstration against President Reagan's policies in Central America and Apartheid, held in Washington and the Candlelight Vidual for Apartheid held last October here at Juniata. He has made plans to attend a rally in Washington D.C. on April 25.

Diana's main interest in South Africa and Central America is the fact that large corporations exploit their Black workers. The large companies sometimes pay as little as $.25 per hour to the workers. This way, the corporations avoid union struggles and safe working conditions.

Bill also stated, "There is a Civil War to change the society in Central America. It's the same thing there that is happening in South Africa. The same corporations are taking advantage of the cheap labor."

With his graduation approaching quickly, Bill is not sure what his immediate plans will be, but he is positive he will contine to be involved with the politics of Central America as well as South Africa.

Monopoly

the properties of The World's Largest Monopoly Gameboard, only half lettered, began to dry overnight.

By some miracle, the property titles were finished on Saturday morning. Personal reasons kept me from attending these last minute preparations and so I will never know what secrets Phi Chi Theta possess for finishing collossal jobs like lettering over half a mile of sidewalk so early on a weekend. Perhaps this is why I'm not a business major. Neverless, the job was done at 10 a.m. and Mrs. Neff cerimoniously cast the 2 by 2 foot, foam rubber dice upon Detwiler Plaze, sending the Juniors' horse to the unfair devises of 'Income Tax, pay 10% or $200.'

The completed board measured 938 by 765 feet and this was undoubtedly a tiring walk for the various team members, especially the freshmen who had to tow a 10 foot paper mache sneaker. I had the good fortune of driving the sophomore piece, and will go down in Juniata history doubly as a participant and as one of the only students to 'drive a motor vehicle upon the sidewalk', an action which the Pathfinder expressly prohibits. The other guys on wheels were the seniors, who had a couple of wheelbarrows from Murphy's, and the faculty team which traveled under basset hound power.

Someone must have been smiling on the freshmen for all their efforts because they gained a monopoly on Boardwalk and Parkplace about noontime and hung on to these to win the game by 3:30. They towed their winning sneaker down to South's lot and butchered it.

All in all, it was a good day. Over $1000 had been raised for Huntingdon House/United Way. Juniata received TV and AP/UPI coverage and I learned how to drive a stick shift. Sunday, the rain washed away all but the traces of Juniata's Largest Game of Monopoly, but the Guiness Book, this newspaper, and our personal experiences remain; stronger than mere paint on a sidewalk. And someday, when your child goes to Juniata and asks, "What did you do when you went to Juniata?", you can tell him that you WERE THERE.

Beard Is Featured May Day Speaker

By Laurie Dobbins

Spring has arrived and with that comes the annual May Day breakfast at Juniata College. Following tradition, Friday May 1, at 7 a.m. the women of the college will gather in Baker Refactory for a semi-formal breakfast to honor the women of Juniata. This will be served by a select group of male students.

This year the theme is "The greatest love of all" and it will be addressed in a speech by Sandra Beard, a 1984 Juniata graduate and the new business professor.

The menu includes, juice, melonballs, fresh strawberry crepes, country fresh scrambled eggs, bacon and piping hot homemade muffins.

Sign-ups for tables of 3 and 7 will be held April 20-22 in Ellis lobby during lunch and dinner. There will be no cost to those on the meal plan and a $3.00 charge for those who reside off campus. At this time male students will also have the opportunities to sign up to be waiters.

May Day probises to be an enjoyable event for all who attend.

CASE Sponsors Annual Punchbowl

By Linda Selcher

Move over Pat Sajack. Move over Bob Barker. Move over Vanna White. The Mystery Emcee has arrived. He or she will be on campus for the annual Punchbowl Game Show on Tuesday, April 21st at 4 P.M. in Tote.

Punchbowl is the Juniata campus game show, sponsored by CASE(Communittee on Alcohol Study and Education). Questions are based on everyone's favorite subject-alcohol. These questions include "What detrimental effect does alcohol have on sex?" (it dulls sensations and physical arousal) and "Approximately, what percentage of college students drink alcoholic beverages?" (75%)

The prizes are unique opportunities to see Juniata faculty and staff as you've never seen them before: a Mexican dinner with "Taco" Bill Huston, boating with Bill Berrier, water skiing with Randy Deike, dinner with Jim Donaldson, Dr. Lakso's famous Finnish Bread, golf with Arnie Tilden, candellight dinner with Nurse Jane Brown, sailing with Andy Murry and a tanning bed session at Shear Artistry. Teams of four can be registered with Student Services or your Resident Assistant.

We're looking for concerned, special, caring persons. . .

To serve as Peer Advisors for the 1987-88 year.

ARE YOU: . . .interested in helping in-coming freshmen make the transition?

. . .willing to share your time, talent and energies?

. . .thinking about getting involved and making a difference?

Pick up an application in the Counseling Office or the Student Services office.

We Need You!!!

SAD? MAD? FRUSTRATED? HELPLESS?. . .

Girls Softball Team In Full Swing; Play St. Francis, F & M, Wilkes

After being out of action for several days because of inclement weather, the Lady Indians got back into their season having faced St. Francis, Franklin and Marshall and Wilkes this past week. With a record of 5-7, the girls look to get back into the MAC standings with seven games in the next two weeks.

St. Francis made their second trip to Juniata only to return to nearby Loretto with two more losses. The Indians were led by the offensive attack of Beth Higgins (3-4, 2RBI'S), Amy Oiler (2-5, 5RBI'S) and Andi Zavod (2-3, 2 runs scored). The girls went on to win both contests, 5-1, 4-3.

In the first game, Higgins led off the fifth with a single, Emily Beach reached base on an error and with two outs Oiler singled in two runs.

In the second game Bert Goshler led off the fourth with a single, followed by consecutive singles by Zavod and Kathy Bednarczyk, to load the bases. After a passed ball, a walk and an error, Higgins doubled in two additional runs.

The defense was led by Bednarczyk, who struck out nine and limited St. Francis to numerous ground balls. A solid infield helped yeild eleven put-outs for first baseman Sue Stump.

At F&M this past Saturday, the Indian bats fell silent only able to mustard 6 hits. The Indians fell to the Diplomats, 3-4 and 6-7.

In the first game,the Indians led 3-1 after five innings,but F&M scored three runs on a wind-blown double to right-center. Bednarczyk threw a strong first game striking out six and left fielder, Oiler had a fine defensive afternoon with five put-outs.

In the night-cap, the Indians trailed 7-5 going into the seventh. A bases-loaded two out rally was stopped short and the Indians were only able to score one run.

This past Monday, against Wilkes the Indains fought back from a 0-2 loss in the first game, to take the second game 5-4 in extra innings.

In the first game, the Indians had six hits, but left ten baserunners stranded, on which two occasions the bases were loaded.

Though the girls left runners stranded in the second game, a timely single by Bednarczyk in the bottom of the ninth gave the Indians the victory.

Higgins led off the ninth with a single, Kirsten Grell was hit by a pitch and Beach laid down a perfect bunt for a single and to load the bases. Bednarczyk then singled to right center for the game winning hit.

The Lady Indians faced Messiah yesterday and their next home game is Wed. April 22 vs. York.

Links Action

This year's golf team opened up its season in the last week of March at the Susquehanna Tournament placing third by defeating Western Maryland. Leading the team this year is Senior Captain Jim Armstrong, who has benn playing well going into the voctory over Lycoming at his home course near Williamsport. The second spot belongs to Jr. Rick "Rocky" Sharpe, an exchange student from England. Sharpe, probably the most fundamentally sound golfer onthe team, is improving steadily over the season and looks fowards to a competitive M.A.C. tournament

The rest of the team includes Soph. Tim Garvin, Sr. veterans Chris Thompson and Steve Hearns. Soph. first year players include Joe Yalch, Chris Davis and Fr. Jeff Bertram

The experience of two returning letter winners Armstrong and Garvin could be valuable in key matches coming in the end of April. This year's team could prove a threat in the M.A.C's in the next few weeks.

Indians In First Split With Dickinson

This past Saturday the Indains traveled to Carlisle to face the Dickinson Red Devils in a battle of the MAC Northwest division leaders. Going into the doubleheader, the teams were tied in first place, and when it was over no one had gained any ground as the teams split two extra inning games.

The first game was highlighted by the hitting of Mike Culver and Dan Webb. Webb was 3 for 4 with a homer and 3 RBI's, and Culver had 2 hits including a homerun.

Tom Kelly, the Indians ace pitcher, pitched six innings, giving up only 2 earned runs, but 2 unearned runs were also given up.

Kelly was relieved in the sixth by the Indian stopper Eddie Fee. Fee got out of the inning with the score tied at four. After a scoreless 7th inning, Dickinson won the game in the bottom of the 8th on a groundball up the middle.

After regrouping, Juniata turned their fortunes around in a 7 to 6 extra inning game. Dan Webb again provided the herorics with a towering homerun to right centerfield to win the game in the 8th. George Zanic and Vic Huber also helped out in the offensive department, with Zanic having 3 RBI's and Huber ripping 4 hits.

Sean Filliben got the win in relief after pitching 2 scoreless Innings, and relieving Kurt Spiess, Kurt Wenrich and Vince Anselmo. The win kept the Indians in a first place tie at 4 wins and 2 losses in the MAC.

On Monday the indians played a non-division game against the MAC Champions, the Gettysburg Bullets. Juniata got off to a rocky start giving the Bullets 6 runs in the first four innings, but in the fifth inning the Indian bats went to work and scored 11 unanswered runs in the next 3 innings, highlighted by the towering homerun by Mike Culver.

Frank Briner was the Indians winner geting outstanding relief work from Wenrich and Fee.

Wenrich helped his own cause with a two runs scored single in the eight to put his former Gettysburg teamates out of contention. Gettysburg scored 2 runs in the 9th to make the score 11 to 8, but once again Ed Fee came into to stop the rally.

The Indians now 7-8 overall played Western Maryland yesterday and play Wilkes in a division doubleheader Saturday a 1:00.

Rugby Tourney

Juniata's Men's Rugby Club hosted their first Annual Rugby Invitational Tournament on Saturday. Players from Allegheny, Altoona and Westmoreland attended. The first match squared Juniata off with the Altoona Men's Club. Altoona won 7-6. The day continued with Allegheny and Westmoreland.

Juniata improved their day with a victory against Allegheny. The men played a strong game to earn their first victory of the season.

Westmoreland dominated the tournament with a second win against Altoona 23-0 to finish the day.

Tri-captains, Dave Bates, Steve Magley and Irv Evans, along with match Secretary Steve Dumars led the male ruggers. They began their season with away matches against West Virginia, I.U.P., and U.P.J.

Last Saturday, weather conditions interferred with the game when they traveled to I.U.P and lost 11-4.

The team is looking foward to their match against Allegheny to finish their season.

- Approved February 4, 1987 by the New York State Education Department for the purpose of conducting a clinical clerkship program in New York teaching hospitals.
- St. George's received a similar approval in 1985 from the New Jersey Board of Medical Examiners; this establishes St. George's as the only foreign medical school with instruction in English that has state-approved campuses in both New York and New Jersey.
- Over 700 students have transferred to U.S. medical schools. St. George's has graduated over 1,000 physicians:
  They are licensed in 39 states;
  They hold faculty positions in 20 U.S. medical schools—25% have been Chief Residents in 119 U.S. hospitals (according to a 1986 survey).
- St. George's is entering its second decade of medical education. In the first decade, we were cited by The Journal of the American Medical Association (January 1985) as ranking number one of all major foreign medical schools in the initial pass rate on the ECFMG exam.
- St. George's is one of the few foreign medical schools whose students qualify for Guaranteed Student Loans. Our students also qualify for the PLUS/ALAS loans and, under certain conditions, VA loans. St. George's grants a limited number of loans and scholarships to entering students.

Vol. XXXVIII, No. 22 | Juniata College — Huntingdon, Pa. 16652 | April 30, 1987

Knox Heads Improvement Project

Juniata College announced an ambitious and far-reaching program of development for its athletic facilities, and named Chuch Knox, head coach of the Seattle Seahawks Professional Football Team and a Juniata graduate, honorary chairman of the project.

The facilities improvement project will include the construction of a new stadium structure at the College Field, with seating for approximately 2,500 for football and track; resurfacing of the Jefford Oller ruuning track with an all-weather composition material; major improvements for memorial gymnasium and the Raffensperger tennis courts; and an athletic facilities maintenance endowment of $250,000. Total estimated cost of the project is $1 million.

Chuck Knox, who graduated from Juniata in 1954, has served the College in a variety of capacities prior to accepting this present responsibility. He serves on the Juniata board of Trustees and served as alumni gifts chairman of the Sports+Recreation Center phase of the Century II Campaign. He was also the featured speaker at the dedication of that facility at which time he was awarded an honorary doctor of laws degree.

In 1974, Knox, who is recognized as one of the finest coaches in professional football today, became the youngest alumnus to be presented with Juniata's Alumni Achievement Award.

A task force chaired by Henry H. Gibbel, executive vice-president and director of the Lititz Mutual Insurance Company, conducted a background study of the need for a facilities improvement.

Working with an ad hoc committee composed of Juniata athletic director William Berrier, assistant athletic director Bradley Small, director of physical plant Jack Linetty and William Alexander, vice-president for financial affairs. An in-depth study was conducted and preliminary recommendations were brought to the Executuve Committe of the Board of Trustees in February of this year. Approval was given at the April board meeting after the Committee on College Advancement recommended approval of both the facilities development project and the fund raising plan.

Stadium plans provide for the construction of a galvanized I-beam understructure convered by closed deck aluminum planking, with seating for approximately 2,500. a press box would be an integral part of the bleacher design with seating on one level and with an open-air but covered filming platform located on top. According to the plans, the I-beam construction will permit the placement of new concession stands, restrooms, and officials room beneath the stands. The portable bleachers presently used at the field would be reassigned to provide seating at the other athletic contests on campus.

The track, which will be six lanes wide, will be resurfaced with an all-weather material, using the present asphalt track as a base. A four foot high fence will be constructed around the outside perimeter of the track and an asphalt pedestrian walkway will be constructed around the entire track.

In a status report presented to the Board, it was stressed that the stadium/track priority needs had been established during tow years of study and needed to be pursued. It also stressed, however, the recognition of other priorites, including endowment for scholarships, academic program and faculty development and a need for a communication/fine arts facility.

J.C. Staff Honored For Ten Years Service

Five members of the Juniata College staff were honored recently for 10 years of serivce during the annual Founders Day Tea marking the 111th anniversary of the college's founding.

Those honored at the tea, which was attended by college employees with 10 or more service were: Caroyln C. English, receptionist and PBX operator; Edward F. Kaminsky, associate professor of economics and business administration; John V. Linetty, director of the physical plant; Lee M. Park, bookstore assistant; and Dr. Arnold J. Tilden, Jr., vice president for educational planning and student services.

A graduate of Huntingdon Area High School, English is a member of the Stone Church of the Brethren. Prior to coming to Juniata, she worked as a teacher's aide at the Alfarata Elmentary School for three years and as a secretary at Swigart Associates for ten years. She is a resident of Huntingdon.

Also a resident of Huntingdon, Kaminsky is a cum laude graduate of King's College and holds an M.B.A. degree from Wilkes College. The Shenandoah native joined the faculty as an assistant professor in 1977. He has taught at the Unversity of Scranton, and worked with the accounting firm of Laventhon and Horwath, Wilkes Barre, and Touche, Ross and Company, Philadelphia.

Linetty, a graduate of Mt. Carmel High School, recieved his B.S. degree in education and his M.S.Ed. in school administration and student personnel both from Bucknell University. Prior to joining the Juniata administration, Linetty served as assistant director of housing and director of off-campus programing at West Virginia Wesleyan College. He began his employment at Juniata as director of housing/security and assistant ean of student services. In 1984, he was appointed to his current position as director of the physical plant. He is a resident of Huntingdon.

Park is a graduate of Mt. Union High School. She is a member of Bowman's Chapel Methodist Church, treasurer of the Big Brother, Big Sister Steering Committee

Editorial

As the budding trees and blooming flowers mark the beginning of a season, the time of year marks the end of an era. The class of 1987 has been a part of Juniata College for the past four years. They have experienced changes in them selves and have witnessed changes in Juniata. Faculty and administrators have contributed to their growth of intellect and independence. Socially, they have developed through friendships and relationships with peers.

It seems to be appropriate to pay tribute to the diversity of the senior class in this last issue of the Juniatian. Each and every organization on this campus benefitted from the participation of members of the Class of 1987, and for that, Juaniata has also grown and developed.

The Spring Fling events of last weekend successfully culminated the many social events which they have been a part. Despite the sadness in the absence of Raft Regatta, the seniors made the most of the sunny day (Huntingdon style) and wrote the final chapter in their book of special events as Juniata students.

Congratulations and good luck to the graduating class!

Letters to the Editor

Thanks From John C. Trever

Dear Juniatians,

It has been a joy as well as a challenge and honor to be the J. Omar Good Professor among you this year. The location of the college in this beautiful part of the great state of Pennsylvania has been a delight to experience along with the many friendly and beautiful people we have had the pleasure of meeting and with whom I have worked. My wife, Elizabeth, joins me in these sentiments.

I recall that shortly after we arrived here last August 1, I felt it was necessary to defend my interpretation of the word "evangelical" in my title in this area more than I have elsewhere. I take the meaning of the word from Jesus (see Mark 1:14) and not from Paul (see Mark 1:1) as many Christians seem to do in this area and throughout the "Bible-belt." I am reminded of Hartzell Spence's definition of a "preacher"- "The job of a preacher is to comfort the disturbed and to disturb the comfortable." I have found it more important to do the latter (as Jesus did) rather than the former (as Paul usually did). Anyway, it has been an exciting year here at Juniata College.

Before I leave these hallowed halls, however, I would like to say two things to each and every student at Juniata: 1) Please remind yourself each morning: I am here to get a sound education. Every course is "grist for my mill" (as one professor said to me during my college days whenever I complained about some course), and I must attend every session of every course and learn all I can from it. College is a privilege!

That leads to point 2): PLEASE stop worrying about grades! If you make class attendance a top priority along with doing your assignments faithfully and promptly, the grades will take care of themselves. These two are concerns about Juniata students that have bothered me all year.

You are all wonderful young people, and our world is counting on the best from each of you. I would urge all of you to make a vow that you always will try to be a part of solutions to problems, rather than being part of the problems of this wonderful planet on which we are priveledged to live.

Peace!

John C. Trever

Dear Juniatians,

Part of my responsibility as the J. Omar Good Professor has been the opportunity to continue my research on the famed Dead Sea Scrolls which it was my privelege to bring to the attention of the world thirty-nine years ago April 11. I wrote that first news release on March 17, 1948.

All year I have been struggling to communicate the results of a new discovery from the Scrolls that seems to be very relevant to these critical times in which we live as a result of the discovery of nuclear power.

The Qumran Community that produced the 600 Scrolls found in eleven caves around Khirbet Qumran by the Dead Sea, we now know existed in that desert wilderness from about 140 B.C. to A.D. 68, when it was dispersed by the roman legions. It has proved to be a 200 year experiment in eschatology (thoughts about end-time) that failed 1900 years ago. The men of Qumran lived in daily expectation of the final drama of human history when evil would be wiped out and God's kingdom would arrive. It did not happen, and their faith was dashed. Why?

From the Scrolls we learn that they failed to interpret Scripture correctly, even though they believed that God had inspired their Teacher to give the correct meaning! Now, millions of Christians are being taught that your generation will see end-time before the year 2000! That destruction will be by fire-nuclear explosions! So they interpret the Book of Revelation in the Bible and the "little Apocalypse" (Mark 13, etc.), using the same method as the Teacher of Qumran!

If we read the Bible with care, we learn in the Prologue of Genesis (8:21-22, after the flood) that God promised "never again" to destroy all evil and start over, as with Noah. Ninety-five percent of the Bible is devoted to what God would do, and still is doing- redeeming evil people, so they will do what God created them to do! Our Creator is counting on every one of us. That means YOU!

Copies of my two papers, "New Hope for Planet Earth" and "Stretch you Imagination" are on file at the J. Omar Good office and the Beeghly Library if you wish to study my concerns further. It is your future that is at stake!

I suggest we all focus on NEW BEGINNINGS- not end-time!

Yours with HOPE for a CREATIVE future,

John C. Trever

A Class' Opinion

Dear Editor;

The Human Sexuality class would like to respond to the editorial on the topic of surrogate motherhood written by Alex Jones that appeared in the April 16, 1987 issue of The Juniatian. The class has discussed Mr. Jones' opinions at some length, and we find ourselves disagreeing with most of what he has to say. The specific areas of disagreement are presented below.

The first concern raised by Mr. Jones is the negative impact that surrogate motherhood may have on the child who is born as a result of a surrogacy agreement. Mr. Jones states that Baby M. will ". . .come to realize that she was conceived to be sold" and that "She may grow to wonder about her value as a child against her value as a commodity." It is the opinion of this class that a loving family environment will negate any such adverse effects. We believe that the childhood experiences of Baby M. will be similar to those of adopted children, and that there is every reason to expect that she will mature into a psychologically healthy adult with a clear understanding of her with as a person.

A second issue addressed by Mr. Jones concerns the validity of the surrogacy contract. Mr. Jones states, "It is my opinion that any contract stipulating the terms of the sale of a child should be deemed null and void because in our society, baby-selling is illegal." It is with this statement that Mr. Jones reveals his lack of true understanding of the legal issues involved in the Baby M. case. Judge Sorkow, in his decision, noted that one cannot buy what one already owns. Since William Stern was Baby M's biological father, it is legally impossible for him to buy his own daughter. Thus, the contractual agreement between Mary Beth Whitehead and the Sterns cannot be deemed an instance of baby selling. The surrogacy contract is best viewed as an agreement on the part of Ms. Whitehead to provide a service, the conception, gestation, and birth of a child, in exchange for a $17,500 monetary fee. When viewed in this light, there is no legal justification for declaring such contracts null and void.

Mr. Jones' concern that Ms. Whitehead's other children will grow to fear that they will also be sold appears to be too ludicrous to address seriously. However, his recognition of ". . .the natural mother's inborn affection fov her child" deserves serious consideration. While we recognize that many women become psychologically attached to their unborn children, we do not believe that this attachment, in and of itself, represents sufficient cause for the cancellation of a surrogacy contract. Rather, we believe that any woman considering serving as a surrogate mother needs to assess the personal emotional impact of surrendering a child that she has carried for nine months. Those women who believe that they may become so attached to the child that they would be unable to give it up should not become surrogate mothers. In the Baby M. case specifically, Ms. Whitehead already had children and, therefore, she should have been aware of the possible negative emotional consequences of agreeing to relinquish Baby M. to the Sterns. We believe that Ms. Whitehead rationally, and with due consideration of the possible consequences of her actions, agreed to serve as a surrogate mother for the Sterns, and that she is legally and morally required to give custody of Baby M. to the Sterns.

Mr. Jones continues his editorial by implying that, because Ms. Whitehead wants to keep her baby, the fee offered Ms. Whitehead by the Sterns and the legal actions undertaken by them to obtain custody of Baby M. represent "material exploitation" of a less wealthy person by a couple with high socioeconomic status. The underlying logic of this argument is not clearly stated in the editorial, but it is the impression of the class that Mr. Jones is somehow trying to say that Ms. Whitehead is being pressured in some way to give up Baby M. We assume that this pressure is economically based. Provided that we have interpreted Mr. Jones' implications correctly, we fail to see the economic pressures which Mr. Jones alleges exist. In fact, it is possible to argue that the "victims" in this case are the Sterns, and that it is Ms. Whitehead who has taken advantage of them by not giving them the child they so desparately want.

The last major point Mr. Jones makes in his editorial is that adoption should be preferred over surrogate motherhood in part because adoption provides a "secure and acceptable home" and in part because the narcissistic and egotistical desire of men to have children that are genetically related to themselves is somehow detrimental to the best interests of these children. In response to this we would first like to say that we see no reason to believe that a couple who raises a child born of a surrogate mother would not provide just as secure and acceptable a home as a couple who rasies a child. Second, assuming that the desire to have children genetically related to oneself is narcissistic and egotistical (an assumption which we question), it would seem that the father of a child born of a surrogate mother might be a better father than the father of an adopted child since the former has a gneetic stake in the welfare of the child. Finally, on the practical side, Mr. Jones fails to realize that adoption is often a more difficult process than obtaining a baby through a surrogate motherhood arrangement. Most couples prefer to adopt a newborn baby over a child that is two or three years old. Unfortunately, it is often the case that it is impossible to adopt a newborn baby, and when it is possible, the list of those wanting to adopt a newborn infant is so long that a couple may have to wait years before a newborn is available for adoption. Surrogate motherhood has the advantage of a couple obtaining a newborn infant in a relatively short period of time.

Mr. Jones concludes his editorial by stating that "surrogate motherhood should be outlawed." We believe that this is not a legitimate solution to the problems associated with surrogate motherhood. We recommend that guidelines be developed regarding the kind of contractual agreements that couples and potential surrogate mothers seek out and communicate with ohter women who have experienced surrogate mothering in order to become more aware of the possible negative aspects of bearing a child for someone else. As we view the issue of present, surrogate mothering is not a type of baby selling. It represents a possible solution to the problem of infertility for some childless couples. To outlaw surrogate motherhood without clear evidence of it harming either the surrogate mother, the child, or the childless couple would be, we believe, an unjustifiable restriction of liberty.

PROCRASTINATION!!! A word that is not unfamiliar to most of us. We are all guilty from time to time of engaging in procrastination. Unfortunately, as college students, it can be dangerous to your academic health.

Wayne Dyer, author of The Sky's the Limit and Your Erroneous Zone defines procrastination as the "art of keeping up with yesterday and avoiding today."

Simply stated, procrastination is habitually putting off a task, most likely something we do not want to do, until some other time. In many cases, the postponing or putting off brings about negative consequences. If procrastination gets us in trouble, we need to do something about it. Remember, it is a learned behavior and it can therefore be unlearned.

There is a maxim known as Parkinson's Law that helps to explain why many of us tend to put things off. Parkinson's Law states that work expands to fill the time available for its completion. By way of example, if you have all day to complete a task, chances are it will take you all day. On the other hand, if you set some limits and say you are going to finish by noon, you will probably be able to do it within that time frame.

For many college students procrastination is generally a behavior that is often-times reinforced positively. Consider the following scenarios. John puts off studying for an exam until the last minute and then pulls an "all-nighter". Ann waits until the night before a paper is due and, she too, spends all night writing and typing. Both got satisfactory grades and thus the procrastination is rewarded. The main concern that is raised has to do with how much better they would have done had they given themselves more time.

To deal move effectively with procrastination, Dr. Sandra Davis, an industrial psychologist, suggests that we examine when we procrastinate and under what circumstances. Is there a theme or a pattern to our procrastinating? What are the consequences of proscratination?

Jane Burka and Lenora Yuen, co-authors of the book Procrastination, make the following points toward coming to grips with procrastination:

* Ask yourself what it is that you do instead of tending to the task at hand. What excuses do you use? What do you say to yourself?
* Since most of us postpone or put off unpleasant tasks, they suggest that we take care of those tasks first and get them out of the way.
* Reward yourself for having completed an unpleasant task. (You have heard this many times before from yours truly.)
* Oftentimes difficult tasks seem to be overwhelming and thus it is hard to get started on them. Break the overall task down into smaller, manageable parts and then spend a specified amount of time everyday on the smaller sub-tasks.

An Editor's Response

Let me start this response to the letter to the editor written by Ronald McLaughlin and his Human Sexuality class by thanking them for paying such close attention both to my editorial about surrogate motherhood and to this very important topic itself.

In this reply, I wish to both expand upon and defend my point of view.

First, I would like to address the second point presented by the class. They write that "Judge Sorkow, in his decision, ruled that one cannot buy what one already owns," in reference to Baby M. It is my opinion that William Stern does not "own" Baby M.

Mary Beth Whitehead does not "own" Baby M. Indeed, ownership is not the issue in this case; it is the right to parenthood that is in question.

the class goes on to declare that "the surrogacy contract is best viewed as an agreement on the part of Mrs. Whitehead to provide a service, the conception, gestation, and birth of a child, in exchange for a $17,500 monetary fee." In my opinion, this "service" is the prostituion of her genetic material, and this prostitution should be made illegal.

Next, I would like to address the issue of "material exploitation." Those who carefully followed the Baby M. case realize that Mrs. Whitehead was faced with the loss of her home during the lawsuit. Speculations were made that Mrs. Whitehead tried to fund her debts by undertaking the role of a surrogate mother. A reasonable inference that can be made form this situation is that women who cannot support themselves may now find pregancy as a viable employment alternative.

I understand that adoption can ba a time-consuming method of "obtaining a newborn infant." The class writes that "it would seem that the father of a child born of a surrogate mother might be a better father than the father of an adopted child since the former has a genetic stake in the welfare of the

Racism

Dear Editor,

I write this in reply to your editorial of April 16, 1987.

Mireille Tshiteya was indeed right to complain about the unfair treatment to which she was subjected and she is certainly to be commended for her mature response to immature behavior.

I do not commend, however, your message to the perpetrators. You told them to "get out". Is this the spirit of Martin Luther King, Jr., the man whose dream you spoke of?

Dr. King spent his life working towards the goal of the beloved community. His message was a message of good will, not antagonism. He wanted to transform bitterness and hatred into love and compassion. Would he have told the students we are talking about to "get out"? I don't think so. Dr. King would have condemned the sin, not the sinners.

Let me make an understatement: Juniata College is not Utopia. We will not make it so by tossing out a handful of racists. What we must do is open our eyes to the problems around us, reach out to each other with open hands instead of closed fists, and march forward in the name of love life's rocky path.

Wayfarer's Journal

BY Joey Bard

I was asked to write a few words about the Juniata Exchange Program and about the program in Lille. This isn't exactly how I had planned on spending my Sunday evening but I guess this won't be the last time I spend a Sunday night doing work for Juniata that I don't feel like doing.

Let's see . . . I guess that I should introduce myself for those of you who don't know me, my name is Joey Bard . . . I'm female . . . I am hopefully majoring in accounting/financing (that story renmains to be told) and I am spending my Junior year in Lille, France at a private university named Ieseg Institute d'Econemic Scientifique et de Gestion.

Well, I can start out this petite histoire by telling you that I studied French for just a little over a year at Juniata. Therefore, it goes without saying that things were really tough for me at the beginning to be frank, after the first two months here I wanted to go home in a BIG way! I was scared about my classes, my grades, amd my social life? . . . there was no social life. I was bumming. But long about November, a friendly visitor arrived to explain to me that I didn't have to do everything alone. Buff showed me where to get help when I had a problem or when I just wanted someone to talk (cry) to. I guess that I had made the mistake of trying to be too independent.

I don't know exactly when or what even rally happened, but I know that things got better. Maybe it was the vacation that I spent in Greece. I can actually understand my classes. I've even made a couple of friends with whom I skied in the Alpes with during the break in February. (Eat your hearts out!)

All of the above sounds like a fairy tale . . . "and they all live happily ever after". I'm not going to paint that rosey picture and tell everybody that is considering a year abroad that they should go. I don't think that this "experience" is for everyone. I said that things are a lot better, which they are, but it took more strength and will power than I thought I had in me. There were some days that I didn't even want to get out of bed to face a French-speaking person. And I don't mind telling you that I cried myself to sleep because I miss my family, friends and even Juniata. Please don't get me wrong because actually I think all of my troubles were part of the whole scheme of adjusting to the "new world".

I'm not trying to discourage anyone from coming to France. I've found the program both here and at home to be supportive of the exchange students. The directors of IESEG are very friendly. They even helped us in vacation planning, etc. And to be honest, even though I'll be very happy to set foot on home "turf", I'm glad that I'm here and that I have seen and done even half of the things that I have hone. I feel very fortunate. But everyone else will tell you that it can be good so that you can make the right decision. What is the Exchange Program? It is a challenge. As two friends that I met in Greece said to me when they found out what I was doing, "some people are brave, others are stupid."

Brave? Stupid? . . . Go for it!!

The annual V103 Spring Seminar/All Staff Picnic was held on Sunday April 26, at 1 p.m. in South's Rebel Den. The event featured professionals from the radio industry. The list included Paul Cileberto, a professional DJ/emcee with Fling-A-Things Inc. and WARM in Wilkes Barre. Dan McMorkle, the daytime DJ with WRLR in Huntingdon, also took part along with some of his associates in Huntingdon and in State College. The seminar began at 1 p.m. with a discussion period while "picnic activities" continued through the afternoon. Overall we were pleased by a very informative and enjoyable session. All V103 Staff members were welcome to attend and the sign up list was in the station lobby.

DJ applications for the Fall Semester 1987 are in the mail. The applications must be submitted in the station lobby by Tuesday, April 28. Anyone on the staff who did not receive a form, please contact Terri Smith or Dave Fouse. DJs interested in doing a speciality show may sign up in the lobby now.

Any student interested in becoming a DJ next year or interested in becoming involved with one of the station's departments may leave a note expressing your interest in Box 1005 or bring it to the radio station. The departments include News, Business, Promotion, Programming, Engineering, Production, Sports, and Public Service Announcements. All those interested are welcome!

Wayfarer's Boyfriend's Journal

The Trials and Tribulations of a Wayfarer's Boyfriend

It is another Friday night, and I am sitting in my rather messy room with my bag of half burnt microwave popcorn and my trusty four foot stuffed grasshopper Fred, watching "Vice" (Fred likes Don Johnson). This, for me, is an exciting weekend.

For most of us wayfarer spouses, this is a fun evening . . . well, I exaggerate. We all do something to help us get through the weeks, months, years!

Why just the other weekend was a big one when I and a few others watched movies for 6 p.m. to 6 a.m. and taste tested some of the finer brands of Pepsi.

Hey, but I look at it this way. Everytime I look out my window and see a tree I think, 'It could be worse. I could be living in Oakland right now.'

A lot of my health conscious friends say that I should get out and go do some weightlifting to get rid of some of my sexual tension. I keep telling them that ever since my girlfriend left, I do weight lift . . . Yes, you guessed it- 12 ounces at a time. At least it keeps me poor and out of trouble.

But you have to understand, it gets kind of hard for us wayfarer spouses, especially when things like the other night happen to you.

The other night I wound up calling my Grandma, Aunt Sue, went and talked to Eric, and then to Mack and all because my emotional support sustem was too busy to talk to me on the phone.

I mean, things are pretty bad when you have to get your hugs from a four foot stuffed grasshopper. When the only snuggles you get are found in aisle 5 at Riverside, and the only kisses you find are at Krauss' Candy store. You know that we are really hurtin'.

But things aren't all that bad, in fact Valentine's Day was lovely this year. I sent myself three balloons and a Dedicate your Heart to Charity song- "It's Getting Better All the Time."

You have to understand, I really understand my wayfarer, especially since she is gone. Now all I have to argue with is her picture and I always win. In fact, I grew a beard as a sign of our solidarity, but I've started to shave my legs from boredom.

Now don't get me wrong. I not trying to portray us as the cold, the lonely, and the down-trodden (even though we are), we all get to have our exciting moments. Like being dragged to President Neff's Ball, and getting to go hear a Russian Poet (made mandatory for class), so who needs to go to Europe when Europe is coming here?

But the real excitement occurs when unweary Freshmen gets involved. Yes, usually the wayfarer's spouse is equipped to the hilt with all kinds of charms and garlic cloves (given by the wayfarer) to ward off sexually intising vampire Freshman.

Mind you, I have nothing against vampires . . . uh, I mean Freshman, it is just that they don't know any better and always wind up enamoured to a wayfarer's spouse and never someone who is available.

This is alway the sticky situation for us spouses because there is only so many ways of saying 'I'm sorry, but I'm already involved with someone without being insulting. I mean, you really should take the hint when you see a dozen pictures.

So, this Friday when you're going to a party and there really isn't anyone to go with, remember the wayfarer's spouse. And to all you wayfarers, remember that when you are seeing all of those sights and enjoying all that good food, remember not to neglect the person which you are an emotional support system to, and send them a post card or letter, even if you haven't written in a long time. I know that this Christopher Robbins is sure missing his Pooh Bear. Don't ask, I think it's silly too. You have to remember, wayfarers, what it is like here at Juniata and that even though they may not be writing, it is probably because they are working their buns off and not just playing loud music.

child." From this statement, are we to infer that it is conceivable that the father would not be as good a father to an adopted child? If this is the case, then the father, so "desperate" to "obtain" a child, is truly narcissistic.

In returning to the first point of the class, which states that a "loving family environment will negate any. . . adverse affects" of the child's realization that she was born to be sold, I wish to relate an incident of conversation that a young lady, who is adopted, discussed with me. She told me "One day I just started crying. I couldn't stop. I said 'Mommy, how could she do it? Why did she give me up?' " Imagine living with the pain of wondering "How could my mother sell me?"

In closing, Mr. McLaughlin and his class write "To outlaw surrogate motherhood without clear evidence of it harming either the surrogate mother, the child, or the childless couple would be, we believe, an unjustifiable restriction of liberty." Here is where the class fails to demonstrate any compassion of understanding for this case. One glance at the Baby M. case should dispel any doubt that the process of surrogate motherhood has here caused great anguish for the surrogate mother, Mary Beth Whitehead, and the childless couple, Mr. and Dr. Stern. Unfortunately, only time will tell us if the circumstances of her birth harm Baby M.

Student Of The Week

by Andrea Zavod

Meet Julie Williams, a junior, who after four POE changes is now happy with what she's studying, still is not quite sure of where she's going, byt, she says, "That's okay!"

For those who are struggling with the direction of their study, use Williams story as "one to grow on" becarse she's taking this liberal arts college literally and making the best of it, for herself.

Williams entered Juniata as an exploratory student, but she found when it came to writing her initial POE that she felt pressured into finding a "major." She chose English/Education because she always had a strong English background and she thought she liked to teach.

She found however that the education department was too structured for her liberal arts needs. She dropped the education and picked up philosophy as a passing interest, and that's all it turned out to be.

Finally, she decided that a liberal arts school was just that, and with the beginning of this year her POE now reads English/Liberal Arts. This way she is studying everything that she wants without any restrictions from any department. She's getting a wide background, and no matter what she's headed for this is what suits her best.

Another part of her education has been the opportunity to go abroad. Her first trip was to Japan, between her Freshman and Sophomore year. She taught English as a second language for ten weeks. She is also planning to spend next fall in China. She says the most important thing anyone can learn from traveling abroad is the idea that people are people no matter their customs or traditions. She recommends going abroad to anyone.

To those other college students who may be doubting their academic interests, Williams says, "Do what you feel is right for you, and realize you have the time to make the right decision. The POE is one of the outstanding qualities of Juniata, use it's benefits to their fullest extent.

"The Thing" Visits J.C.

By Carron Kahle

Paranoia sweeps an arctic community as some invisible force possesses humans and makes them kill others. No one has been able to identify it because of its ability to move from one body to the next, and to change form. Kurt Russell and his crew are charged with the task of capturing this "thing".

Be scared to death by The Thing to be shown Saturday, May 2 at 8 p.m. on Oller Lawn! It's FREE! Bring a blanket and some spare change for refreshments. The event is sponsored by S.N.A.P. in conjunction with Centerboard's Film Committee.

Russian Poet Awes Juniata Audience

by Lisa Clapper

The master performance of Russian poet Yevgeny Yevtushenko delighted a standing room only crowd in Oller Auditorium on April 22, with his mixture of wry humor, sensitive poetry and inspirational stories of human nature that proved that he is a real man who has gone through real sorrows.

Minutes after opening his performance, he exposed the audience to his very distinctive European humor and complete frankness with, "I'm a poor example to you. . .I was not successful in education. I was expelled from school. . .I wasn't successful in my personal life, because I'm three times divorced."

It was his humor and complete frankness coupled with his enthusiasum to make his performance a one-on-one experience for the audience that made the evening such a success. At one point, Yevtushenko asked if the house lights could be turned on in order to expose the faces of the audience making him feel on more of a personal basis with the audience.

Dr. Albert Todd, professor of Slavic lanuguages and literature at Queen's College of the City University of New York and constant companion of Yevtushenko during his poetry readings in the United States, accompanied Yevgeny on stage to read most of the English translations of the poetry. Yevtushenko recited the originals in Russian with a dramatic exuberance that captured the interest of the entire audience, even the non-Russian speaking, after Dr. Todd read the English translations.

Todd works with Yevtushenko to create the best possible English translations of the Russian poems, but it is the 25 years of friendship, that the two men display on stage, which helps to link the humor Yevtushenko is noted for to the stories of humanity that he writes about.

Yevtushenko incorporated the humor of his stories about his friendship with Dr. Todd with his own life experiences to make the audience feel as much a part of "Evgeny's" life as his poetry and Dr. Todd. In one of his stories, he credited professor Todd with saving his life in 1972 in St. Paul, Minnesota when the poet was attacked on stage by Ukrainian-American protestors.

Admitting he was very close to suicide at one point in his life, he wrote the depressed poem, "Last Attempt" (which was written so recently it has not been printed yet.) as a type of confession. He told the audience, "If I suffer, I need confession. . .Confession for everybody is to write sad poems. . .Almost everyone thinks of suicide; few people have the courage to say it openly and that is the difference."

Perhaps the most memorable and touching poem of the evening was about the shooting of a goose. When Yevtushenko was hunting from a boat, he observed two geese flying in the sky. He shot one of the geese, but the other remained in the sky calling for its dead brother.

So touched by the lone goose crying in the sky for his murdered partner, Yevtushenko created a poem with the grim theme of hate and rivalry. He also added, "I hate Rambo (because he is a figure of hate and rivalry)."

The performance was followed by a reception in Shoemaker where the public could meet the poet and Dr. Todd. Yevtushenko was also available to sign autographs during the reception.

Elections Held

By Sue Gulla

The annual election for Senior, Junior, and Sophomore class officer positions was held Tuesday, April 21. The number of students voting was almost 20%, which is fairly decent- compared to last year's voter turn-out.

The winners for the Class of 1988 are: President- Amy Wertz, Vice-President- Chris Kleinfelder, Secretary- Lori Dobbins, and Treasurer- Jay Moreau. The Class of 1989 are: President- Tammy Achenbach, Vice-President- Jill Crouse, Secretary- Amy Hoffman, and Treasurer- Cynthia Burgo. For the Class of 1990, the officers are: President- Sarah Yerger, Vice-President- Rick Russell, Secretary- Allison Stewart, and Treasurer- Gen Warner. Congratulations to all of the new officers.

JC Chem Papers Are Presented

This past weekend, April 25, nine senior chemistry students presented research papers at an annual ISC (Intercollegiate Student Chemists) convention held at University of Deleware, Newark, Del. Participated were M.Beck, B. Beshore, F. Dorman, S. Guest, G. Havey (exchange from Lille, France) D. Little, I. Loiselet (exchange from Lille, France), E. Olson and L. Singel. Laura Singel won the second place in "organic chemistry division I."

In addition, two junior chemists, J. Christ and K. Rieger, participated as observers, because Juniata Chem Club is going to host the next year's ISC convention. ISC convention started in 1935 and has provided a forum for undergraduate chemistry students from colleges in Mid Atlantic region to present research papers, and Juniata has been an active participant for a number of years.

Student Government Officers Are Elected

By Sue Gulla

The Juniata College Student Government recently held elections for both officers and senate members. The new officers were elected March 31: President- Amy Coursen, Vice-President- Sue Gulla, Secretary- Angie Orwig, and Treasurer- Jay Moreau, serving his second prestigious year.

The Senate was elected April 21. Each member of the senate represents their respective Residence Hall area. The new members are: Susan London, Cloister; Larry Hillman, Flory-Kline; Melinda Brandt, Long-Miller; Jodie Hafer, Lesher; Jim McMonagle, Sherwood; Doug Kramer, Terrrace; Fran Arcay, South; Kirk Altmanshofer, North-East; Alex Trotta, North-West, Paul Granger, Tussey; Ann Tinsman, Off-campus; and Sue Croyle, Private/Off-campus.

Style-A-Thon To Aid CFF

A Style-a-Thon to benefit the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation will be held at Shear Artistry Hair Salon, 1227 Moore Street in Huntingdon.

The Style-a-Thon takes place on Sunday, May 17th, from 9:00 am to 5:00 pm. Customers can get a shampoo, cut and blow dry by appointment only. The donation, which goes to CF, is $13.00 for women and $11.00 for men.

All proceeds from this event will benefit children and young adults who have cystic fibrosis, a genetic and currently incurable disease that affects the respiratory and disgestive systems. It is the number one genetic killer of young people in the nation today.

Anyone who would like more information, or who would like to make an appointment for the Style-a-Thon, should call Shear Artistry at 643-4542.

RECYCLE

Concert Year To Conclude May 5

The Juniata College Department of Music will conclude its 1986-87 concert year with a special performance featuring both the Concert Choir and the Choral Union on Tuesday evening, May 5, at 8:15 pm, in Oller Auditorium.

Highlighting the first half of the program will be a performance of Gabriel Faure's famed "Requiem" by the Choral Union. According to Dr. Joseph W. Figg, Director of Choral Activities at Juniata College and conductor of both the Concert Choir and the Choral Union, the setting of "Requiem" to be performed is considered one of the most beautiful of the much heralded work. Soloists for the performance will be Marianne Blatchley, Molly Bagwell, Valerie Schmoyer, Roy Santa Croce, and Mark Heinly. The organist will be Terry Murray.

The second half of the concert will feature the Concert Choir performing a part of the program from its recent and highly successful tour of the southern United States. Selections will include music from a wide variety of musical periods from Renaissance to Broadway.

The performance will be presented without charge, and the public is invited and encouraged to attend.

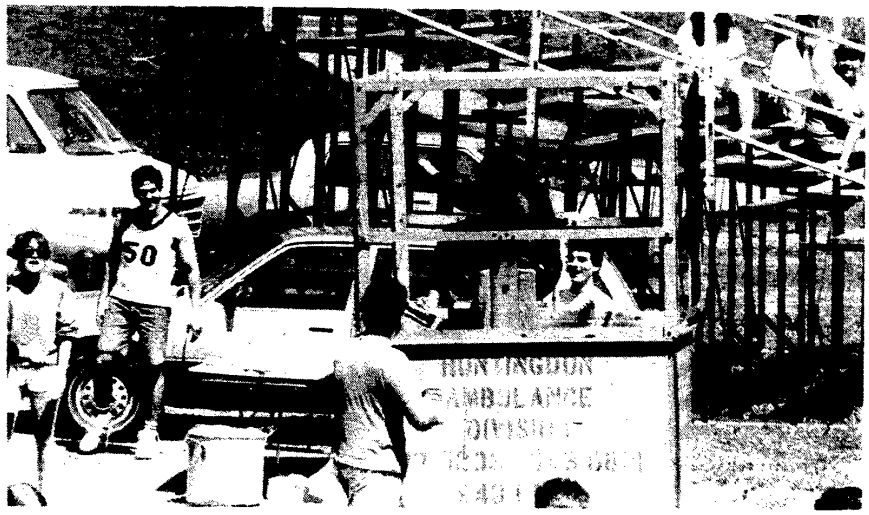
Scouts Raise Funds

8 cases of soda, 4 free pizzas, 2 lifetime and 2 one-year video memberships as well as 20 other prizes were raffled off on April 21, at the Scouting Serive Club's last meeting of the year. Prizes, reaching a composite value of over $300, were donated by activities and council dues, as the club is also a registered Explorer Post.

In other business, the Scouting Service Club elected its new officers. They are: Karen Morton, president, Mark Woomer, Vice-president, and John Yelenic, treasurer.

The club wishes to invite any student interested in becoming a member to attend its first meeting next fall.



Dr. Sue Esch is seen here climbing up out of the dunking booth after President Neff successfully knocked her into the water.

Freshman Beth Reese can still manage a smile as she leaves the scene of Friday's Mud Volleyball action.

Freshman Michelle Arndt, Karen Petrella, Maria Yurkovich, Cliff Hlaing, Bob Ialucci, and Jen Knabb are ready for Mud Volleyball. Apparently Jen already fell into a puddle.

Chris Frew returned a shot while on the road to the coveted Mud Volleyball Championship. Each member of the winning team received a T-shirt.

Jen Zollers energetically served a truly muddy volleyball. Mud volleyball kicked off the Spring Fling weekend activities.

Juniata Baseball – Eyeing MAC Title

Need To Beat Susquehanna

By Mike Antenucci

The Juniata Men's Baseball team has been chasing the MAC Northwest title for the last week and a half. While striving to reac their goal the Indians had to face Wilkes, YorK, Lebanon Valley and E!izabethtown.

The week started as the Indians increased their winning streak to six by sweeeping Wilkes. JC won the first game 6-1 and then took the second half of the twinbill in a closer game 8-6. This was an important contest for Juniata for it counted in the league standings.

Kurt Speiss proved to be the difference for the Indians in the first game, showing his stuff on the hill. Speiss could do nothing wrong through 4 1/2 innings before he gave up a base-on-balls. Speiss only gave up two hits the entire game, back to back singles, which were responsible for scoring the Colonels only run.

Daryle Dobos singled home the first run, while Dan Webb managed the game winner in the third. JC managed to score four more runs for the victory.

In game two the Indians took a quick 5-0 lead but managed to have it cut to 5-3 by the top of the fifth. George Zanic and Paul Hayduk pushed the Indians further ahead with RBI singles in the bottom of the fifth to move the lead to 8-5. Wilkes was only able to add one more run as the Indians managed the sweep.

JC then suffered a major set back as it saw its 8 game win streak go down the drain. LVC swept a doubleheader from the Indians, but fortunately for Juniata it was not a league game. At this point Juniata's record stood at 13-10 as their hopes for nationals slowly filtered into muddy run

The Dutchman handled Juniata in the first game 7-3. Vic Huber stood out for the Indians at the plate, blasting a 2 run homer in the top of the second.

In the second game things were a bit closer but JC still came up on the losing end 6-5. JC managed to take the lead 4-0 in the top of the third, all runs unearned. However, LVC came right back with 5 runs of their own in the bottom half of that same inning.

The Indians managed to score a run in the top of the 7th but fell short of victory again for the second time in one day. Vince Anselmo was credited with the loss in game two, Kirk Wenrich suffered the defeaat in game one.

The Indians, who destroyed York a day earlier, combing for 33 hits in 2 games, now face a crucial contest with Elizabethtown to decide on the conference championship. JC traveled their Monday of this week after the game had been rained out on Saturday (remember how hard it poured?). The results were not what the Indians had hoped for, dropping both games to E-Town.

Now JC had to beat Susquehanna twice this tuesday to assure a three way tie in the league.

Links Action

By Mike Antenucci

The Juniata Men's Golf team shot their best score of the season in a losing effort to Lock Haven this past week. The nippy air proved to favor Lock Haven with a total of 397 to the Indians 414 strokes.

The Indians continue to struggle in the MAC's with a 2-5 dual meet record. JC participated in the Middle Atlantic Conference Tournament this past weekend, results weren't available at the time of printing.

Jim Lacey of Lock Haven led all linksmen with a three-over par 73 at the Indians home course, Standing Stone. Rick Sharp was the closest Indian, just breaking 80, while teammates Jim Armstrong scored an 80, Mike Speaker 85, and Tim Garvin and Chris Thompson both carded an 86.

The scheduled tri-meet was canceled because St. Francis did not show. The Indians tee-off this past Tuesday at Dickinson College and end their season today when York comes to Standing stone at 1:00.

Senior Chris Williams is at the plate at a recent Home game for the Indians. JC needs to beat Susquehanna to assure a tie in their league.

.500 Week

The women's softball team continued their season with a week of .500 ball. Having split doubleheaders with York, Lebanon Valley and Dickinson, the team record now stands at 9-11 going into the last week of play.

Plagued with injuries, the team is carrying ten active players and has had to make severak lineup changes to cater to the remaining players.

Despite outfielders playing the infield and infielders playing the outfiels, the team has been able to adapt fairly well under the circumstances. The team batting average remains to be the problem.

In a loss against York, the girls had only one hit, but came back in the second with six hits led by Pam Lau with 3 hits and Amy Oiler with 2RBI'S Against Lebanon Valley the Women fell 6-7 despite nine hits. However, Emily Beach in her first time behind the plate caught a fine defensive game and contributed 2 hits and 3RBI's. In the nightcap, the Idians took advantage of eleven walks and three RBI's from Lau to beat L.V. 10-4.

In Carlisle on Saturday, the Indians came out strong in the first game with two hit performances by Lau, Andi Zavod and Oiler and a two run single by Sue Stump.

Leading 4-2 going into the seventh, Sr. pitcher Kathy Bednarczyk held on after giving up two singles int the inning to get the win.

The women finish the season facing Mt. Aloysius, Gettysburg and Wison College. The girls hope to finish strong to attain a season record above .500.

An Athletic Facilities Fundraising Committee, made up of individuals with a deep commitment to Juniata's athletic program, is established to begin the fundraising project. In addition to Knox, Klare S. Sunderland, president of Sun Motors Cars, Inc., Sunderland Chevrolet-Cadillac Inc. and Sun Enterprises, Inc., will serve as Chairman for the campaign which has already begun.

Fundraising plans call for $500,000 in gift funds prior to April 1, 1988, which would allow the College to begin construction of the stadium/track at that time. With construction begun by the Spring of 1988, it is anticipated the stadium would be in use for the football season that year.

Tennis Review

The women's tennis team played an impressive match this weekend with victories over Wilkes and Kings. The women beat Wilkes on Saturday 5-4. Winners for the team were singles Aimee Buckbee, Georgia Stanaitis, and Julie Thaler. Doubles teams Buckbee and Thaler, and Lara Mann and Susan London brought the women to victory.

On Sunday, the women beat Kings 6-3. Victories were gained from Buckbee, Lynda Cass and Thaler. Cass and Stanaitis played an aggressive doubles victory for their first win in the doubles. Buckbee and Thaler also won in doubles.

The team has had all around good consistent playing from the girls. The team however fell to Susquehanna on Monday in a close match of4-5.

The girls traveled to Messiah on Tuesday and finish their season with a road trip to York on May 4th. MAC's will be held May 1st at Gettysburg. Participants will be Mann and London in the singles division and The combination of Cass and Buckbee for doubles. Good luck girls!

Men's Record At 6-3

By Mike Antenucci

This past week Juniata man handled the netmen from St.Francis sweeping them 9-0 in Tennis action. The win moved the Indians impressive record up 6-3. JC played Gettysburg and at St. Francis again before they head into MAC compition.

Dan Corazzi easily handled his opcnent at first single winning 12 of the 13 games played. Rich Gottschall defeated Brian Vogel at second singles 6-1, 6-4. Other winners for the Indians were Jon Seckinger (6-0, 6-1) over Jim Sheilds, Chris Glover (6-0,6-2) over Chris Rebesamen, and Dave Acker (7-5,5-7,6-3) over Rob Wright.

In doubles play Corazzi and Seckinger Defeated Vogel and Sheilds 6-2,6-0. Yokoyama and Kearns and Gottschall and Glover also teamed in the doubles for Indian victories.

JC Honored by Gas Company

Juniata College, frequently recognized for being in the forefront of innovations in higher education, has been honored by the Consolidated Natural Gas Company Foundation by being selected a winner in the 1987 Award of Excellence in Education competition. The award carries with it $150,000 in grants.

The Award of Excellence, established in 1984, is presented each year to three colleges. Competition for the award is open to the 42 independent, liberal arts colleges in Consolidated Natural Gas Company's service area of western Pennsylvania, north and eastern Ohio and West Virginia. Other award winners in the 1987 competition were Davis & Elkins College and Baldwin-Wallace College.

The Award of Excellence in Education was created to recognize innovative approaches to contemporary educational challenges as well as achievement by well-established, proven programs within the competing institutions. The colleges selected as winners are encouraged to use the award money to continue their creative approaches to education.

Juniata College was recognized for its development of its Co-Curricular Transcript (CCT) which was initiated in 1982 to enhance the educational value of participation in activities outside of the college's formal curriculum.

Each year, participating Juniata students plan their extracurricular activities in much the same way academic courses are chosen. Together with faculty advisors, they determine the skills they would like to develop and which organizations would offer the best opportunity for that skill development. They also begin a co-curricular transcript file, which formally documents their activities.

"Juniata College has recognized that a large part of a student's education takes place outside the classroom," said Ray Ivey, CNG Foundation's Executive Director. "The CCT program helps to increase student awareness of the educational value of extracurricular activities. Students are encouraged to participate in activities and are then critiqued on their performance."

Juniata College President Robert C. Neff, in acknowledging the award said, "We are very pleased and honored that the Consolidated Natural Gas Foundation has recognized the education value of our co-curricular transcript program. Juniata College is constantly striving to Three new appointments have been made to the JC Admissions staff-(L to R) Terri L. Bollman, Scott Neff, and Jennifer A. Battle.

JC Awarded Grant for Computer Science Program

Juniata College has been awarded a National Science Foundation grant of nearly $38 thousand for the support of the college's computer science program. The grant to Juniata was one of only two grants to Pennsylvania colleges for the improvement of computer science programs.

The award, granted in accordance with the National Science Foundation College Science Instrumentation Program, is a cost-share grant, with Juniata College dedicated to raising at least half of the project cost.

The funded project will improve six upper level courses of Juniata's computer science program, and include the purchase of six networked work stations that are Unix based and feature high resolution graphics displays.

According to Dr. Dale L. Wampler, Director of the Academic Computer Center and Professor of Computer Science, the program upgrade will allow students to address more significant software projects in Operating Systems, Programming Languages and Compiler Construction. Students in Computer Graphics will be able to perform more sophisticated graphics modeling and access standard graphics libraries in their software projects. Students in the Computer Science Senior Research Courses will be able to have exclusive control at a workstation for unrestricted blocks of time.

In commenting on the value of the National Science Foundation grant to Juniata Dr. Wampler said, "Experience with Unix is becoming crucial because of its dominance as an operating system used in graduate programs. Furthermore, experience with Unix, C, high performance graphics workstations and networked systems is very advantageous to graduates entering professional computer science careers today. Soon such training may be absolutely essential in order to be competitive. This project, then, is designed to ensure that Juniata College's computer science students continue to be properly prepared for the world they enter after graduation."

Dr. Wampler estimates that 125 or more Juniata students will directly benefit by the National Science Foundation funded project over the next five years.

New Faces in Admissions

Three new appointments have been made to the Juniata College Admissions staff, according to Charles E. Kensinger, Director of that office. The three have been named admissions counselors and assumed responsibilities for those duties effective July 1, 1987.

Terri L. Bollman, a 1985 Juniata graduate with a degree in Elementary Education, brings a variety of skills and experience to her position. For more than three years she served in the Admissions Office as a student assistant, and has also been involved in tutoring and Home Child Care.

Jennifer A. Battle, presently working on her doctorate at the Pennsylvania State University, earned her Masters degree in Communication Arts from Cornell University and her Bachelor of Science degree from the State University of New York at Buffalo. She has served as a graduate teaching assistant in the Division of Curriculum and Instruction at the Pennsylvania State University, in Admissions Recruitment, and as Assistant Coordinator of Admissions in the College of Agriculture and Life Science at Cornell University.

C. Scott Neff earned his Bachelor of Arts degree from Juniata College in 1983 with a major in International Studies. He had a strong emphasis in foreign language, taking course work including German, French, Russian and Japanese. During the academic year of 1981-82 he participated in an exchange program and studied at Kansai Gaidai School of International Studies, Hirakata-shi, Osaka, Japan.

In addition, he has served in the Juniata College Admissions Office as tour guide, and held positions as a manager. He was named winner of the Victor Kamkin Russian Book Award for outstanding work in the Russian language and included in "Who's Who in American Colleges and Universities."

JC Receives Pew Grant

President Robert W. Neff has announced that Juniata College has been named a recipient of The Pew Charitable Trusts Challenge grant in the amount of $300 thousand, which is allocated from the funds of The Pew Memorial Trusts, to be used for programs of faculty/curricular development.

The grant, which will be issued in increments of $75 thousand over a period of four years, stipulates a three-to-one match from Juniata, with the College required to raise a total of $900 thousand over the next three years. In commenting on the proposal for faculty and curriculum

Juniata's campus is once again buzzing with student activity-classes, labs, meetings and practices. After the "long," carefree summer months, we as J.C. students are forced to focus on financial concerns. Somehow, from somewhere, the money came to pay for this semester. Now how will we pay for next semester or next year? Does anyone else contemplate the worth of a Juniata education? At the risk of sounding cynical, from under the pile of bills, I have been wondering.

I was drawn to an article in "The Chronicle" addressing the issue of the cost of higher education. Interestingly enough, their survey revealed a tendency for many Americans to think that colleges cost more than they actually do—guesstimatimg $13,400 for the $11,982 actual cost of private 4-year institutions. This survey of public opinion demonstrated a different attitude than held by Education Secretary William J. Bennett. He maintains, and I am inclined to agree, that greed and the availability of student aid (for the very few who receive it) is responsible for increase in tuition at a faster rate than the cost of living for each of the last seven years.

I must agree with the seven in ten Americans who believe that higher education is improving-or at least maintained. However, as a senior I am weighing the worth of a private education. As my almost non-existent financial aid has been decreasing since day 1 at J.C., I can only hope that my extremely expensive education will be worth the financial burdens.

Admissions

Dear Editor:

I just wanted to take a moment to thank the many students who assisted our Admissions office last year; specifically those who provided names of potential students. It was only one of many areas where the student population helped with our efforts, but it was an area that some people may take for granted.

In the coming months we will again ask the student body to think of high school juniors and seniors who may be interested in considering Juniata as part of their college search process. I hope that each of you will spend the couple of minutes it takes to fill out a student referral card and send it to our office.

Each year, many of our best referrals come from current students and alumni, the people who know Juniata best. I am hopeful that this year will be no different.

Good luck for a successful and exciting year on campus. On behalf of the Admissions office, "Welcome to Juniata."

Thanks,

To the Editor:

Case (Committee on Alcohol Study and Education) is back in action and looking forward to a good year.

Case is a group concerned with educating students about the dangers of alcohol abuse. Our motto is, "If you choose to drink, drink responsibly."

CASE is not a bunch of ax-wielding temperance fanatics trying to bring back Prohibition.

If you are interested in becoming a part of CASE, please look for signs announcing our next meeting and plan to attend.

Help continue the CASE tradition!

Library Advances

The computer age has hit the L.A. Beeghly Library in full force. Next time you go in to look up a book, don't be surprised if, instead of flipping through dozens of cards to find the book you want, you need only to sit down at a computer terminal and punch a few buttons.

Thanks to the Friends of the Library, Juniata College now houses the first full installation of the Biblio File Intelligence Computer System. When the system is fully installed, all books in the library will be entered by subject, title, and author, much like the card catalog most library goers are used to. What makes this system different from the card catalog, however, is that it uses artifical intelligence to find entries, compile lists, recommend authors, display maps, and many otehr things that could not be done with an ordinary card catalog.

Of course, this news may be a bit intimidating to anyone with a computer phobia, but they need not fear. The system is as simple, if not simpler to use than the old catalog. If, for example, someone wanted to look up a book aboout painters, he only has to press the "find anything" button and type in the word "painters." Then the computer will type up a list of books about painters that are available in the library. If he needed a book on American painters, he could enter "American painters," and the computer would produce a list of books about American painters. If, however, even this presents a problem, there is a set of headsets hooked up to computer that "speaks" to the user and gives instructions on how to use the system. And if all else fails, there is a "help" key that gives advice on what to do next.

It is sometimes hard to know what to do next becuse there are so many features available. Most would be too time consuming to do with the card catalog, but they are relatively easy to do with a computer. The user can choose the catalog that is most appropriate to his or her needs by choosing "author only," "titles only," "subject only," or any combination of the three. Another useful feature is the "get advice button." It can help you find subject matter related to what you have

J.C. Views Platoon

To the Editor:

On Friday, August 28, I went to see the movie Platoon in Oller Hall. Although I had already seen it, I wanted to go again because I thought it was a well-done movie. One that shows what makes war such a profound problem for mankind. Scenes such as the one in which Chris (the main character) loses his control because of his fear and frustration at the Vietnamese villager show what war does to even the most decent of people.

I was very disturbed when the whole audience started clapping when Chris shot and killed Barnes. I felt that by killing Barnes, Chris showed that the war had changed him, somehow making him fit the same cruel mold that shaped Barnes. When Barnes killed Alias, the audience rightly felt that Barnes had committed a most heinous crime. And yet, when Chris commits the exact same crime, the audience approved and even clapped. This is really a sad statement about our society: instead of feeling sorry for Chris for what he has become, we congratulate him. And by doing so, we miss the whole point of the movie.

By Alex Jones

"Rhythm? No-we don't have no black people around here."
-A JC Professor in class

That is not quite true, professor. Maybe there are no black students in our class, but there are negros on campus. Unfortunately, professor, a school tucked away in rural Pennsylvania is not able to attract a number of minorities proportional to those in the real world. Our beloved micrcosm, Juniata College, has few minorities, yet these minorities are deserving of every right that you have, professor: including the right not to be slandered as a genre or as an individual.

Professor, racism is not in-born. A child does not, at the age of two, three, or four, suddenly become aware of a color barrier that segregates him from other children.

Professor, racism is not self-taught. I do not say to myself, "My eyes are blue. Anyone with green eyes is inferior to me and I despise them."

Professor, racism is taught to us. Racism is taught to us by the acting and words of those in respectable places; taught both consciously and unconsciously, by some parents, some youth group leaders, some teachers...

I understand, professor, that you are a victim of the opinions of those who you respected as a child. I understand, professor, that as people grow older, they become more set in their ways, and their emotions and opinions become stronger and less apt to change. I hope, professor, that you can learn from a younger generation that the color of our skin no longer divides our country or our people.

I came to college for a liberal education; so please professor, don't try to teach me to hate.

Counselor's Corner

By Dr. Jay Buchanan

The transition from high school to college can be a trying experience for many students. Each year students move from the very prescriptive and structured environment of high school and living at home to the higher education arena where what one does is, in most cases, entirely the responsibility of the individual student. Parents are not there to insure that the student gets up and off to class, that homework is submitted on time, or that proper eating and sleeping habits are maintained.

The biggest problem that first year college students face comes under the general heading of time management. Studies show that the single most often stated reason by college freshmen for not achieving at least a "C" average during the first semester is improper use of time.

Most college students take four or five courses per semester. Students normally try to schedule three of these courses on a Monday-Wednesday-Friday basis, and the remaining two on a Tuesday-Thursday basis. With the exception of students who have afternoon labs, most students work very hard to schedule classes back to back so that class work is finished by noon each day. Considering that there are no Saturday classes, the result is that there is a good deal of "free time", and thus a real need to manage one's time as efficiently and as effectively as possible.

Parkinson's Law states that work will expand to meet the time available for its completion. For example, if one has three hours to complete an assignment, chances are the assignment will be accomplished in that time period. On the other hand, if one has all afternoon and evening to complete the same work, it will, in all probability, take that long to accomplish. Students fall prey to Parkinson's Law quite regularly. It is helpful to set a time table for completing homework and then work to meet that time table.

It is interesting to note that most student-athletes perform better academically the season in which they are actively participating in their sport. The reason for this is that they realize there is only so much time and that they must work effectively to manage their study and practice time.

The following are a few suggestions for managing time more wisely:

* Don't allow work to pile up. Utilize the principle of distributed practice and break larger assignments down into smaller, more manageable parts.
* Employ the two-to-one rule; that is, make an honest effort at studying two hours "outside" of class for every one hour "in" class.
* Be a list maker, and have a daily "to do" list. Tend to the more important tasks first and check off items when they are completed.
* Include some form of relaxation in your daily schedule. The rigors of college life will take their toll if exercizing and socializing with friends are not included on a regular basis.
* Reward yourself-do something nice for yourself after you have completed an assignment. Chances are that you will study more diligently and regularly if your study periods are followed by something good.

Proper management of time allows students to participate more fully in the total life of the college. Social, recreational, academic and cultural opportunities are greatly expanded when time is managed judiciously.

been looking up or it can make a list of novels that you might enjoy after you have rated your favorite authors, movies or topics. There is even a "locate on map" feature that when completed will display maps of the library and Huntingdon. It will even zoom up to the universe and back down to atoms and smaller. If you decide to try out this feature, be sure to put the headphones on because there are sound effects with certain maps.

More functions are available: a "browse topic" key which enables the user to scan books by choosing one of a list of topics; a notemaking feature, and of course, the printer will print out anything from the log of your time on the computer to the list of the books you wanted. There is little that it does not do.

Because it is the first of its kind, the Biblio File has generated much publicity. The computer was shown at a convention in San Francisco and has drawn more than fourty viewers from different worldwide organizations to the Juniata campus. An article about the Biblio File Intelligence Computer will appear in The Chronicle of Higher Education this fall.

To top it all off, the system was bought at a surprisingly reasonable price: about $2500.00. Although it was far from costly and is much more efficient than the card catalog, there is one drawback to the Biblio File system: it will not be completed for two more years. When it is finished, the computer will have every book in the library in its memory. By then maybe someone will have programmed a robot to find and deliver the book.

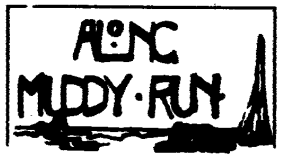
development at Juniata College, Dr. Neff said, "We believe this program to be so important for Juniata that we are committed to raising at least $1.25 million in endowment funds by the end of 1991 to sustain program operations thereafter. Support from The Pew Charitable Trusts over the next several years will enable the College to address vital needs now, while we work to build that special endowment."

The program outlined in the President"s proposal will be a new venture for Juniata College. For many years the College has supported a classic sabbatical leave program for faculty and had a very modest budget to help faculty attend professional conferences. Now in conjunction with the sabbaticals, according to Dr. Neff, this program will be a truly systemic effort to build a program linking professional growth of faculty to on-going curricular development.

"The more successful we are, the more Juniata will experience cumulative institutional strengthening, and the better will be the undergraduate experience," Dr. Neff said.

Read The Juniatian Each Week!



By Patricia Kazmerski

Hello. My name is Patricia "Trish" Kazmerski, and I am a first year student at Juniata. In other words, I am a freshman. (oh no, yuck, "Geex, She"s a freshman!!!) I consider myself pretty up to date chic, but I seriously never knew that "Freshman" was one of those eight dirty words, used by the comedian George Karlin, which the radio and television broadcasting companies have banned and have deemed anti-social and profane. Well anyhow folks, I can't change that fact, but I can bring all you "mature" (ha) upperclassmen back to the time you were freshmen. (It really hasn't been that long.) I've been told that this article has traditionally been written by an upperclassmen. Well tough, it is mine now and I'm going to keep it. This article and my next few may seem a tad innocent and tame to all you upperclassmen, but don't worry, by October this article will have so much sarcasm and humor it will make the entire campus sick (with laughter). For now please be patient as I tell what I, walking Along Muddy Run, have found to be true during my first two weeks on the Juniata campus.

First of all, can someone please explain how come during the "Open House" in March, which incidentally was my first time on campus, and during my summer orientation the cafeteria food was scrumptious, and the weather was absolutely gorgeous? After my campus visit, I went home announcing that Juniata is the college for me. Besides its high quality education, it had nutritious food which was also tasty, and it had beautiful surrounding scenery--majestic mountains, clean rivers and lakes, and BLUE skies. I also said the weather was marvelous. Well guys, guess what. It has rained at least once a day since I've been here. The temperature changes quicker than President Reagan's staff members and as for the scenery, all I can see as I look out my second floor Lesher window is 17 screaming pre-schoolers at 7:00 in the morning.

As for the food, well let's just say that I memorized Pizza Hut's phone number before my Residence Hall's number. I'm not saying the food is bad, well not that bad, but the variety leave something to be desired. Last week I ate seven different kinds of chicken. There was chicken croquets, chicken wings, chicken quarters, chicken soup, chicken stew, chicken with rice, chicken with noodles and chicken patties, pardon me, it was eight kinds of chicken. Come Saturday night, I wasn't surprised to find I had sprouted feathers around my neck. I know the cafeteria workers work hard to make us all eat well (did I just say that?), but come on guys, let the Colonel have some fun, remember, "He does chicken right!"

Lastly, will someone please tell me what the "official" Juniata student wears on campus. I proposed this question to a Sophomore guy from my hometown (B.N.-that's you), and he told me that it doesn't matter- "Some people dress up, some people dress down." I said ok and went out to buy some "preppy" clothes, which, by the way I adore, and some casuals consisting of sweatshirts, sweatpants, and the such. Weel ever since Monday, August 24, the entire campus has dressed against me. Come on guys, quit coordinating your wardrobes without me. I don't know hou you all are doing it, but even my roommate Betsy is in on it. The day I dress up, everyone is in sweatpants, the day I wear sweatpants, everyone is sporting penny loafers and alligators. I can't figure it out. I heard Cyndi Lauper is synonymous with the plague on campus, so maybe I'll just jam the radio station's transmitter and play "Girls Just Want to Have Fun" 24 hours a day for the next seven months in order to get even.

Well, that is all I have to say for this issue. Remember:"Keep your eyes open and your nose clean or you might find yourself knee deep Along Muddy Run.

Chandler's wobble

The earth shifts unsteadily on its axis. This deviation, known as Chandler's wobble, reaches its peak every seventh year. Some scientists believe earthquakes are more numerous in those years. The last peak year was 1985.

Big winners

The all-time top money-making movie is 1982's "E.T., The Extra-Terrestrial" earning $227,960,804. The second big winner is the 1977 film "Star Wars," which brought in $193,500,000. "Return of the Jedi," made in 1983, collected $168,002,414 for third place and 1980's "The Empire Strikes Back" is fourth with $141,600,000. "Jaws," made in 1975, is number five with $129,961,081.

STEVE LECRONE: Juniata's Dedicated RD

Steve LeCrone can commonly be seen working with the Juniata faculty and admissions, playing rugby or archery, leading a Centerboard, Coffeehouse or residence hall meeting or singing in the college band. Adding to the list of activities, Steve has received the title of Residence Director of Sherwood Hall.

Being a Business/Psychology major, Steve is planning on continuing his education and acheiving his masters in higher education. Because "Croney" loves the college atmosphere, he hopes to get a job in the field of Student Services and perhaps be a Dean someday. Steve would love to collect all that he has learned at Juniata and carry it to another college and to aid that school to be as successful as Juniata.

Steve is very excited about being the R.D. at Sherwood. He has a lot of plans in store for the guys in the upcoming year. His one major goal is "to make Sherwood more of a home than just a male dorm." He wants to promote friendship and unity among all.

Croney is from York, Pennsylvania, and he is the youngest of eight children. Steve loves to spend his free time, the little that he has, relaxing with the many friends he has made at Juniata. Even throughout the summer, Steve was devoted to Juniata by being an assistant to the Director of Conferences, which he thoroughly enjoyed.

The admissions, faculty and students of Juniata can all benefit in someway to the contributions of Stephan LeCrone. So, the next time you see "Croney" why not stop to thank him for his Juniata College dedication.

Lecture Series on Constitution to Begin

A series of six lectures featuring topics relating to the Constitution of the United States or constitutional issues will be presented at Juniata College during a period extending from Tuesday, September 8 to Tuesday, December 1,1987. All lectures will be held in Alumni Hall on the Juniata campus and will begin at 8:15 p.m., with the exception of the first lecture, which will begin at 7:30 p.m. The public is cordially invited to attend free of charge.

The lecture series, made possible with support from the Pennsylvania Humanities Council, and celebrating the Bicentennial of the Constitution of the United States, will begin the evening of September 8 with a presentation by Professor D. Grier Stephenson, Jr., of Franklin and Marshall College who will speak on the subject, "Church, State and the Constitution."

Dr. Stephenson, Professor of Political Science at Franklin and Marshall, earned his A.B. degree from Davidson College and his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Princeton University.
